HOME BEAUTY.

"Mine be a cot," for the hours of day,
Of the kind that is built by Mrs Greenaway,
Where the swallow may hear and the roses may feed,
And the birds are gay in the blue overhead,
And the dear little figures in frocks and frills
Go roaming about all their own sweet wills,
And play with the pups, and pursue the calves,
And do things right in the world—but work by halves,
From "Paint the Lodges" and "Faith—no Pry"
To watching the cat in the apple-tree.

O Lord of the Household! Mammy mate
Of their ways—"makings" and Refrigerator
They may soar on their wings of sense, and float
To the seas of ease and the dog-cart day,
Till the last sun sinks in the last fat wood,
'Tis the Art of the Poet that I still prize the best;
To the end of Time 'twill be—still the same,
For the Earth first touched when the children came.

—Aristilla Dobson in Harper's Young People.

The Record.

From the Detroit Free Press.

The New York Tribune, responding to the Democratic "cant about corruption," appeals to the "record" and says: "The plain people take note of the fact that most of the officials do not run away or get suddenly rich. Two United States treasurers, after handling untold millions, have retired poor; not a single secretary of the treasury or postmaster general in twenty years has left office with more evidence of wealth than he had when he entered it."

Whereupon the New York World produces the "record," as follows:

Who was secretary of the treasury before Mr. Folger?

William Windom, of Minnesota.

Mr. Windom went to Washington a poor man. When he came out of the treasury he was a millionaire. He built himself a mansion in Washington fit for the residence of a Vanderbilt. No one knew where his sudden wealth came from. But it came. He was a prominent candidate for the republican nomination for the presidency, and was voted for through more than thirty ballots. He went to Minnesota for an indorsement, and asked to be re-elected to the United States senate. The "plain people" had "taken note of the fact" that "Billy Windom," who had lived in a small house on a limited income at home, had grown into a millionaire at Washington. They circulated a little epigraph of the Windom palace at Washington. The ex-secretary of the treasury was repudiated by his constituents. Then he came to New York and embarked in a scheme to establish a new stock exchange, which was a failure. This is one republican secretary's record.

Who was secretary of the treasury before William Windom?

John Sherman.

The name is enough. Entering Washington life literally without a dollar, John Sherman retired from the United States treasury six times a millionaire. Yet the petty larcenies of the fraudulent president's administration persecuted the treasury department under John Sherman as thoroughly as they could if it had been presided over by a rowdy man. This is the record of another secretary of the treasury.

Who before John Sherman?

Benjamin H. Bristow.

Here indeed was an honest secretary. But how did he leave? The republican administration, finding that besides being honest himself he was determined to make other public officials honest and to unravel and expose the thieves, whether in a whisky distillery or the white house, kicked him out. The republican politicians punished and killed him for daring to stop stealing. Politically, Benjamin H. Bristow is dead and buried.

Then the postmasters general.

Was not Mr. Cresswell postmaster general? He certainly enriched himself while in office and came out with a very gratifying addition to his worldly means.

There was a postmaster [illegible] that he made it pay handsomely.

Then there was postmaster general Brady? Practically he was postmaster general. Key was a mere figurehead. Certainly he ruled the department. Everybody bowed to his authority. Does the "tribune man to say that Brady came out of the post-office a pauper? As [illegible] went into it? How then did he obtain money enough to buy three republican papers in Washington to be run in the interest of the republican administration and the star route defense? Where did he get the $250,000 or $300,000 to pay his share of the expenses of the trial?

But why does our esteemed contemporary confine its tribute to the honesty of secretaries of the treasury and postmasters general? Why not include other cabinet officers? May not the slighted secretaries consider that the Tribune, by indirection and omission, is "mud-slinging" at them?

W. W. Belknap, of Iowa, for instance, was secretary of war. Why overlook him? Did he not develop the resources of post traderships and deeply interest the public in those profitable assignments? Was there not some processing representing an embezzlement to the point and there [illegible]

George M. Robeson, of New Jersey, also. Was he not secretary of the navy? Why should he be ignored by the Tribune? The purchasers of worthless government vessels and hosts of patriotic, enriched contractors will rise up indignantly against the slight.

The Tribune should be more careful and not make recklessly absurd statements.

John Bright on Protection and Labor.

The following extract from a recent speech of John Bright gives his opinion of the effect of free trade on the British workingmen.

It is a very interesting fact, that wherever a system of protection prevails it is defended by the same arguments and by the same misstatements. I will not give them a shorter word, though it would not be inapplicable. In our time, these very gentlemen who were opposed to us told the people that if we allowed the untaxed corn of foreign countries to come here, our people would be thrown out of employment, land would go to waste, and the laborer would be worse paid than he was before. They are no agencies people. I suppose they have looked on maps, but they have never read anything of the history of the countries to which they refer, because I have never found in history a map where a people lived who had not to be taxed. It is the universal happy, in some cases unhappy, condition of all people, but now in the United States the very same argument is used. The protection party in the United States say to the people, what will become of you if you allow the manufactures produced by the pauper labor of England to come into the United States? What will become of your labor, and what will become of your wages? And so they say exactly what our country gentlemen said forty years ago, only talking of pauper labor instead of untaxed labor. But our pauper labor, I think, has for the most part vanished, and if wages have doubled during the last forty years, and everything upon which wages are expended is reduced, what can be more monstrous than to speak of the pauper labor of England? Perhaps, though I am speaking here in this vast assembly of my own countrymen, I may be permitted to address a word to the working artizan class of the United States of America. I am not an enemy of the United States. I have fought her battles in this country when for a time I was not sure that the contest would not go against her. I have as much sympathy with the United States now as I had then, and as much, I think, almost as if I had been born upon her soil. I will say this to the workingmen and artizans of the United States: that centuries of legislation in this country have not done so much, conferred so great benefits upon the labor of England, as have been conferred by that great statesman of forty years ago, Sir Robert Peel, and by Mr. Gladstone, the great minister of to-day.

Work and Wages.

The high tariffites never grow tired of assuring the workingmen that the high taxes placed upon many of the necessaries of life are mainly for their benefit they proclaimed this loudly just prior to the election of 1880, again in 1882, and they put forth the same plea in order to capture their votes in 1884, all the time asserting that the object of the high tax policy is to protect them from the pauper labor of Europe and to insure high wages.

It is evident, however, that the workingmen are [illegible]

[illegible] Points as to the truthfulness of this claim, and it is not at all unnatural that they should express their doubts, as they did in the labor congress at Cleveland a few weeks since, at a time when food, rent, fuel, clothing, groceries, etc., are about as high as they ever have been, and wages are lower. "They begin to realize, first, they do not get any of the [illegible] accruing from economy by the tariff laws, and this is one of the most hopeful indications that the era of licensed spoliation is almost at an end.

Protection is having its legitimate effect upon the business of the country. Manufacturers find themselves with stocks on hand which they cannot dispose of, as the home market is supplied and they are excluded from foreign markets by the tariff restrictions upon trade, and hence they are compelled to diminish production and put down wages where they do not cease entirely and furnish labor no employment.

For a large share of this depression of business the protective tariff policy is the cause. It places limitations and restrictions upon trade, and by confining our manufactures to a single market restrains production, and is therefore the worst enemy in the form of legislation of the workingmen.

A protective tariff [illegible] more per cent cause of low wages and no wages than it is of high wages and permanent wages. Experience, the dearest and surest of all teachers, is demonstrating this to be true. [Ex.

How Protection Protects.

It was a cruel thing which a cigarmaker did at a meeting called in the interests of protection at Brooklyn. He was the last of several speakers, all of whom had advocated high tariff as a means of sustaining wages, and he was heartless enough to say that no trade was so well protected as that of the cigarmakers, while the bricklayers had no protection at all; yet cigarmakers in Brooklyn got but $7 a week, and the unprotected bricklayer earns $4 per day. This was such a striking and unanswerable illustration of the effect of protection on wages, that the managers of the meeting could not well be otherwise than disgusted. Yet the cigarmaker was right, and he might have carried his illustration still further. It can be shown that just in proportion as industries are protected are wages low, and labor degraded all through the list. Tariff does nothing which its advocates claim for it except to enhance the price of the necessaries of life to the poor. It does not sustain wages; it does not diversify industry; it does not increase the wealth of the country; it does not promote enterprise; it in fact, does the very opposite of all these things. [Evening News.

The Place for Prohibitionists.

Prohibitionists will remember that a few weeks since we asserted that the place for them was in the prohibition party, that the pretensions made by the republican party for their suffrages on the claim of being "moral" was but such a scheme as satan devises. Our contemporary was "shocked" at our baldness, and thought we had evil designs on the prohibitionists, and argued that we were trying to make democratic votes, reiterated its statement that the temperance vote should be with the republican party. But the proceedings of the last few days will probably change the Advertiser's tune. The republican conference in Detroit decided that in the future they would leave the question to "the churches and prohibition fanatics."—[Cass Jeffersonian.

Must Not Count their Chickens Too Soon.

If the republicans are wise they will not regard as absolutely certain that Ohio and Illinois, or even that Michigan and Wisconsin will give their votes to the republican nominees in 1884. It is just possible that these states, or two or three of them, will go the other way. The democrats certainly will not claim any of these states before the election is over. But if the republicans undertake to fight the next national campaign on the sectional issue it will be possible for the democratic party not only to carry these four states, but also to pick up one or two of the others now placed in the "republican column." [Buffalo Courier.

Give the Mechanic a Chance.

The Ovid Register comments as follows upon a statement of the St. Johns Republican that the wool growers of Clinton county are out $15,000 by the reduction of the duty on wool:

Then protection makes wool dear and keeps it dear. If Clinton county wool growers are out that amount, then Clinton county clothing wearers are so much ahead. But protectionists have always argued that competition [illegible] cheap; that had to be argued to gain the vote of the mechanic. Why should the Republican mourn now that the mechanic is promised clothing for less money?

No Morality unless with Votes.

The republican office-holders' convention at Detroit decided to deserve with all kinds of morality not accompanied with votes. In other words, the temperance question having become burdensome and heavy, they will discard it. Morality must seek a new market, and for the first time since the war the churches will have to pray for something else besides the republican party, as the leaders of that party are to try a scheme to obtain power into which religion and temperance do not enter. CHARLEVOIX, MICHIGAN.

SALUTATORY.

Well, here at last is the first number of the much talked-of democratic newspaper. How do you like it?

CHAS. J. STRANG.

Notes and News.

If anyone fails to discover the policy and purpose of this paper by this first issue, let them come and interview the editor.

The Ohio republicans approve the submission of a constitutional amendment prohibiting the liquor traffic. So did the Michigan republicans last year.

The platform of the Ohio republicans demands a tariff for the protection of American producers. How about the consumers? Don't they have rights worth considering?

New Hampshire is still balloting for U. S. senator. This contest, like the one in our own state, will cost the republican party many votes, if it does not lose to them the entire state.

The Burlington Hawkeye says the republicans "have their little closet spectre," which is "not amused by differences on the proper policy to pursue, but a quarrel growing out of general differences."

Apollo commandery K. T., of Chicago, 115 strong, have started on a pilgrimage to Europe. At London they will be tendered a reception, after which they will visit the continent in small parties, as inclination dictates.

Protection is the right thing. Yes, indeed. We want protection but it is wanted by the consumers against the cursising monopolies and rings. This is the kind of protection that the democrats propose to give the country.—[Chippewa Democrat.

From time to time various state papers contain mutterings of dissatisfaction with certain decisions of the supreme court, plainly indicating that the time is not distant when some new and younger blood will be infused in to that august body.

The recent action in regard to the trade dollar is an excellent greenback argument. It goes far to prove that it is not the "value" of a piece of money that gives it circulation, but the pledge of the government that it is receivable for all debts and dues.

The Manistee Democrat was sold on a mortgage July 5th, and on [illegible] Frankfort Express, has been engaged as business manager, at a salary of $1,500, and it is expected he will build up the paper and make it successful.

It having been charged that architect Hill was paid $8,000 for locating a government building on the property of Senator Tabor, of Denver, Colo., the Detroit Free Press suggests that it might be well to investigate the peremptory selection of a site in Detroit unworthy so fine a building.

Secretary Teller has decided that lands now closed to settlement to enable the Northern Pacific R. R. Co. to make selections shall be opened in three months from service of notice on the company, and that where contests arise in the selection, settlers shall have an equal right with the company.

John W. McGrath, of Detroit, has been appointed Deputy Labor statistics, with office at Lansing. Representative Devlin has been appointed deputy. The duty of the "bureau" is to collect and present in annual reports to the governor statistical details relating to all the departments of labor in the State.

If the republican leaders desire to make a protective tariff law that will help the American laborer, let them put a prohibitory tariff on pauper immigration. Then, and only then, will a protective policy benefit all classes alike. While the manufactured goods are taxed, almost without limit, the paupers themselves are brought here by hundreds and thousands to compete with us on our own soil.

S. W. Dorsey, ex-secretary of the republican national committee, has written a letter in reply to a request for records of the expenditures and transactions of that committee, in which he says he has no records to give, none were delivered to him by his predecessors, and none were kept by himself in condition to be transferred to his successor; a "bonfire of forged fullness was built to eat up" what they had a right to assume was "the evidence of honesty at the end of each campaign."

The statistics of the charity organizations of New York and Brooklyn show that 250,000 persons in those cities receive charitable assistance. In London, with a population more than twice as great, there are only 100,000 such persons. If free trade is responsible for the pauperism of London like this in the highest tribunal in the land, that the most earnest opponent of the republican party would prefer the loss of such capital as the proof of the transaction brings to the shame of it. For, while the responsibility falls upon the republican party and its leaders, the shame of a disgraced and corrupted court fall, in a measure, upon the whole people.

Dorsey's statement, of course, is not final. But coming as it does from one of the leading participants in the nefarious transactions whereof the sale of a seat on the bench was but a part, it has all the weight of a confession. If it is to be met, it must be met at once, and with the most convincing refutation. Failing this, Stanley Matthews owes it to his associates on the supreme bench, to his party, and above all to the people, to step down and out. There can be no confidence in the administration of justice when the stream is polluted at its source.—[Free Press.

Do a Little Good Missionary Work and Do it Now.

There is a wide-spread and well founded belief that the democrats are going to carry Michigan in 1884. This is a very pleasurable feeling, but it will not be realized without thorough organization and earnest labor by every democrat. It is not that democrats vote, they must work, and to work successfully they must be interested. There are many democrats in this county who do not vote, and many who do not take their home paper. Continual defeats have discouraged them, and they take no interest in politics. Let our workers in every neighborhood see to it that such persons at least take their county paper. The republican party owes much of its success to its party papers. In this work every democrat can do good by seeing that his neighbor, particularly if he is a democrat, takes some democratic newspaper, and keeps posted on the live issues of the day.—[Michigan Democrat.

In some respects this will apply to Charlevoix county. In THE JOURNAL the democrats will have a paper which will aim at all times to keep them informed on the political affairs of the county and state, and if a little effort is made by every man interested, it can be thoroughly circulated and of great value to the party in the county.

Dorsey's Disclosures.

The crushed worm turns. So does Dorsey, though he is not by any means a crushed worm. He is simply a worm which the administration has pretended to try to crush. But the material fact is, that he turns. The long, threatened disclosures are begun and the republican leaders are beginning to hunt their holes.

Thus far Dorsey has disclosed nothing which has not been fully anticipated or guessed at. The worst charge he brings is the charge that Stanley Matthews was brought into the supreme court for $150,000; and this has been so long suspected that there will be no surprise. There will, however, be deep regret; for even among those whose suspicion was strongest there has always been a faint hope that it might prove unfounded. There is something so bitterly degrading in the fact of corruption like this in the highest tribunal in the land, that the most earnest opponent of the republican party would prefer the loss of such capital as the proof of the transaction brings to the shame of it. For, while the responsibility falls upon the republican party and its leaders, the shame of a disgraced and corrupted court fall, in a measure, upon the whole people.

Dorsey's statement, of course, is not final. But coming as it does from one of the leading participants in the nefarious transactions whereof the sale of a seat on the bench was but a part, it has all the weight of a confession. If it is to be met, it must be met at once, and with the most convincing refutation. Failing this, Stanley Matthews owes it to his associates on the supreme bench, to his party, and above all to the people, to step down and out. "JETSAM."

BY SAMUEL W. DUFFIELD.

When days are darkest and I am most sick,
When sun and wind are sweet,
The little ripples dart and fly
And gladden all my feet,
And ships far off go sailing by
In some white-winged fleet.

My heart is light; I laugh and sing
As by myself I go;
My thoughts, like gulls on lazy wing,
Move gayly to and fro,
I lack not them for anything
Which nature can bestow.

But if, against that dimmed verge
Which joins the sky and sea
Some huge, dark head begins to urge
The waters wrathfully,
They sweep, in swiftly rising surge,
Through my clients.

And yet no gateway to the sand
The little kid will come;
To-day you will be wise and I mad,
If ye watch me perished home
And weed and shell hang up to bind,
Will meet me—as I roam.

O soul of mine! then art a sea
By whomso love to-day—
A broken wicked eternity
To hit me when I play.
Why should I shun the agony
Which gives me joy to-day?

If ought of mine, then hide it well
The secrets of the beast,
Lest know ye ever or shell
The distant and the best,
I bless the hide whose pulse-veil
That utter storm is rest.

THE WRECKER'S DAUGHTER.

BY M. CROSBIE FARLEY.

"You hear that, do you, madam?" asked the old coast guard in a low tone, as the fitful sound stole over the rolling water. "It is an omen of evil, and we must heed it, we must return at once."

"Pshaw!" I exclaimed, carelessly. "How superstitious you coast people are. I would not miss this sunset for anything. It is only the simple tolling of a bell somewhere near us that you hear."

The old man glanced uneasily off over the glittering waves. Far away, small clouds began to pile themselves up in a long black line against the horizon, and a flock of gulls, that had been idly floating in the air, now went circling and wheeling and screaming over the broad expanse of troubled sea around us.

"For sixty years, madam," he retorted, with a sort of nervous determination, "I've lived on this coast, and I know by this time that, when the toll of that bell is heard, there is sure to be trouble on the sea."

"Nonsense!" said I, laughing heartily, "I'll risk it if you will."

He shook his head.

"No, no. God forbid it!" he said, turning the boat about and making for the shore. "Terrible things have happened here, and if there was not a cloud in sight nor the ghost of a sigh in the breeze, yet if that bell tolled I should make for a safe mooring. It means trouble, storm and shipwreck."

And the obstinate old man shook his grizzled head in a

She went about doing good. Emulating the example of her mother, before she left the crowded city and went into the byways and forgotten places.

In this manner, quite unknown to Wolfgang, the maiden unconsciously made her way to St. Quentyn's.

The landet then, as now, was but a collection of fishermen's huts and a few still ruder people. None knew her to be the daughter of their terrible chief, and she labored among them, teaching them and otherwise endeavoring to alleviate the distress she saw on every side. Wolfgang himself, with some of his most valued followers, was away on a journey, when his daughter came to St. Quentyn's. So there was none to oppose her in her work for the salvation of souls. It was at this time that she caused the bell to be rung in the old monastery; the bell which, since the fatal tragedy enacted there a little later, has never ceased to send out its solemn warning whenever there is to be any severe storm upon the sea.

It is near there, high upon that rocky headland, in the very shadow of the ruined monastery—a ruin almost as great then as now, that the heaven fires were lighted by the wreckers to entice the ships upon the sunken rocks.

The Lady Christabel saw with horror what the real occupation of the people was, by the frantic hurrying too and fro, the many anxious eyes turned seaward, and above all the low and hurried words which inadvertantly escaped their lips whenever a ship's sails showed themselves in sight.

To turn them from the wickedness of their ways, she strove with mind and soul; but it was with a sick heart that she discovered the useless wreckers acknowledged a superior authority in the commands of their ferocious chief, a being to [illegible] and dreaded.

There came, at this time, one of those sudden, unaccountable hurricanes, which, sweeping the sea, hurl ships upon it with the nothingness in the twinkling of an eye.

She saw preparations going on on the shore that looked no good for any vessel left afloat by the storm, and she determined that so far as lay in her power she would succor the helpless. Night settled sullenly over the troubled waters. The wreckers began to more quickly to and fro on the beach, and, earlier than all, there pealed out over the sea the sound of the minute gun—the signal of a ship in distress.

Once, twice, thrice, the thunderous gun sent its message upon the air. From her small retreat the Lady Christabel peered dimly over the broad expanse of shore, and saw the glancing torches of the wreckers as they engaged in council on the beach.

"Light up the beacon fires," paused a strangely-familiar voice, in the commanding tone of one accustomed to authority. "Light the great fire on St. Quentyn's Point."

The girl shook as if with an ague fit. "It cannot—cannot be," she cried with white lips.

A moment her wife stood staring out through the darkness, every muscle strained to its utmost tension with the excitement of the moment.

"It is alone," she laughed, clasping her hands tightly together. "Look, my lady, how beautifully they are burning."

Christabel shook her arm roughly.

"For the love of God, woman," she exclaimed, in a voice of agony, "go you among those wretched men, and tell them I forbid it. It is murder they are trying to do."

The wrecker's wife cowered before the blazing eyes of the girl.

"I dare not," she said, "it would avail nothing, for they have higher orders than yours."

"Oh, pitying heaven!" cried Christabel, "this will we go, and scatter the burning brands ourselves? Away, away, there is no time to lose in idle words."

"I cannot, I cannot!"

Christabel threw hastily a long black wrap about her figure, and seized a wooden vessel used among the humble people, for carrying water. "But I command you," she cried, "hear me, woman, the daughter of Wolfgang, must be obeyed."

The woman shuddered.

"But I must not go, my life would be the forfeit. Do you not know, my Lady, that it is the great Wolfgang himself, who orders the lighting of the beacon fires. To extinguish them, is to be guilty of treason."

At the mention of her father's name, the girl sank, as if she had been struck to the heart.

"There is but one Wolfgang, woman," she said, in a hollow voice. "It cannot be Wendert Wolfgang—my father."

The wrecker's wife bowed low before her.

"He is our chief, my Lady," she said simply. Then, suddenly, with a bound will, she sank upon her knees.

"But my tongue hath lost me my head, my Lady," she wept. "I have told the chief's secret, and my children will be motherless if you betray me to your father. Have pity—oh, have mercy upon me."

But Christabel did not heed her. She sat motionless—a dumb, frozen horror seeming to chain her to her seat, nearly, and the fame of her goodness went through the land.

The stern old robber chief, hearing the laudations lavished upon his child, grew still more proud and fond of her, and guarded from her knowledge with seldom care the secret of his dreadful occupation.

And she worshiped him. Seeing her father only at long intervals, and encouraged by him in the dispensation of her charities, enjoying his society only when he was in the best and gentlest moods, the Lady Christabel grew to womanhood [illegible]

The young girl shook the woman's hand from her garment, and her beautiful blue eyes shone with an unearthly luster, and her white face gleamed like a star from the masses of yellow hair that floated about her shoulders.

"I go to the sacrifice," she breathed, in an almost inaudible tone. "Oh, God, my mother in heaven, be thou my guide and my stay!"

A minute later and she had stepped over the threshold, and disappeared in the fast-increasing darkness.

Hastily making her way to St. Quentyn's Point, she reached that place just in time to see the figures ignited by the torches of the wreckers. The men only stopped long enough to see that it would burn, and then went on their way to execute some further order of their chief.

Wolfgang himself was now upon the beach, doling out liquor to his chosen followers, and watching with a fiendish eye the long, lance-like tongues of flame that now began to leap up in the direction of the old tower.

"Pile on more fuel, my men," he cried, as another roar from the ship's cannon announced a signal of distress. "Pile up those faggots higher. Oh, but it is a brave light those sailors shall have to go to bed by!" he shouted, as the flames sent a fierce glare upon their recklessness of human life, and a sickening horror crept over the girl.

"But I must not go, my life would be the forfeit. Do you not know, my Lady, that it is the great Wolfgang himself, who orders the lighting of the beacon fires. To extinguish them, is to be guilty of treason."

A ROLLING-MILL.—A rough-and-tumble fight.

WHEN a dumb photographer wants to say "Yes" to a customer he merely displays two negatives.

CARPENTERS who refashion old dry goods boxes should be called "circumstances," because they alter cases.

IN a museum in New York a woman spends most of her time in an aquarium under water. When it is considered that she cannot, of course, talk while submerged, her sad lot in life will draw a fear of sympathy from every female eye in America.

IT is said that Boston mothers are endeavoring to imitate some Chinese women by reducing the size of their daughter's feet to a reasonable circumference. What a blessing it will be to the boys who have occasion to dance with them, as it were.

LAWYER—"You say you made an examination of the premises. What did you find?" Witness—"Oh, nothing of consequence: a beggarly account of empty boxes, as Shaksspeare says." DURING the last days of the last Congress a Western member of the House, vindicating himself on the floor, struck a Henry Clay attitude, and cried with all the fervor of original conviction: "Sir, I'd rather be right than be President." "Don't worry yourself about that," shouted another member across the aisle; "you'll never be either."

"THERE is something about your daughter," Mr. Waughop said reflectively—"there's something about your daughter—" "Yes," said Mr. Thistlepod, "there is; I noticed it myself. It comes usually every night at 9 o'clock, and it don't get any nearer by till about 11 o'clock. And some of these evenings I am going to lift it all the way from the front parlor to the side gate and see what there is in it."

CRUSHED.

Full tender burned the light of love down from his eyes,
Like noon-tide's golden glow,
As he pressed her to his bosom in a fervent, fond embrace,
No cost of other's happiness count place within his thoughts;
The weakness of his little thread no dim foreboding caught.

But tenderer than the light of love, more brittle than life's thread,
The slender bud wrapped tenderer hearts each

Fell, crushed and dead.

BEFORE AND AFTER.

"Did I step on your train?"
"Nay, dearer, no matter:
My pet brown mane
Did I step on the train?"
You mistake, Mr. Pla in.
An excuse, sir; to flatter?
Did I step on your train?"
"Nay, my dearest; what matter?"

"Well, dearest, needs matter!"
"You fiend! you clown!
Your fool's on my gown"—

"Your fool's on my gown!"
"Well, what else I meant?"

It was in a Latin class, and a dull boy was wrestling with the sentence, "Ex fugit," which, with a painful slowness of comprehension, he rendered "The king flees." "But in what other tense can the verb 'fugit' be found?" said the teacher. "In the perfect," said the dull one, and a final answer of "Perfect," owing to a whispered prompting. "And how would you translate it then?" "Dun-no." "Why, put a 'has' in it." Again the tardy emphasis drawled out "The king has flees."—Waterbury American.

SONNET UNTO A BAREFOOT BOY.

The barefoot boy! I mark him at his play—
For May is queen supreme, and queen she is to be—
His dusty trousers, rolled in f t to the knee,
His tattered shirt-sleeves, dirty, too, as they Cross-hatchings of the nettle in array
Of reverish stripes, that writhe and sting to me
Of weedy pathways winding endlessly
Along the creek where even yesterday
He plodged [illegible] and [illegible]
[illegible]

Yet called the water "warm," with never lack
Of joy. And so, half-guiltily I look
Upon the graceless barefoot and his track—
Upon the shadowy face, his tow-and-flaxen back
Like unto Ice clasp of an old pocket-book.

An Ex-Broker.

An ex-broker, of this city, who removed to a town in Indiana, received a call from a local pastor with a view of having him join the church.

"I take it that you are a professed Christian?" queried the pastor.

"Well, no," was the reply.

"Indeed? What business have you followed in life?"

"I have been a broker."

"Ah! I see," said the clergyman, as he reached for his cat.

"But they cleaned me out of every dollar I had!" protested the broker.

"Oh, they did, eh? Well, that makes a difference, of course!" was the reply, as the good man resumed his seat to continue the conversation.—Wall Street News.

Cures of Dr. Ing.

The smallest pests are numerous and annoying; some are dangerous to human life. Earth and air teem with insects, and therefore the Isthmian forest is a very paradise for an enthusiastic entomologist. The corridor, or chasing-ground, has already been mentioned. Then there is the well-known chigoe commonly called the jigger, which insinuates itself under the toe-nail and propagates so rapidly that if it be neglected the insect will in short time preempt your foot entirely. The chigoe must be detected and suppressed at once if you wish to avoid permanent trouble. The Bolsena fly, too, attacks both man and beast and forms a subcutaneous nest, and there lays an egg. He is so neat in his operations that he has an egg under your skin before you know it. The first indication of its presence is a slight swelling, which rapidly increases to the size of a walnut. In this will be found, contained in a sac, a large worm, which must be squeezed out when it reaches maturity, an operation attended with a good deal of pain. Then comes the scorpion that breeds in the rafters of the lightly-thatched native huts, and drops down on you in the night. He is fond of the blankets. Or he will crawl into the toe of your boot and wait for you till morning. One has to be "on guard" night and day in Darien against these insects and woe be to you if you retire without first examining the bedclothes, or put on your boots in the morning without a previous vigorous shaking. The centipede is a constant foe to the scorpion. Then follows the cocoana, the cornadillo, garranetas, tarantula and a black ant with a sting in his tail which, although not "as long as a shad," makes it warm for anyone to whom he may pay attention. We had some near forgetting the vampire bat, which was supposed at one time to be a hero in traveler's fiction. He is not a fiction by any means, in the wilds of Darien, but a most unpleasant reality. Vampires are numerous, large, and very troublesome. As the fired traveler lies in the slumber of midnight these miseries of evil come silently to his couch, gently make an incision in any exposed part of the body, and then commence to gorge themselves with blood. No pain is felt, and with their large feathery wings they fan the sleeper into a state of delightful repose; but when the vampire has left his victim to the terrors of all out-of-doors. Now, it is an easy matter to cure remedied; but it is put off day to day, and the rattling is daily going on. The best fastener for closing sashes is common cork. NO HOME EXPERT.

The Source of Those Mysterious Troubles that Come to Every Household Unplumbed.

The following article from the Democrat and Chronicle, of Rochester, N. Y., is of so striking a nature and emanates from so reliable a source, that it is herewith republished entire. In addition to the valuable matter it contains, it will be found exceedingly interesting:

To the Editor of the Democrat and Chronicle:

SIR: My motives for the publication of the most unusual sanitary remedy which follows, are, first, gratitude for the fact that I have been saved from a most horrible death, and, second, a desire to warn all who read this statement against some of the most deceptive incidences by which they have ever been surrounded. It is a fact that to day thousands of people are within a foot of the grave and they do not know it. To tell how I was caught away from just this peril on and to warn others against nearing it, are my objects in this communication.

On the 1st day of June, 1881, I lay at my residence in this city surrounded by my friends and waiting for death. Heaven only knows the agony I then endured, for words can never describe it. And yet, if a few years previous, any one had told me that I was to be brought so low, and by so terrible a disease, I should have scouted with the idea. I had always been uncommonly strong and healthy, had regained over 20[illegible] pounds and hardly knew, in my own experience, what pain or sickness were. Very many people who will read this statement realize at times that they are unusually tired and cannot rest for it. They feel dull and lifeless, have pains in various parts of the body and do not understand it. If they are exceedingly hungry one day and entirely without appetite the next. This was just the way I felt when the relentless malady which had fastened itself upon me first began. Still I thought it was a thing that probably I had taken a cold which would soon pass away. Shortly after this I noticed a heavy [illegible] at times a neuralgic pain in my head, but as it would come one day and be gone the next, I paid but little attention to it. However, my stomach was out of order and my food often failed to digest, causing at times great inconvenience. Yet I had no idea, even in a physician, that these things meant anything serious or that a massive disease was becoming fixed upon me. Gradually, I thought I was suffering from malaria, and so doctored myself accordingly. But I got no better. I noticed a peculiar color and odor about the fluids I was passing—also that there were large quantities one day and very little the next, and that for a [illegible] month I was constantly passing [illegible] of my urine. Still I did not realize the fearful [illegible] which I was [illegible] to myself. Then there is the well-known chigoe commonly called the jigger, which insinuates itself under the toe-nail and propagates so rapidly that if it be neglected the insect will in short time preempt your foot entirely. WHY the public preference is, and should be, given to Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Because the superior strength of medicines is determined by the skill and care of the chemists and druggists employed to compound them, and by the skill and care used in securing the active principles of the remedies employed. In these particulars Hood's Sarsaparilla has no superior.

Because Hood's Sarsaparilla has in connection with known and vertified remedies, eradicated Scrofula in thousands of cases of Humors, and restored wasted invalids to health, by which evidence it proves its merits.

Because Hood's Sarsaparilla has really and truly cured cases of Dyspepsia, Liver disease and chronic, of Indigestion, of Catarrh, of Rheumatism, of Kidney Complaints, and all diseases which rest in impure blood, as thousands of voluntary letters certify.

Because Hood's Sarsaparilla is everybody's medicine. No one is too poor to procure one bottle or 6 bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla. 100 Doses One Dollar. Every druggist sells it, and we defy you to buy a better medicine.

Another Life Saved.

J. T. Bray, of Centreville, Ala., writes us:

"I have been using your Dr. Wm. Hall's Balsam for the Lungs, and I can say, as a truth, it is far superior to any other lung preparation in the world. My mother was confined to her bed four weeks with a cough, and had every attention by several physicians as there are in the country, and they all failed to effect a cure; but as soon as I got one bottle of your Dr. Wm. Hall's Balsam for the Lungs she began to mend right away. I can say, in truth, that it was the means of saving her life. I know of no cases that Dr. Wm. Hall's Balsam has cured, and my mother as before now than she has been before for twenty years."

News Brevities.

Under this head we would like a news letter from every township in the county.

Boyne City has a cigar factory in operation.

Dogs recently interviewed C. Moylew's flock of sheep, killing two.

Boyne City and Advance were without mails the first week of the current quarter.

The township of South Arm has purchased a $800 fire and burglar proof safe.

Farmers report crops as looking favorable. The hay crop will largely exceed that of previous years.

Sporting men from the outside are daily finding their way to the Jordan, where the fishing is said to be excellent.

A laughable feature of the Boyne City celebration was walking a greased pole suspended over the water. Of course the unsuccessful adventurers got wet.

During the gale at Beaver Island on the 8th, the schooners Six Brothers, W. A. Smith, and H. E. Fisher, and a large three-master, dragged their anchors, the latter over a mile; and at High Island one fish boat was beached, besides damage to buildings, nets, etc.

The fourth was patriotically observed by the citizens of Boyne City. H. A. Jersey was the orator for the occasion, and his remarks were heartily applauded. Races and games were freely indulged in, and decided without "argument," as is sometimes the case in small towns.

The fourth was celebrated at Beaver Island by a boat race, for which there were fifteen entries. The prizes were a hunting case watch, a boat compass, an alarm clock, and a piece [illegible] won [illegible] first, John Shadahesse of High Island second, another High Island Indian third, and James Gordon fourth. A dance at the O'Malley house and fireworks on the point were the attractions of the evening.

Giving Away a Republican State.

When the heat of fanatical enthusiasm with which the prohibitionists carried their point in the Iowa republican convention has cooled, when its members come to move around among the voters, and begin their Sunday-school and blue ribbon campaign, they are likely to realize that they have made no ordinary blunder in coupling protection with prohibition in their platform. If there is any state in the union which has a strong and well-organized body of independent thinkers, who believe in free trade principles, that state is Iowa. No other state was more largely and influentially represented at the Detroit conference. There are many free trade clubs throughout the state. And yet in a purely state election the managers of the party have been guilty of the colossal folly of making an issue on a point of national policy probably contrary to the views of a large majority of the party. A year ago any man would have been laughed at who spoke of the possibility of Iowa's going democratic this year. To-day such a thing is more than possible. It is probable. The Germans and low tariff republicans have been driven from the party without its gaining a single accession from any direction. [Chicago Herald.

What do they Mean?

What do the Iowa republicans mean by "such revenue laws as will encourage American industries and protect American labor in order that the American workingman shall have a fair day's wages for a fair day's labor?" It sounds well, but what does it mean? What kind of "revenue laws" are they which work this result? We have some revenue laws now of republican framing and the precedence has always been that they "encourage American industries" and "protect American labor." But under their operation one of the most expensive of American industries, the iron business, is very far from being encouraged. It is, in fact, hopelessly discouraged; while American labor is clamoring all over the land that it is not protected, and does not get a fair day's wages for a fair day's labor.

Are these the revenue laws which the Iowa republicans demand in their platform? Or have they some ideal laws in their minds which are to succeed where the existing laws have so hopelessly failed? They ought to explain themselves. [Det. Free Press.

What is Still to Be Known.

The query of the Chicago Tribune, "What can the democrats tell the people about the star route business that is not already known?" The New York World thus answers:

A great deal! By a searching investigation they can discover the real position held by both the Garfield and Arthur administrations toward the so-called prosecution of the star route cases. They can show why Bliss and Brewster were drawn into the prosecution by MacVeagh. They can unearth the tricks by which the trials were needlessly protracted and the extent to which the government was plundered by the expenses of the prosecution. They can make clear the amount stolen by star route thievery. They can find out the secrets of "settlements" engineered by the prosecuting attorneys with some of the star route rascals, and why some rich men's names were left out of the indictments.

The Republicans on the Wrong Side.

The Free Press gave a very humorous account of the recent meeting held in Detroit by the leaders of the republican party in a joint effort to concert measures to resuscitate their worn-out machine and give it a new lease of power. It is very natural that these gentlemen should strive to retain power, forgetting, apparently, that a great mass of their party adherents have lost faith in their machine leaders, and do not intend to replace them [illegible] The old war cries don't lead the masses any longer, and these leaders are all on the wrong side on the tariff, railroad monopolies, centralization of power in the federal government, and every economic question of the day. The workingmen of the country have been saddled with the burdens of government long enough, and will now insist that all shall share alike. [Marshall Expounder.

Reasonable for the Republicans.

The republican council of war, which was held in Detroit last week, came to the conclusion that the salvation of the party depended upon the enforcement of ultra protection principles. This was eminently proper and appropriate. That organization has for fifteen years been subsidizing capitalists and monopolists out of the hard earnings of labor, and it would be unreasonable and inconsistent to forsake the monopoly cause at this late day.—[Lansing Journal.

Political Notes.

The Philadelphia papers scold the Philadelphians for trading in New York, and those benighted citizens continue to trade in New York because they can get goods cheaper there. Let Philadelphia put a protective tariff upon all goods brought from New York.—[Free Press.

If the state of Ohio should go democratic this fall, as at present there are indications, it would be very discouraging to the republicans. If it was to go republican, the democrats could afford to stand it with their usual christian fortitude. It is a republican state, having elected republican governors, with two exceptions, for twenty eight years.—[Charlotte Leader.

Judge Forraker, republican candidate for governor of Ohio, says that "the republican party has acted upon the idea that American labor ought to be protected," and that "the wisdom of this policy of the republican party is attested by the unexampled prosperity all the time it has been in power." Does Judge Forraker recall the period from 1874 to 1878 as one of unexampled prosperity," or was the republican party out of power during that period.—[Free Press.

The statistics of the charity organizations of New York and Brooklyn show that 250,000 persons in those cities receive charitable assistance. In London, with a population more than twice as great, there are only 100,000 such persons. If free trade is responsible for the pauperism of London, as the protectionists assert and from time immemorial have asserted, then the five-fold poverty of New York, the greatest manufacturing city in the United States, must be due to protection.—[Free Press.

The next time a protectionist says that protected manufacturers make goods as cheap in this country as they are made abroad, ask him why Mr. Robert Porter took pains to report, and protection papers take pains to repeat the following remark from a British manufacturer:" We can make goods cheaper than you can; and, give us half a chance we will beat you out of your home markets!" That is to say, protection makes every nine men in Michigan pay a premium on everything they buy for the enrichment of the tenth man. Let revenue reformers put by and make use of this frank admission of the protectionists.—[Free Press.

The platform of the Ohio democracy does not suit the protectionists or their organs. They find it contradictory in that it demands a tariff so as to prevent unequal burdens. One of the organs criticising it says:

"A tariff for revenue must of necessity ignore everything but revenue. It must be its purpose and its sole purpose, to produce revenue."

Yet it does not seem to occur to this critical protectionist that this criticism bears just as hardly upon the republican platform, which he commends, as upon the democratic platform he disapproves. The republican platform says,

"We declare in the high words of our fathers [illegible] a tariff for revenue must of necessity ignore everything but revenue," the republican demand for protection in a tariff for revenue is a gross absurdity; and the upholders of the republican platform are in no position to criticise the democratic platform.

The New York Sun prophesies as follows: There is every reason to expect the election of Judge Hoadley as Governor of Ohio by a sufficient majority. When John Sherman refused to become a candidate, and took the chair of the republican convention to prevent his own nomination, he substantially gave up the contest and confessed defeat.

The German-Americans, who holds the balance of power between the two parties, and gave the long control in the state, have cut loose from that party entirely, and transferred their votes to the other side. Besides, this defection is not confined to Ohio. It exists in most of the western states, and extends largely in the east.

All the present signs justify the opinion that the elections this fall will reaffirm those of last year, though without a tidal wave to give sweeping majorities. The people will repeat calmly their verdict of intense resentment in 1882 against the outrages of the republican party.—[Charlotte Leader.

"SHE LOVED ME FOR MYSELF."

BY L. A. FALL.

Amidst the roses, but my dear wife stands,
Herself the fairest, sweetest flower of all;
I think, as from her side she slowly wanders,
She lets the honey-petaled blossoms fall.

Amidst the roses while the daylight pales,
Our home-stairs golden in the setting sun;
And then at one unwonted porch she never fails
To give me welcome when the day is done.

And when I meet her happy, joyful eyes,
I know it cannot be through sordid pelf
That I love more in life's most precious prize—
She loved and took me for myself!

Amidst the roses, but my darling stands!
Herself the sweetest, fairest flower of all;
I think, as from her side I slowly wander,
She lets the honey-petaled blossoms fall.

Dorsey's Dynamite.

The New York Sun recently published a long article purporting to be Stephen W. Dorsey's account of the manner in which Gen. Garfield secured his nomination and election. While we have no desire to bring odium on the fair name of the dead, it is necessary to show up the methods and practices by the aid of which the highest officers of trust in this republic are bargained and sold for cash as so much merchandise. We have room for but a few extracts from the Sun article:

"At the conference facts and figures were presented as coldly and frequently as a bargain for the sale of a railroad. Garfield was told that he must appoint a secretary of the treasury, a New York man, prominently identified with the government faction. Garfield promised to appoint Levi P. Morton, but this was a trifle compared with that which followed. It is asserted that another memorandum was drawn up, and that the candidate for president of the republican party agreed that the operation of refunding government fives and sixes, which must soon take place should be given to such a syndicate of New York bankers as should be designated by the stalwarts and at such commission as should be fair. The stalwarts had for a price been won, all but Mr. Conkling, who cursed not to have part nor share in it.

"Then followed the Indiana campaign, in which $432,000 was spent, and this carried the election, but this was not enough. More money must be raised, and the republicans remembered the star route contractors. Jay Hubbell told Brady that they must subscribe at least $80,000, and that he must collect the money. He consented, and it was done. This was what led to the 'My dear Hubbell' letter.

"Another remarkable event in the canvass of 1880 was Mr. Gould's subscription. When asked if he would contribute to the republican fund he replied: I can have no interest in an administration, at the head of which is a man who denounced me as corrupt and compared me with Catiline as the corrupter of youth of Rome. Gould, however, said that he had no political party interests, but all his interests lay in certain great corporations which were threatened by a recent act of congress, known as the Thurman act, an act whose constitutionality was to be passed upon by the supreme court. Garfield promised to appoint the right kind of a man, whereupon Mr. Gould subscribed $150,000. This money was taken to Cleveland and there divided. Part was used in Indiana and part in Ohio."

"Dorsey had presented to the republican managers, including Garfield, his views respecting the canvass. In his thinking these were two—Ohio and New York. One was [illegible] the other was the co-operation of the New York stalwarts. The two were linked. Dorsey said that no money could be raised without the co-operation of the New York men, and on the other hand, with that co-operation, combined with certain honeyed inducements, any amount could be raised. Dorsey from the first urged the necessity of making the battle in Indiana in October. * * * Garfield did not know how the money was to be raised. Dorsey did, and he told Garfield that he must meet the New York politicians. He told that when he met these men there must be no political diplomacy about it. The meeting must be a practical business meeting. There must be no generalities, no vague suggests, but positive pledged assurances. He told him that the New York politicians were ready to give, but that they were business men, and would expect to receive. It must be a quid pro quo meeting, and there must be no trifling. Besides the New York men could not be basely persuaded. Garfield held off for a long while from a face to face meeting, and at length suggested that he would meet certain influential New York stalwarts in Mentor. Dorsey told him in the plainest terms that he must come to New York that the New Yorkers would not run after him, and that he must come to them. So Garfield at last consented. The Fifth Avenue hotel conference was arranged. Conkling had promised to be present, but he was the only one of those who were expected to take part in the conference who kept away. Why he did so will appear later.

"The great republican party had come to this at last. It had nominated a credit mobilier man for president, and its candidate to win was obliged to meet with the representative of a powerful faction and dicker and bargain with them for the price of their support. Dorsey had told Garfield that this (Fifth Avenue hotel) conference would be a climax of the canvass, if it was successful. Dorsey promised no success in November if it failed. Dorsey said that they might as well close their committee rooms and let the campaign go by default. Time was pressing. It wanted but a few weeks to the great preliminary contest in Indiana. Garfield had been greatly impressed by Dorsey's earnestness, and when he met the representatives of the great stalwart faction in the Fifth Avenue parlors it was noticed that the smiling hail fellow well met manner was absent. He was most serious and seemed to be thoroughly in earnest. He made a plain, seemingly perfectly frank statement to the grim politicians in front of him, who had his fate in their hands. He acknowledged as much to them. He said, as he had said before to Dorsey, that New York had a right to expect the largest recognition at his hands; that it was his earnest desire to shape his course so that all differences in the party would be reconciled and that no one could expect that he would for a moment entertain any idea but that of learning what the wishes of the friends in New York were, and if they were consistent with what was fair he would give his hearty assent to them. But generalities were not indulged in very long. Facts and figures were presented as coldly and as free from hints as a bargain for the sale of a railroad. They told him first that it was expected that he would agree to appoint as secretary of the treasury a New York man, prominently identified with the part of that party the favored the nomination of Grant. He said that the demand was not only not unreasonable, but entirely proper. * * * He cool and determined self-possession with which the candidate's secretary was the co-operation of the New York stalwarts. The two were linked. Dorsey said that no money could be raised without the co-operation of the New York men, and on the other hand, with that co-operation, combined with certain honeyed inducements, any amount could be raised. THE Third Assistant Postmaster General has issued a circular to Postmasters throughout the United States, in which he says that the reduction of postage to 2 cents on drop letters domestic mail matter will go into effect on Oct. 1. He instructs Postmasters to limit their requisitions of current stamps and stamped envelopes to the actual needs of their offices, so as not to have a stock of unused stamps on hand. He calls attention to the fact that the head of Washington has been adopted for the new 2 cent stamp and the head of Jackson, similar to that on the present 2 cent stamp, has been adopted for the new 1 cent stamp. The price of both the 2 cent and 1 cent stamped envelopes will remain the same as on the existing schedule for the sizes and qualities. He directs attention to the fact that no arrangements have been made for the exchange of 2 cent stamps for 1 cent stamped envelopes in the hands of Postmasters or private parties. The old 2 and 3 cent stamps and stamped envelopes will be valid after Oct. 1, and must be received in payment of postage. The new 2 cent stamps will be issued in August, 1883, and stamped envelopes on the 1st of September, but they are not to be sold previous to Oct. 1. There are no other changes in the rates of postage.

ADDITIONAL NEWS.

THE members of the Brotherhood of Telegraphers employed by the various lines struck with remarkable unanimity shortly before noon on Thursday, July 6. The cause of the strike was a refusal of the Western Union and other companies to accede to the demand of the operators for an advancement and readjustment of salaries. The operators' desks from Maine to Florida were abandoned promptly at 12 o'clock from the Lake drive Canada line of the Pacific coast, the men walked away in a body, and cabinets were closed. In large cities the places of the regular operators were at once filled, either by operators not in the employ of the companies, or by men from the operating rooms of private telegraph companies, or by men who had been engaged in anticipation of the strike. The Postal service was the most fully crippled on the line of the Western Union Company, being entirely cut off from communication with New York. The press was unaffected with its usual quantity of news, though the commercial world entered most strongly on the inability to secure its telegraphic service with the full amount of business and quotations. In New York 5,000 operators went out on the strike, in Chicago 750 and in other cities the number was proportionately large. The strike is the most extensive that has ever occurred in this country, and because its members dislike to combine such as religious subjects, is astonishing that Americans, and one which throws much light on human nature. Asiatic and English paralleled. In no other free country would such a show of power be now be seen patiently by the aggrieved parties, or tolerated by public opinion.

The Parnell Party Gaining Ground.

Now that we have a full account of the election in County Monaghan, which resulted in the return of Mr. Healy to Parliament, we can more clearly see that the incident upon the prospects of the Parnell party in the next house of Commons. In this county where according to tradition and precedent the agitation against England should be met with little encouragement, the Home Rule candidate can obtain a majority of nearly a thousand votes against a Liberal Conservative and liberal compromise, notwithstanding the powerful influence of the Liberal friends from controlling about the three-quarters of the Irish delegation in Parliament at the next general election. In view of such occurrences in the strength of the advanced Irish movement, such as that in Monaghan, it is not to be wondered at that the Liberal party in the House of Commons, confirms the reports telegraphed some weeks ago, and fears out any opinions then expressed, that England would not rest quietly under the measures offered by the representative of France in Madagascar.

Madagascar, it should be remembered is the third largest island in the large basin of the world, and has an area five times as large as that of Illinois. It has for many years been the unreasonable among the European powers that the active authority in Madagascar be limited, and that equal commercial privileges be extended to all, but for many years France has enjoyed every effort to extend her authority, and within the last few months has carried out on open hostilities. With all the lessons from the Tonquin war in mind, the death of the famous dwarf was very sudden, and the French feel free from hesitation in being left alone to settle matters in her own behalf to fail. Twelve-Year Cholera Periods.

That most dreadful of human scourges, the cholera, is again making its way westward, and it will in all probability reach our shores by the summer of 1883, if not sooner. Some interesting fact regarding the periodicity of this pestilence have recently been published by a writer in the London Food and Tobacco, who has evidently given the subject considerable attention. A correspondent writes to him, saying: "I notice that the cholera is now raging in Egypt. By the way, did it ever occur to you that the cholera epidemics at exact intervals of seventeen years, viz.: 1832, 1849, 1866, 1883? The correspondent adds, however, it is pointed out, the seventeen cholera epidemics of 1751 and the milder one of 1768. The cholera period, it has been proved, does not exactly seventeen years, but twelve years starting with the great epidemic of 1781, then followed the twelve yearly returns of 1793-1805-1817-1829-1832, appeared again every twelve years in Asia, and three times twelve, or thirty-six years afterward, came the terrible Indian epidemic of 1817. In twice twelve years from 1817 the cholera broke out again in 1849. In 1865, twice twelve years from 1841, the epidemic again broke out in Europe, and reached America in the next year.

Four years here given are those upon which the plague usually made its appearance in its native home, but the years upon which it reached America, or the European plague has only one year, sometimes three or four, its complete circuit of the globe. The question is often asked: "Shall the cholera come to America?" It has never been stopped, or checked yet.

British and French Rebuffs.

The statement as to the complications in Madagascar made by Mr Gladstone in the House of Commons, confirms the reports telegraphed some weeks ago, and bears out any opinions then expressed, that England would not rest quietly under the measures offered by the representative of France in Madagascar.

Madagascar, it should be remembered is the third largest island in the large basin of the world, and has an area five times as large as that of Illinois. It has for many years been the unreasonable among the European powers that the active authority in Madagascar be limited, and that equal commercial privileges be extended to all, but for many years France has enjoyed every effort to extend her authority, and within the last few months has carried out on open hostilities. With all the lessons from the Tonquin war in mind, the death of the famous dwarf was very sudden, and the French feel free from hesitation in being left alone to settle matters in her own behalf to fail. Going to his room, he was found dead on the floor dead. He was buried in Bridgeport, Ct. where in large concourse attended the funeral ceremonies.

A Oshkosh paper said a man used up in the garden his wife's wedding ring which had been for twenty-one years. This was the first thing that caused former farmer to remember. THE PRESIDENCY.

A New York Journal Sweeps the Political Horizon.

The Candidates Who Are Most Popular with the People.

The New York Times publishes a very comprehensive forecast of the Presidential campaign. It covers seven and a half pages of that paper, and pros and all sandes at length. Early in June the Times sent letters to over 100 points in the thirty-eight States, asking answers to the following questions:

1. Who is most frequently spoken of by Republicans in your vicinity as their first choice for Presidential candidate in 1884?

2. Who is next frequently mentioned by Democrats in your neighborhood as their first choice for Presidential candidate in 1884?

3. What other names are mentioned, in about what order as indicating their popularity?

The Times says that answers have been received from 351 of these points, the number varying from forty-four in New York to one in Wyoming, or an average of nine from each State. The list may have been made to obtain the opinions of the two classes—rank and file—who are the choice of the workers of political machinery. The information has been gathered by trustworthy men in both parties, whose business obliges them to keep themselves informed on political matters, and their reports show that they have made a special canvass in order to present the drift of opinion. That they have done so is shown by the fact that at the same time in many instances the Times was not in receipt of any communication from the parties. The result as given may be trusted, therefore, as necessarily outlining the present desires of the masters of the two great parties.

The attention of the Republican party is now directed toward the following Presidential candidates, forty-one in number:

Arthur, Chester Alan, New York.
Allison, Iowa.
Blaine, James G., New York.
Blaine, Maine.
Bayard, Delaware.
Beck, Kentucky.
Bayard, Thomas F., Delaware.
Colquitt, Alfred H., Georgia.
Cullom, Illinois.
Davis, David, Illinois.
Edmunds, Vermont.
Evarts, New York.
Frelinghuysen, N. J.
Grant, New York.
Gresham, Walter Q., Indiana.
Hale, Maine.
Hendricks, Indiana.
Harrison, Indiana.

Of these eighteen are mentioned in earnest by the Democratic party as the first choice of the Republicans. Mr Blaine, however, is heard of somewhere in front of the others, being named as the first choice of the Republicans in the largest number of points where a choice is expressed. Next from his own State he has most favor in the Middle and Western States, nearly all the great Republican States, and his strength is probably greater than that of any other man. In many instances a preference is expressed for others in the event of Mr. Blaine's declining the race.

President Arthur is next in strength, and his friends are very active in his behalf throughout the country, and the favorable feeling toward him is almost everywhere noticeable. Independents in the South the office-holders are noted as at present the strongest friends of Arthur in the letters from the South that a large majority of the votes cast in favor of that part of the country will be cast in the Republican convention for Chester A. Arthur. There is no reasonable doubt to be entertained at present that the 30 votes of the Southern slave-holding States will go solid in the present inconsistent of the Presidential chair. Next to Arthur in the number of mentions stand four old-time favorites.

Judge Davis, of Illinois, is Mr. Edmunds, and much behind Mr. Arthur. His strength also is very evenly distributed in the different States, and he is not a favorite, being perhaps more than many others one apparent who would be nominated if he should be his merits. He is stronger, indeed, as a second choice than as a first, and in the event of the failure of Mr. Blaine to receive the votes of 22 of the 38 States, Judge Davis is the favorite.—Blaine 986, Arthur 61, Edmunds 58.

Robert T. Lincoln stands precominently among the new candidates. Gen. Grant, John Sherman and Gen. Logan complete the list of those who are mentioned in everywhere kindly spoken of, and his ability and honored name quite thus regarded as a good man for the place. The possibility of his re-election is surely left out of the question.

The following of all the gentlemen after Blaine, Arthur, Davis and Edmunds are mentioned with expressions of complimentary value by the applicants.

The number of aspirants for the Democratic nomination is forty, and their names, with their residences, are as follows:

Bayard, Delaware.
Beck, Kentucky.
Bayard, Thomas, Delaware.
Brown, Georgia.
Butler, Massachusetts.
Caffrey, Louisiana.
Carlisle, Kentucky.
Cox, New York.
Davis, David, Illinois.
Davis, Jefferson, Mississippi.
Eagleton, Indiana.
Field, Alexander, Virginia.
Flower, New York.
Fowler, New York.
Gorman, Maryland.
Hendricks, Indiana.
Hewitt, New York.
Hoadley, Ohio.
Hoban, Indiana.
Hubbard, Connecticut.
Hunton, Virginia.

Kelly, New York.
McClellan, New Jersey.
McDonald, Indiana.
Morrison, Illinois.
Pendleton, Ohio.
Randall, Pennsylvania.
Ryan, Ohio.
Seymour, Connecticut.
Slocum, Indiana.
Stevenson, Kentucky.
Thurman, Ohio.
Tilden, New York.
Turpie, Indiana.
Voorhees, Indiana.
Vance, North Carolina.
Wallace, Pennsylvania.
Ward, New York.
Whitney, New York.
Williams, Wisconsin.
Youngers, Indiana.
Yardley, Pennsylvania.
Young, Missouri.

Thirteen of these stand forth as claimants of first choice. Samuel J. Tilden leads his party in more instances than any other man by reason of his strength in Republican feeling. Two-fifths of the Democratic delegates in the next Democratic convention will be pledged to Tilden. Bayard and Thurman. He makes a very strong showing as second choice. Up exactly he is looked upon as the next best man to Tilden.

Gen. Hancock is mentioned in nineteen points, and apparently a hopeless one judging from the talk of his admirers. With an air of them his candidacy seems to be a tempered sentiment, a quadrennial sacrifice to the Democratic consistency.

The aggressive Butler comes next. Massachusetts sentiment for and against him as the first choice of the Republicans. Mr Butler, however, is heard of somewhere in front of the others, being named as the first choice of the Republicans in the largest number of points where a choice is expressed. Next from his own State he has most favor in the Middle and Western States, nearly all the great Republican States, and his strength is probably greater than that of any other man. In many instances a preference is expressed for others in the event of Mr. Blaine's declining the race.

President Arthur is next in strength, and his friends are very active in his behalf throughout the country, and the favorable feeling toward him is almost everywhere noticeable. CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

Notes and News.

There is still no choice for senator in New Hampshire.

The great strike of telegraph operators still continues, with no signs of immediate settlement.

The republican party now points with pride to the record made three years ago. For further particulars see Dorsey's letter. [Charlotte Leader.

As a rule it is your protectionist who believes in high wages on paper and low ones in cash. It is hardly surprising, therefore, to see the Chicago Inter Ocean, the most bigoted protection organ in the country, and the worst twaddler about high wages of them all, sneering at the telegraph operators' demand for more pay, and insisting that they are, if anything, pampered menials of a benevolent corporation. [Free Press.

The New York Sun of Monday came out with what is said to be an expose of Dorsey's budget, which makes very grave charges against the republican managers of the campaign of three years ago. It is not however written over Dorsey's name, and should perhaps as yet be taken with a grain of allowance. As Dorsey was a party to the detestable republican methods of that year, too much confidence should not be given it even though endorsed by him. Even if the story is all true, we believe it is not half told. And it is just as well. The people act and believe as they please. Democrats will generally choose to believe it. republicans will strike the same old attitude, and with eyes lifted toward heaven, point with pride to the record of the grand old party that saved the nation. [Charlotte Leader.

Legislation cannot create value, nor can it determine the rate of wages. The source of wealth in this country is in the soil, and can only be utilized by the application of labor and capital. The application should be in such manner that both will be rewarded, and at an equal rate. The capital must not be tied down for the exclusive benefit of the laborer, neither must the laborer the masses be taxed for the exclusive benefit of the capital. Either would be bordering on class legislation, which is destructive of any commonwealth. Commerce should be kept as free as possible, that all classes may be placed on the same footing, with no favorites or pets. The protective system in its very name and nature is a scheme to enrich the few at the expense of the many, and the true inwardness of the system is kept hid from the view of the laborers and farmers, upon whom the burden falls most heavily. It is the intention to keep them ignorant of the truth in the matter, and they are told that were it not for the protective tariff, laborers would be reduced to paupers, and farmers would find no market for their produce. The people must investigate this question for themselves, and when they understand the injustice of the so-called protective system, they must rise in their majesty and shake off these shackles that are making the farmers of this great land slaves to enrich the manufacturers. The halls of congress must be filled with men who will trample under foot the monopolies which are controlling the legislation of this country, and instead of letting nature and its vast resources, and the natural wants of mankind at large, regulate commerce and taxation, are wringing from the farmers and laborers $2,000,000,000 annually, not as revenue to pay necessary expenses of the government, but as a bonus to manufacturers by this unjust tariff.

As Others See Us.

The Charlevoix Journal has reached our table, and it is neat, newsy, and spicy, showing that a printer has its management. The publisher, C. J. Strang, has had a long experience in the business, having been employed for a number of years in the state printing house of W. S. George & Co., at Lansing. While we cannot swallow the Journal's politics, we hope Mr. Strang will be successful as a publisher in this county. [Boyne State-man.

The Pine Lake Region and Charlevoix Resorts.

From the Daily Resorter.

One of the loveliest of all the many beautiful lakes that adorn this fair northern country is Pine Lake, connected with Lake Michigan at Charlevoix by Pine river, a short stream that has been rendered navigable for the largest lake vessels, and by Round lake a park like lake of only about 30 acres, upon the shores of which are situated the thriving village of Charlevoix, and two popular resorts, the Chicago and Charlevoix.

Pine lake stretches east and south some 20 miles. About five miles east it divides into two arms; extending as its name implies, south to the distance of some 16 miles. Into the finger end of the south arm flows the Jordan river, the famous trout stream. Prof. Winchell years ago gave the following graphic pen picture of Pine lake: "Far away to the southeast for fifteen miles, stretches the placid, smiling surface of the water, its white and pebbly shore chasing the contour of the hills in all its meandering sinuosities. The verdant ridges rise on every side from the shining shore line, and hold the lake in their enchanted embrace, while rounded hill tops bubble up in rapid succession across the retiring landscape, till hill, vale, and sky, green, purple and blue, dissolve together in the blended hues of the distant horizon."

The village of Charlevoix, which is the key to the whole of Pine lake region with nearly eighty miles of shore line, is situated on the high bluffs overlooking Lake Michigan, between Round lake and Lake Michigan, and on both banks of Pine river, which forms the connecting link between Lake Michigan and the inland lakes just mentioned.

The citizens are justly proud of their town, and manifest a commendable spirit of enterprise and liberality, and the writer, speaking from eight years acquaintance with the place, has no hesitancy in saying that the intellectual and moral standard of Charlevoix people is superior to any place of its size he has ever known. All branches of business are represented, and the Fountain City house and Bridge Street house are both spacious and excellently kept hotels.

Between Round and Pine lakes and south of the main channel which connects them, is located the Charlevoix summer resort. The grounds of the resort comprise about 75 acres, and rise by three natural and well-defined terraces from Pine lake. The two lower terraces are sufficiently wide for cottage lots, with a broad walk in front, while the upper terrace stretches far away in a level plateau, from which glimpses of Lake Michigan are obtained. More than half the tract is cleared land, other parts being thinly wooded, and the portion farthest from the water being covered with heavy timber, while in the rear of the white the dense woods extend to a great distance. A handsome hotel, the Belvedere house, has been erected on an eligible site, from which a charming view of the blue waters reaching far to the southeast is obtained. A number of beautiful cottages also stand upon the terraces overlooking the lake. A music hall 30x50 feet and a bowling alley 80 feet long, have recently been built and numerous improvements made. The company owning this resort was organized on the 21st day of May, 1878, under the statute laws of Michigan.

Nature has provided every facility for healthful recreation and amusement, including unexcelled boating and fishing, and the managers of the resort seem determined to make the most of their delightful location.

Directly opposite the Charlevoix resort is the Chicago resort, founded by a stock company of wealthy Chicago gentlemen for a private summer retreat for their families and their friends. An elegant club house and several fine cottages have already been built, and extensive improvements have been begun.

Charlevoix is the center of a famous fishing region, and boats run to all points in the vicinity. Several steamers make daily trips to South Arm and East Jordan, and the staunch steamer Clara Belle makes two trips a day the whole length of the picturesque lake to Boyne City, where stages run to connect with trains at Boyne Falls. A trip of unequalled variety is to go by the steamer Faxton from Harbor springs or Petoskey to Charlevoix, thence by Clara Belle to Boyne City, next a novel stage ride of six miles, through the woods to Boyne Falls, and then home again by rail the same afternoon.

State Teachers' Institute.

The State Teachers' Institute, for Charlevoix county, will be held at Charlevoix, commencing at 10 o'clock a. m. Monday, August 6, and closing Friday afternoon following. E. H. Green, Esq., Charlevoix, local committee. It is becoming a well established fact that an interchange of views, such as is given in these institutes, is of great practical benefit to those who attend them. The teachers that are found in the front ranks of their profession are generally those who take interest enough in their work to avail themselves of such means of improvement.

The institute law, as amended by the last legislature, allows teachers, whose schools are in session at the time appointed for the county institute, hold under the direction of the state superintendent, to close their schools during the continuance of such institute, without forfeiting their wages for as many half-days as they are in attendance at the institute. This removes a cause that has prevented many teachers from attending these institutes in the past; and in view of the inducements to self-improvement thus furnished by the law, county examiners and school boards will both exercise wisdom and practice justice by giving preference to those teachers, other things being equal, who seek all such means better to prepare themselves for the work of their profession.

It is designed to make the work in these institutes as practical as possible, and thus meet the wants of the teachers of all grades in their everyday work. At the same time it will be the purpose of every worker to raise the standard of the profession of teaching, and to gain for it that dignity to which it is entitled. Especial attention will be given to such subjects as have recently been added to the list of those in which teachers are required to pass examination before obtaining certificates.

The exercises will be conducted by persons of extended experience, known ability, and eminent success.

The morning and afternoon sessions will be devoted to the discussion of topics of particular interest to teachers, while the evening lectures will be of a popular character.

There will be no tuition or enrollment fee. Full particulars in regard to board, etc., may be obtained upon application to the local committee.

Mr. H. N. Higinbotham, wife, two daughters, and two sons, of Chicago, are on the Jordan this week, fishing. Mr. H. is of the firm of Marshall, Field & Co., wholesale and retail dry goods, and has been for some years a visitor to this region, at present making his headquarters at the Arlington House, Petoskey.

Mr. Fred. Hathaway, of Chicago, agent for Redpath's lyceum bureau, is at the Fountain City house. Mr. H. intends making Round Lake his headquarters, and look out for the ladies. Yesterday morning he caught a 2½ pound black bass in front of the Fountain City house.

Mr. Orson Campbell, a pioneer of this region and for over thirty years a resident of Beaver Island, called at the JOURNAL office Saturday, and devoted an hour to social end and reminiscences. Although more than 70 years old, he is active, mentally and physically, and is a walking encyclopedia of the early days and events of the early settlement of the Island. He was one of the few to remain and fight down the persecution which followed the dispersion of the settlement there in 1856. Being an eye-witness and impartial observer of events, his remarks were specially interesting to the writer, who heard, caused fail of having more than an ordinary interest in those matters.

The following are the arrivals registered at the Chicago resort for the season up to Tuesday evening:

Mr. and Mrs. C. F. Gates, Herbert W. Gates, Lena Nelson, Rev. C. F. Gates, Mrs. Nellie Gates, S. M. Posey, Carrie Schuller, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. S. Lord, Mary Tookin, A. C. Rogers and wife, Miss Florence A. Rhodes, A. L. Hunt, and two children, of Chicago; Mrs. Jas. H. Frost and two children, New York; Mrs. M. Moore, Chicago; Jno. A. Anderson and wife, Miss M. E. Anderson, of Kansas; T. C. Hoag, Chicago; Lizzie Burroughs and wife, Minnie M. Barry, Clark Town, of Bloomington, Ills.; Mrs. Laura N. Wiley, Chicago; Mrs. Laura Davidson, Elgin; Burnett, Kate Burnett, Chicago; Dr. P. S. Chamberlain, Detroit; Mrs. C. H. Vandell, C. M. Hunt, Chicago; C. H. Frost, New York; Mrs. A. W. VanArsdale, Jno. P. Wilson and wife, sister, and three children, C. E. Allen, Evansville, E. D. Smith, F. H. Wood, F. P. Sconville, Oak Park; W. P. Hammers, Mrs. Mary C. Davidson, Elgin; Miss Frances Shipman, Mrs. Sawyer, Chicago; A. A. Lane, Boyne Falls; H. F. Cherry, Chicago; Geo. H. Cargill and wife, Chicago; A. L. Hunt, G. R. McAdow, Chicago; S. H. Bratton, Hampton; David Carter, J. W. Bennett, Chicago; H. K. Brinkman, Old Mission; Rose, F. Eckart, Miss Ingle, Detroit; Mrs. North, C. F. Gates, Chicago; W. Gates, Geneva; Mrs. A. G. Compton, Mrs. Compton, New York; Rev. G. S. F. Savage and wife, C. B. Seaville, Geo. A. Bruce, wife and child, Miss Ella Frost, Chicago.

News Brevities.

The Idaho is in the harbor as we go to press.

A few new plank have been placed in the bridge this week.

Workmen repaired the telegraph line to Ironton this week.

Stockman & Aldings are covering their new store-house with iron.

The time card of the Gazelle will be found at the head of this page.

The Fountain City hotel uses over 300 pounds of fresh fish every week.

Twelve new boat houses are now in course of erection at the Chicago resort.

Mr. Ainslie erected the Bridge street sidewalk across his lot last week.

The Chicago resorters nearly all attended the festival at A. S. Dixon's Tuesday evening.

The bank of Charlevoix has erected a handsome new sign on the corner of Bridge and Main streets.

The time card of the steamer M. W. Wright will be found at the head of this page. Others may be expected in the future.

A revolving colored light has been placed near the point on the south side of the channel between Round and Pine lakes.

A lad of twelve or fourteen years fell into Round Lake near Fox's dock last Saturday, but was rescued with only a thorough wetting.

The receipts of the festival at Mr. J. S. Dixon's Tuesday evening, was $43.25, the proceeds attending in large numbers and giving liberally.

People who wish to see a fine job of paper hanging and rich decorations will do well to call at the new rooms of the Merchants & Farmers' bank.

The family of H. P. Cherry, of Chicago, president of the Pine Lake Iron Co., with his sister, Mrs. Adams and her daughter, also from Chicago, arrived at Ironton last night.

Mr. Geo. H. Hill and Mr. Zeph Brown, of Cincinnati, are guests of the Fountain City house, and while here intend to enjoy some of the fishing. May they have a good time and be successful.

H. F. Stevens, of Chicago, who is stopping at the Fountain City house, is furnishing entertainment for the guests by means of an amateur photographic apparatus which takes excellent pictures.

Mr. Edwin A. Lee and wife are regretted at the Bridge Street this week. Mr. Lee has canvassed this vicinity in the interest of the Detroit safe company, and sold twenty safes within a few weeks.

A. B. Turner, editor of the Grand Rapids Eagle, and P. B. Chandler, of Chicago, Ills., who have been up the Jordan on a two weeks fishing excursion returned to Charlevoix on Tuesday to remain a few days.

The party of Terre Haute tourists went to Mackinac on the Champlain last Thursday evening, and returned to their homes on Sunday. They expressed themselves as well pleased with Charlevoix.

If you have occasion to go up the Arm any distance on a picnic party, remember that Capt. Mason of the Gazelle is careful and patient, and will do all he can to make the journey one of pleasure.

Mr. E. P. Houghton has the foundation walls laid for a new house on the north side. Mr. Houghton is a recent addition to our population, and evidently intends to make Charlevoix his permanent home.

All persons in Charlevoix and vicinity, who are willing to undertake school teachers during the state teachers institute, commencing Aug. 6, are requested to leave word at the office of E. B. Green.

H. S. Harsha is pushing to completion a new house near the "park," which will make "cosy little nest" for some small family, the chief trouble, however, is that this, like too many others, is too small to be economical.

The display of cautionary signals will September 1 be established at Charlevoix, Elk Rapids, Ludington, Manistee, Menominee, Muskegon, Muskegon, Pentwater, Petoskey, St. Joseph, South Haven, Traverse City and Northport.

Some of the prominent gentlemen of this village are contemplating the leading for one on Round and Pine lakes next season a handsome gondola, such as is seen in the city of Venice, and other European pleasure resorts. We hope they will.

The steamer M. W. Wright will run mail further notice as follows: Leaving East Jordan at 7 a. m., Charlevoix, 9; Petoskey, 11; arriving at Harbor Springs 11:30. Returning, leave Harbor Spring at 1:30 p. m., Petoskey, 2; Charlevoix, 4:30; arriving at East Jordan 6:30.

Prof. Ewing, of Ionia, assisted by Prof. Womble, of Big Rapids, will conduct a teachers' institute at the Charlevoix school house, commencing Monday, August 6th. The programme will contain matters of interest to teachers, and all are cordially invited to attend.

Mr. W. S. Johnson, opposite the Bridge street house, remembers the JOURNAL this week with a short distance cord, which will be found in our advertising columns. He intends soon to put into small stock of groceries and provisions, in addition to his present business.

A writ of habeas corpus has been issued in the matter of a boy claimed with slavery, by some of Mr. Mason of East Jordan, now under examination, and the officer is out to appear before Judge Ramsdell at Traverse City July 27th, to show cause why the boy should not be released.

Cruickshank and Grier will in a few days sweep their new rooms in Rattan's new block. They are light, well finished, and centrally located, and will make as fine an office as can be found in this vicinity. Desks and safes have been rendered necessary by their large and constantly increasing business.

"Our forearm, G. A. Darke, is doing the best on the Democrat during the editors' illness," chirped Democrat. Isaac A. Vet. last year he ran a paper called "Shoo the Boss" for a few weeks, and soon came up to Charlevoix and had a first summer and good health. Now both sick, and there are plenty of fish in these lakes.

Ever alive to the comfort and pleasure of its guests, E. B. Lapham, of the Fountain City hotel, is making improvements and additions from time to time, which make it the most popular house in this vicinity. A new piazza last week and new carpets this week is the present programme, with others to follow.

A busy place just now is S. M. See, Mason & co.'s planing mill and door, sash and blind factory. The reporter stopped in a few minutes last Friday and found everyone busy, from the basement to the attic. There seems to be a rush of building in this vicinity, and as they have the only mill in it is about impossible to keep up with orders.

Mr. L. L. Carr has just opened a fruit and vegetable store one door south of E. R. Clark's, where he intends to keep on hand at all times fresh fruit and vegetables in their season, and also a small line of candies, nuts, pop, ginger ale, etc. He has this week some very choice watermelons, which have been shipped from the south. See his card in another column.

The Band of Hope which Mrs. Garner organized last Monday evening will hold their first meeting in the M. E. church at 4 p. m. on Saturday of this week. Miss Potter, of Wayne, will explain the object and benefits of this work among the young people. A cordial invitation is extended to all young people to come and learn how this mode of temperance work is conducted.

There is now in Charlevoix an Italian band of four musicians who may be said to "take the cake" for fine music, and in person of appearance are about the most picturesque of musicians. They are spending the summer in the resort region, at present stopping at the Bridge Street house, where they may pay the cash from a record of the best people.

"John can't you come in here and move this couple? they're in an awful hurry, and want to go on the boat." "Why, yes I guess perhaps I can be 'pumped.'" "Well get some one for a witness, and come quick, for they can't wait." John started for a witness, and found the reporter posed along out of hearing, and didn't know what he'd been pressed, but supposed the young couple were going to Petoskey and proceeded to depart on the boat which left Fox's dock a few minutes later.

It was impossible last week to get the names of every person like to want a copy of the first issue of the JOURNAL, and the reporter doubtless many who feel disappointed on account of such failure. We printed what we thought to be a sufficient number but to our sorrow, after every paper was gone. In the future we shall print more, and hope to supply the demand. From present indications the JOURNAL is an assured success.

The singular phenomenon of a sudden and inexplicable rise and fall of the waters of the bay, in a succession of tidal waves, is becoming quite frequent. On Saturday afternoon a wave swept into the harbor, raising the water three or four feet above its usual level and bearing a correspondingdepression which subsided. The water rose so high that a skiff was moved entirely around the large warehouse at South Arm's dock, and her rail and track near the little brook was completely submerged, the water backing clear up into the church lot. When the wave receded out it undermined the south side and rolled out quite a piece of the railroad embankment. Petoskey.

Up the Arm.

Last Monday morning a representative of the JOURNAL took the steamer Faxton for East Jordan, combining business with pleasure. The morning was fine, and the ride a most pleasant one. On the boat were two parties of pleasure seekers from Petoskey, one going to the Jordan on a fishing excursion, the other enjoying the ride and the scenery, intending to return on the Grand Rapids from Charlevoix to Petoskey in the afternoon. These parties are frequent, and on a fine day the ride from Petoskey or Traverse City to East Jordan and return is a most pleasurable one. The party on their way to the Jordan were Mr. H. N. Higinbotham, of the firm of Marshall, Field & Co., wholesale and retail dry goods Chicago. Mr. Higinbotham was accompanied by his wife, two daughters and a guide. Two sons were already on the Jordan, and the whole party were to remain a week. Mr. Higinbotham favored the newsman, with a brief and very interesting description of their immense business, which in dollars and cents runs way up into the millions.

On arrival at East Jordan one of the first questions asked was where that much-talked-of democratic journal was. On inquiry it was learned that no papers had yet been received, and no one knew anything about the package of papers which had been mailed at Charlevoix postoffice last Friday morning. It at once became apparent that the business part of the trip was doomed to failure. The newsman thought it best, however, to see and make the acquaintance of as many business men as possible, though he could not well ask them to subscribe for or advertise in what they had not seen. The first man met was Mr. J. W. Rogers, formerly of Charlotte, who dropped his business and took the scribe up one side of Main street and down the other, calling on nearly every man. The net result was a dozen subscriptions, and a promise of advertising if a sufficient number of readers was obtained.

The business men seem alive to the best interests of the village. A great amount of building is going on, and a spirit of improvement visible in every direction. Among other things learned, was that an effort is now being made, and which promises success, to hold a union fair in that village next September or early in October. Already a sum of money nearly sufficient to purchase grounds and buildings has been pledged in case the organization is effected—and a meeting is to be held at an early date to complete the organization. One gentleman remarked that it was characteristic of East Jordan people to push to success whatever they attempted.

Among others, we met Mr. John Chamberlain, and Mr. Fred Bessinger, formerly of Lansing, and Mr. A. Hesson, formerly of Charlotte. Mr. Chamberlain has been located in the dry goods trade here but a short time, yet has a most promising business.

From one point could be seen from the boat seventeen buildings in the course of erection not far enough advanced to receive the first coat of paint, and there must be as many more in process of finishing inside. There are also to be built as soon as possible another blacksmith's shop, and a presbyterian church, which had not at that date been commenced.

After an excellent dinner the scribe crossed the Jordan and interviewed Sol. Isaman and others. Mr. Isaman led the way through his garden and orchard back to his farm, showing among other things the lumbering story he has plenty where he commenced life in this region seventeen years ago, and the little addition to the house from which he sold thousands of dollars of merchandise. The building is in a very dilapidated condition, and will soon be numbered among the things past and gone. In the orchard are a few plum trees, on which the fruit hangs in great clusters like grapes, and the finer limbs are bent nearly to the ground. The apple orchard is young, but hangs quite full of fruit. The hay crop is heavy, and the wet weather seriously interferes with curing it. Potatoes are large and free from bugs. Other crops look well. Mr. Isaman is building a large and convenient tenement house on his farm.

After a brief chat with Mr. Munro's clerk, and with P. H. LeClair, the newsman returned to the wharf and found a comfortable seat on the Gazelle, bound homeward.

On the return trip the Gazelle stopped at Holy Island and took on a jolly picnic party, from the Chicago resort, numbering between forty and fifty. From the appearance of their baggage, they had spent the day in fishing and eating. Two very pleasant things to do. It was evident, too that the events of the day were not to be trusted entirely to the memory, for nearly every lady was provided with a piece of birch bark and lead pencil, collecting autographs. They were evidently as happy a picnic party as ever get together.

Altogether the day was pleasant and profitable, notwithstanding the disappointment of not finding last week's JOURNAL well circulated. We shall have occasion to visit the place again soon.

Excursion to Mackinac Island.

The East Jordan cornet band have arranged with the steamer T. S. Faxton to give an excursion to Mackinac Island, leaving East Jordan next Saturday, 28th, at 3:30, and Charlevoix at 5 o'clock p. m. Returning will leave Mackinac Island at 3:00 p. m. Sunday, thus giving an excellent opportunity to visit that far-famed resort. Meals may be obtained on board at reduced rates if it is found undesirable to carry lunch baskets. The Charlevoix band will accompany the excursion party. Fare for the round trip, $1.50.

The Fog.

The Lawrence and Champlain had considerable difficulty in making the harbor last Sunday, on account of the dense fog. The Lawrence passed by at a considerable distance, and succeeded in reaching the harbor by the aid of a tug which answered her signals. The Champlain followed closely, she struck the bar on the south side of the channel near the pier, but threw a line to the opposite pier and pulled off with only a few minutes delay. The Champlain went out soon afterward, but the Lawrence waited till morning, at which time the fog had risen. Wednesday morning there was a rumor that the Idaho had collided with some other craft during the fog on Sunday, but we understand she has since been heard from.

Business Change.

Mr. Ed. F. Parmalee, of Reading, has purchased a half interest in the business and property of the Sentinel, and will commence operations August 15th. Mr. Parmalee is a practical job printer with some experience as a news-paper reporter and manager, and will have the business management of the office. Mr. Smith retaining editorial control of the paper.

This change has been rendered necessary by the gradually failing health of Mr. Smith, caused by overwork and the multiplicity of cares connected with the management of the newspaper, the postoffice, and the telegraph business of the office.

Mr. Smith expects to take at least two weeks more in which to recuperate, and will go to Niagara Falls and other places east, and possibly to Chicago and points west. It is to be hoped that with the decrease of cares under the new arrangement he will regain complete health.

The Parsons.

The schooner E. Parsons which struck the north pier last week and sunk has not yet been raised. Soon after she struck, and the finality and crew rescued, a subscription paper was circulated and a sum of money raised for the benefit of the captain's family. The Parsons was not insured. Last Thursday evening an effort was made by the tugs Payne and Biggie to pull her out of her position, and low her up to the ship yard, but without success. The captain is without means, and if the schooner is not raised soon she will be a total loss to him.

Since the above was in type, Capt. Dyke, late of the Nellie Booth, has bought the Parsons for $700, and is now trying to raise her by filling with cedar posts. He intends putting her in the dry dock and fitting her up for the trade here, and will command her himself.

The Band Concert.

Last Saturday evening the ladies' band gave a concert at Bartholomew's opera hall, which was well attended and highly applauded. The following is the programme:

Selections	Consolidated Bands
Maid of Dundee	Mrs. Bozell
Violin Duet	Wheat and Carr
Chase Festival	Little Bice and Aggie Miller
Selections	Orchestra
Musical Prench	Will Bahrer
Cow Song	Miss Vanderpilton
Always keep a word for mother,	Little Carpenter, Lloyd Newman, Minnie Bartholomew and Katie Smith.
Selections	Ladies Band
Closing Solo	Misses Atwater and Carpenter, Lloyd Newman, Minnie Bartholomew and Katie Smith.
Overture	Mr. and Mrs. Wheat
	Orchestra

The song "Always keep a word for mother," was so well rendered that the audience insisted on its repetition, and the little girls were highly complimented on their efforts. The entertainment concluded with a farce entitled "Shanks' Mare," in which Dunks, the darkey, created much merriment by doing just what he was told by his master, and no more.

L. L. CARR

has just received a fresh lot of Fruit and Vegetables

BOARD by the Day or Week, AND WARM MEALS AT ALL HOURS. Also Tobacco and Cigars. Rear corner of Bridge and Main sts. Up stairs. L. L. CARR.

A PRETTY POEM OF THE WAR.

BY R. H. STODDARD.

I walked the streets at midnight,
But my thoughts were far away,
For my leaf of light, now withered,
Was green again with May.

The season of twenty winters
Had vanished from my brow,
And I sat and looked forward,
As I looked back and now.

Why should I not look forward?
I knew my youth was strong;
I knew there was within me
The might there to be sung.

My heart was light and cheerful;
I loved my fellow-men;
And I loved—as surely my comrades,
For I had comrades then.

Where are those dear old fellows?
Ah! whither have they flown?
I asked myself at midnight,
As I walked the streets alone.

There was Fitz, the Irish singer,
And Fred, the tender heart,
And Harry, who lived for Woman,
And Tom, who lived for Art.

Poor Fitz's song is over,
And the heart of Fred is still;
One went down at Yorktown,
The other at Malvern Hill.

Wrapped in the blue they fought in,
They lurked them where they lay;
And o'ershrew Tom and Harry,
Who wore, poor lads! the gray.

As I walked the streets at midnight,
And remembered the awful years
That snatched my comrades from me,
My eyes were filled with tears.

I thought of bloody battles,
Where by hosts on hosts we lay
Had not God killed each other,
For we strike like—and pray.

Of happy homes that were darkened,
Of hearths that were desolate,
Of tender hearts that were broken,
Of love that was turned to hate.

I pitied the wretched living;
I think I did the dead;
I knew I sighed for Harry,
And dropped a tear for Fred.

"Poor boys!" I said, But pondering
What woe, and might have been
Why I am a bit sorry for,
And they were in it, e'en now!

I pitied her dead no longer;
I did not sigh for No.
They went when they were summoned—
Before they could not go.

When we know what life and death are,
We shall then know what to best;
Meanwhile we live—to sing
Their labor done—they rest.

The earth lies heavy on them,
But they do not complain;
They do not miss the sunshine,
They do not feel the rain.

If they are ever conscious,
In that long sleep of theirs,
It is when, past the winter,
We feel the first spring airs.

When the birds from tropic countries
Come back again to ours,
And where of late were snow drifts,
The grass was thick with flowers—

Thick flowers as still to-morrow
Be scattered where they lie,
The blue and gray together,
Beneath the same sweet sky.

So stain upon their manhood,
No memory of the past,
Except the common valor
That unites to one at last!

THE GENTLEMAN BEGGAR.

One morning, many years ago, I called by appointment on Mr. John Balance, the fashionable pawnbroker, to accompany him to Liverpool, in pursuit for a haunting customer, for Balance, in addition to pawning, does a little business in the diamond line. In fact, it rained in torrents when the cab stopped at the passage which leads past the pawning boxes to his private door. The cabman rang twice, and at length Balance appeared, looming through the mist and rain in the entry, illuminated by his pastoral cigar. As I expected, he looked rather impatiently, remembering that trains wait for no man, something like a hairy dog or bundle of rags rose up at his feet and barred his passage for a moment. Then Balance cried out with an exclamation, in answer apparently to a something I could not hear: "What, man alive! slept in the passage! there, take that and get some breakfast, for heaven's sake." So saying he jumped into the "chanson," and we then sped away at ten miles an hour, just catching the express as the doors of the station were closing. My curiosity was fully set; for although Balance can be free with his money, it is not exactly to beggar that his ownership is usually displayed; so, when comfortably ensconced in a corner, I finish of with:

"You are liberal with your money this morning, for, now often do you give silver to street cadgers? because I shall know what walk to take when I attend the pawnbroker's levee on buying day."

Balance, who would have made an excellent parson if he had not been lured to so exhorting trade, and has at all a soft bit left in his heart that is always lighting up with his hard heart, did not smile at all, but looked as grim as if expecting a lunatic in Saturday night's punch. He answers slowly: "A cadger, sir, a beggar a miserable wretch, he is not; but he can tell you, Master David, that that miserable bundle of rags was born and bred a gentleman; the son of a nobleman, the husband of an heiress, and has sat and dined at tables where you and I, Master David, are only allowed to view the globe by favor of the footman at the door, but this thousand, and been well paid. The last thing I had from him was his court suit, and I hold now his bill for £100, that will be paid, I expect, when he dies."

Why, what nonsense you are talking. You must be dreaming this morning. However, we are alone; I'll light a weed in defiance of railway law; you shall tell me that yarn, for, true or impossible, it will fill up the time to Liverpool."

"As for yarn," replied Balance "the whole affair is short enough; and, as for truth, that you may easily find out if you like to take the trouble. I thought to-a-poor cadger was a dead bore; but as I've got no meeting him this morning, and I had a curiosity about him myself,

"Oh, hang your dreams. Tell us about this gentleman-beggar that bleeds you of half-crowns—that melts the heart even of a pawn-broker."

"Well, then, that beggar is the illegitimate son of the late Marquis of Hoopborough by a Spanish lady of rank. He received a first-rate education and was brought up in his father's house. At a very early age he obtained an appointment in a public office, was presented by the Marquis at court and received into the first society, where the handsome person and agreeable manners made him a great favorite. Soon after coming of age he married the daughter of Sir E. Bimpey, who brought him a very handsome fortune, which was strictly settled on herself. They lived in splendid style, kept several carriages, a house in town and a place in the country. For some reason or other, idleness, or to please his lady's pride, he resigned his appointment. His father died and left him nothing; indeed, he seemed at that time very handsomely provided for.

"Very soon Mr. and Mrs. Molinos Fitz Roy began to disagree. She was cold, correct—he was hot and random. He was quite dependent on her, and she made him feel it. When he began to get into debt he came to me. At length some shocking quarrel occurred; some-else of jealousy on the wife's side, not without reason, I believe, and the end of it was Mr. Fitz Roy was turned out of doors. The house was his wife's, the furniture was his wife's, and the fortune was his wife's—he was, in fact, her pensioner. He left with a few hundred pounds ready money and some personal jewelry, and and went to a hotel. On these and credit he lived. Being illegitimate, he had no relations; being a fool when he spent his money he lost his friends. The world took his wife's part when they found she had the fortune, and the only parties who interfered were her relatives, who did the best to make the quarrel incurable. To crown all, one night he was run over by a cab, was carried to a hospital and lay there for months, and was, during several weeks of the time, unconscious. A message to the wife, by the hands of one of his debauched companions, sent by a humane surgeon, obtained an intimation that if he died, Mr. Peak, the undertaker to the family, had orders to see to the funeral," and that Mrs. Molinos was on the point of starting for the continent, not to return for some years. When Fitz Roy was discharged he came to me, limping on two sticks, to pawn his court suit, and told me his story. I was really sorry for the fellow, such a handsome, thoroughbred-looking man. He was going then into a low lodging-house, where I was staying with an officer for stolen goods. He was pointed out to me as the "gentleman cadger," because he was so free with his money when in luck.

He recognized me, but turned from me with a look of mingled shame and resentment that I have since often recalled when more than once, although he never asks for anything. How he lives, heaven knows. Without money, without friends, without useful education of any kind, he tramps the country, as you saw him, perhaps doing a little in the pawning line, perhaps only happy when he obtains the means to get drunk. I have heard through the kitchen of the Cadgers' Arms that I now came to me, that he is entitled to some property, and I expect if he were to die his wife would pay the £100 that I hold against her. I am told you don't know to be true, and the bundle of rags I believed just now is known in every thieves' lodging as the "gentleman cadger."

This story produced on impression on me. I am fond of speculation and like the Cadgers' Arms as a legal business; so, although Balance can be free with his money, it is not exactly to beggar that his ownership is usually displayed; so, when comfortably ensconced in a coupe, I finish of with:

"Oh, hang your dreams. Tell us about this gentleman-beggar that bleeds you of half-crowns—that melts the heart even of a pawn-broker."

Without money, without friends, without useful education of any kind, he tramps the country, as you saw him, perhaps doing a little in the pawning line, perhaps only happy when he obtains the means to get drunk. I have heard through the kitchen of the Cadgers' Arms that I now came to me, that he is entitled to some property, and I expect if he were to die his wife would pay the £100 that I hold against her. I am told you don't know to be true, and the bundle of rags I believed just now is known in every thieves' lodging as the "gentleman cadger."

This story produced on impression on me. I am fond of speculation and like the Cadgers' Arms as a legal business; so, although Balance can be free with his money, it is not exactly to beggar that his ownership is usually displayed; so, when comfortably ensconced in a coupe, I finish of with:

"You are liberal with your money this morning, for, now often do you give silver to street cadgers? because I shall know what walk to take when I attend the pawnbroker's levee on buying day."

Balance, who would have made an excellent parson if he had not been lured to so exhorting trade, and has at all a soft bit left in his heart that is always lighting up with his hard heart, did not smile at all, but looked as grim as if expecting a lunatic in Saturday night's punch. He answers slowly: "A cadger, sir, a beggar a miserable wretch, he is not; but he can tell you, Master David, that that miserable bundle of rags was born and bred a gentleman; the son of a nobleman, the husband of an heiress, and has sat and dined at tables where you and I, Master David, are only allowed to view the globe by favor of the footman at the door, but this thousand, and been well paid. The last thing I had from him was his court suit, and I hold now his bill for £100, that will be paid, I expect, when he dies."

Why, what nonsense you are talking. You must be dreaming this morning. However, we are alone; I'll light a weed in defiance of railway law; you shall tell me that yarn, for, true or impossible, it will fill up the time to Liverpool."

"As for yarn," replied Balance "the whole affair is short enough; and, as for truth, that you may easily find out if you like to take the trouble. I thought to-a-poor cadger was a dead bore; but as I've got no meeting him this morning, and I had a curiosity about him myself,

I answered quickly: "Heaven forbid I should sport with misery; I mean and hope to do him good, as well as myself."

"Well, then, that beggar is the illegitimate son of the late Marquis of Hoopborough by a Spanish lady of rank. He received a first-rate education and was brought up in his father's house. At a very early age he obtained an appointment in a public office, was presented by the Marquis at court and received into the first society, where the handsome person and agreeable manners made him a great favorite. Soon after coming of age he married the daughter of Sir E. Bimpey, who brought him a very handsome fortune, which was strictly settled on herself. They lived in splendid style, kept several carriages, a house in town and a place in the country. For some reason or other, idleness, or to please his lady's pride, he resigned his appointment. His father died and left him nothing; indeed, he seemed at that time very handsomely provided for.

"Very soon Mr. and Mrs. Molinos Fitz Roy began to disagree. She was cold, correct—he was hot and random. He was quite dependent on her, and she made him feel it. When he began to get into debt he came to me. At length some shocking quarrel occurred; some-else of jealousy on the wife's side, not without reason, I believe, and the end of it was Mr. Fitz Roy was turned out of doors. The house was his wife's, the furniture was his wife's, and the fortune was his wife's—he was, in fact, her pensioner. He left with a few hundred pounds ready money and some personal jewelry, and and went to a hotel. On these and credit he lived. Being illegitimate, he had no relations; being a fool when he spent his money he lost his friends. The world took his wife's part when they found she had the fortune, and the only parties who interfered were her relatives, who did the best to make the quarrel incurable. To crown all, one night he was run over by a cab, was carried to a hospital and lay there for months, and was, during several weeks of the time, unconscious. A message to the wife, by the hands of one of his debauched companions, sent by a humane surgeon, obtained an intimation that if he died, Mr. Peak, the undertaker to the family, had orders to see to the funeral," and that Mrs. Molinos was on the point of starting for the continent, not to return for some years. When Fitz Roy was discharged he came to me, limping on two sticks, to pawn his court suit, and told me his story. I was really sorry for the fellow, such a handsome, thoroughbred-looking man. He was going then into a low lodging-house, where I was staying with an officer for stolen goods. He was pointed out to me as the "gentleman cadger," because he was so free with his money when in luck.

He recognized me, but turned from me with a look of mingled shame and resentment that I have since often recalled when more than once, although he never asks for anything. How he lives, heaven knows. Without money, without friends, without useful education of any kind, he tramps the country, as you saw him, perhaps doing a little in the pawning line, perhaps only happy when he obtains the means to get drunk. there is the work-house, as I observed before; beside, allow me to suggest that these appeals to feeling are quite unprofessional—quite unprofessional."

"But, Mr. Leeson, touching this property which the poor man is entitled to?"

"Why, there, again, Mr. D., you must excuse me; you really must. I don't say he is; I don't say he is not. If you know he is entitled to property, I am sure you know how to proceed. The law is open to you, Mr. Discount—the law is open, and a man of your talent will know how to use it."

"Then, Mr. Leeson, you mean that I must, in order to right this starving man, tile a bill of discovery to extract from you the particulars of his rights. You have the marriage settlement and all the information, and you decline to allow a pension or afford any information; the man is to starve or go to the work-house."

"Why, Mr. D., you are so quick and violent, it really is not professional; but you see there is subsisted suite of tribunals it has been decided that a solicitor is not bound to afford such information as you ask to the injury of his client."

"Then you mean that this poor Molinos may rot and starve, while you keep secret from him, at his wife's request, his title to an income payable in the Court of Chancery will back you in this iniquity."

I kept repeating the word "starve," because I saw it made my respectable opponent wince.

"Well, then, just listen to me. I know that in the happy state of your equity law, chancery can't help my client, but I have another plan: I will go home to my office, issue a writ, take your client's husband into execution; as soon as he is lodged in jail I shall file his schedule in the Insolvent Court, and when he comes up for his discharge, I shall put you in the witness-box and examine you on oath, touching the property of which you know the husband is to be possessed, and where will be your privilege communication then?"

The respectable Leeson's face lengthened in a twinkling, his comfortable, confident air vanished, he crossed-and-filing his gold chain, and, at length, he muttered:

"Well, well, Mr. D., you are so warm a man. We must see what can be done; must consult. You will give me until the day after to-morrow, and then we'll meet and fix final determination. In the meantime send us a copy of your authority to act for Mr. Molinos Fitz-Roy."

Of course I lost no time in getting the gentleman beggar to sign a proper letter.

On the appointed day came a communication with L. & T. seal, which I opened, not without professional eagerness. It was as follows:

"In re Molinos Fitz-Roy and Another.

"SIR: In answer to your application on behalf of Mr. Molinos Fitz-Roy, we beg to inform you that under the administration of a paternal aunt who died intestate your client is entitled to £2,500 S. Sl. 3per-cents; £1,500 Bs Ben Square-lease, £300 per annum; £500 annuities, £500 bank stock, £5,500 India stock, besides other securities, bring up about £10,000. Your client is prepared to transfer over to Mr. Molinos Fitz-Roy's direction forthwith," There was a windfall. It quite took away my breath.

As dusk came my gentleman beggar, and what puzzled me was how to break the news to him. Being very much overwhelmed with business that day I had not much time for consideration. Before I could arrive at any decision when I first saw him, with only a week's beard on his chin, but, as usual, not quite sober. Six weeks had elapsed since the first interview. He was still the humble, trembling, low-voiced creature I first knew him.

After a prelude, I said: "I find, Mr. Fitz-Roy, that you are to some things. Pray, what do you mean to give me in addition to my bill for obtaining it?" He answered rapidly: "Pooh, pooh, take half. If there is £1000 take half; if there is £500, take half."

"No, no, Mr. F., I don't do business in that way; I shall be satisfied with 10 per cent."

It was so settled. I then led him out into the street, impelled to tell him the news, yet dreading the effect; not during to make the revelation in my office, for fear of the scene.

I began hesitatingly, "Mr. Fitz-Roy, I am happy to say that I find you are entitled to—" £10,000."

"Ten thousand pounds," he echoed; "£10,000!" he shrieked; "£10,000!" he yelled, seizing my arm violently, "You are a brick. Pray, call—call." Several drove up the slaunt might have been heard a mile off. He jumped in the first.

"Where to?" said the driver.

"To a tailor's, you rascal."

"Ten thousand pounds; ha, ha, ha!" he repeated hysterically when in the cab, and every moment grasping my arm. Presently he subsided, looked me earnestly in the face, and muttered with agonizing fervor:

"What a jolly brick you are!"

The tailor, the hosier, the bootmaker, the hair-dresser, were in turn visited by this poor pagan of externals. As, by degrees, under their hands, he emerged from the beggar to the gentleman, his spirits rose; his eyes brightened; he walked erect, but always nervously grasping my arm; fearing, apparently, to lose sight of me for a moment, lest his fortune should vanish with me. The important pride with which he gave his orders to the astonished tradesman for the finest and best of everything, and the amazed air of the fashionable hair-dresser when he presented his matted locks and stubble chin, to be "cut and shaved," may be acted—it cannot be described.

By the time the external transformation was complete, and I sat down in a cafe in the Haymarket, opposite a splendid, but handsome, thoroughbred-looking man, whose air, with the exception of his eyes, and deeply browned face, did not differ from the stereotyped man about town sitting around us. Mr. Molinos Fitz-Roy had already almost forgotten the pasty he bullied the waiter and criticised the wine as if he had done nothing else int dine and drink and scold there all the days of his life.

Once he wished to drink my health, and would have proclaimed his whole story to the coffee-room assembly in a raving style. When I left he almost wept in terror at the idea of losing sight of me. But allowing for the conditions—the natural result of such a whirl of events—he was wonderfully calm and self-possessed.

The next day his first thought was to distribute £50 among his friends, the cadgers, at a house of call in Westminster, and formally do dissolve his connection with them; those present undertaking for the "fraternity" that for the future he should never be noticed by them in public or private. I can't follow his career much farther. Adversity had taught him nothing. He was soon again surrounded by well-bred vampires, who had forgotten him when penniless; but they amused him, and that was enough. The £10,000 were rapidly melting, when he retired me to a grand dinner at Richmond, which included a dozen of the most agreeable, well-dressed parasites of London, interspersed with a display of pretty fashionably bonnets. We dined deliciously, and drank as men do-of-feed who have been long on low fare; but I noticed that he took no food in white sheets, with holes bored for the eyes. I never beheld anything so devilish. On they came, creeping the whole width of the narrow street. I had barely time to crowd myself into a projecting doorway when they were upon us. Fortunately I was sober enough to see the nature of the awful danger. Had I been drunk, I should have been overpowered and dragged off to the Cadgers' Arms. Had I been sober enough to see the danger, but not sober enough to avoid it, I should have been overpowered and dragged off to the Cadgers' Arms. Had I been sober enough to see the danger, but not sober enough to avoid it, I should have been overpowered and dragged off to the Cadgers' Arms. Had I been sober enough to see the danger, but not sober enough to avoid it, I should have been overpowered and dragged off to the Cadgers' Arms.

A FLOATING FUNERAL.

Masked Mourners Carrying Their Dead Through the Streets After Nightfall.

(From T. B. Aldrich's New Book.)

The night of our arrival was one of those unearthly moonlight nights that belong to Italy. The Arno, changed to opaline of quicksilver, flowed swiftly through the stone arches of the Ponte Vecchio under our windows, and lured me with its beauty out of doors, though it was great clock somewhere near by just clanged 11. By an engraving I had seen in my boyhood I recognized the lodge of Tobino Gadol, with its gold-smith shops on either side. There were dead now, of course. I strolled across the bridge and back again, once or twice, and then wandered off into a network of dingy streets, traversed by one street so very narrow that you saw only a band's breadth of amethystine sky between the tops of the tall buildings. Standing in the middle of the thoroughfare, I could almost touch the gutters of the shops right and left. At the upper end of the street, which was at least three-quarters of a mile in length, the overhanging fronts of the high houses seemed to meet and hide all the dense moonlight. In the desperate struggle which took place there between the moon and the glooms a hundred fantastic shadows slipped from cogn and cornice and fell into the street, below like besiegers flung from the ramparts of some old castle. Not a human being or a light was anywhere visible. Suddenly I saw what, for an instant, I took to be a falling star in the extreme distance. It approached in a zig-zag course. It broke into several stars; these grew larger; then I discovered they were torches. A low, monotonous chant, like the distant drone of descending an opera, reached my ear. The chant momentarily increased in distinctness, and, as the torches drew nearer, I saw that they were carried by fifteen or twenty persons marching in a square, in the middle of which was a bier supported by a number of ghostly figures. The procession was sweeping down on me at the rate of six miles an hour; the train-ing had dipped in the wind caused by the velocity of the march. When the bridge was within twenty yards of me, I noticed that the trestles, plates and all, were black with the mourners. Not a single one was uncovered. The heads of all were hidden in white sheets, with holes bored for the eyes. I never beheld anything so devilish. On they came, creeping the whole width of the narrow street. I had barely time to crowd myself into a projecting doorway when they were upon us. Fortunately I was sober enough to see the nature of the awful danger. Had I been drunk, I should have been overpowered and dragged off to the Cadgers' Arms. Had I been sober enough to see the danger, but not sober enough to avoid it, I should have been overpowered and dragged off to the Cadgers' Arms. The Oldest Organ in America.

The first organ ever brought to this country is still in constant use in St. John's Church, Portsmouth, N. H. The Hon. Henry K. Oliver, of Salem, Mass., thus gives its history: "It is known known as the Brattle organ, having been the property of the Hon. Thomas Brattle, who was born in Boston in 1658, and was treasurer of Harvard College, where he graduated in 1676, one of a class of only three seniors from 1667 till 1713, the year of his death. He was commercially, in Boston, quite opulent, and Brattle Square, and Brattle Street, and the now extinct Brattle Street Church, Boston, of which he was the leading founder, going from which in his habits are so broken up in a winter that he looked forward to a season's work in Boston and found that the day after going through the floods of last winter and being held a prisoner for five days, in the best of health, and going abroad to get provisions for the children's lectures. I want to write, but am obliged to talk. I feel that I was made for authorship, and I am determined to get oratory out of me. But the people are infinitely kind, and every year I see more than ever the results of the growth of the country and its increasing refinement. Why, I was engaged to lecture in a Kansas town last winter which I have never heard of. It is younger than one of my daughters. Yet I found there a beautiful opera house, crowded with people who pay as richly and fashionably dressed as any audience I ever faced in this city of Brooklyn. The West is growing away ahead. And away he went. Mrs Chanis' Recipe.

How to Make Tea.

There is a great waste among consumers in the use of tea. They put it into the pot, pour on the water, and think of steeping it. The fine qualities of a tea are brought out by the simple process of putting boiling water on just enough tea for one cup. In all teapots there is a hot-water urn, after the Russian method. A pinch of the leaf which weighs about one and half cents, or what a silver 5-cent piece weighs, is sufficient for one cup. Then the boiling hot water should be poured in and little covers put over the cups for a few moments to allow for steeping. This saves the pungent flavor which the water absorbs. A little sugar and a trifle of milk being added the luxury of the tea is soon perceived. Europeans drink tea in this fashion. The Chinaman never puts milk and sugar in his tea. The Russian follows this latter fashion, but adds lemon.

There is more tea used in America than in any other country in the world, and for this reason the consumer should be all the more careful in practicing the herb. There is no trick so that is finer than "the cup that cheers but does no inebriate" when the material used is honest. Inter Ocean.

Weariness of Lecturing.

Theodore Tilton, just before he sailed for Europe, confessed to an unspeakable weariness of lecturing. The distances are so great, the difficulty of getting from place to place is so wearisome, the audiences are so unmeans and provoking, there are such terrible exposures to storms and floods, the fare in most places is so poor, and the irregular habits are so broken up in a winter that he looked forward to a season's work in Europe as a time of rest. But after going through the floods of last winter and being held a prisoner for five days, in the best of health, and going abroad to get provisions for the children's lectures. I want to write, but am obliged to talk. I feel that I was made for authorship, and I am determined to get oratory out of me. Peter the Great.

When Peter the Great was living in England, he said and did many strange things. When in Westminster Hall, he inquired of a distinguished barrister who were the gentlemen in wigs and gowns, and being told they were lawyers, said:

"I assure! Why, I have but two in my whole dominion, and, when I return I mean to hang one."

The house which he occupied while in England—Sayes's row, at Deptford, the property of Evelyn, the author of "Sylva"—was left in a dirty, ruinous condition after the imperial visit.

In the garden of Sayes's court was a thick, prickly holly hedge, 400 feet long. This fine holly hedge was a source of great delight to Peter and his retinue in their drunken revelries.

They would get who-lhurrasses, and, putting a person in each, for wagers, charge the hedge. Peter himself was sometimes in the barrow; but the grandest attack of all was made by his Czarship, who in he drove the uncle of Prince Menzikoff four feet into the hedge and left him sticking there.

Evelyn's servant writes to him of their doings at Deptford:

"There is a house full of people and right nasty. The Czar lies in your Bed and Chamber. The dirty Dutch and R. The King is coming here to-day, and the best parlor is tolerably clean for him."

How the Monjiks Get Drunk.

Monjiks are curious when drunk. They hardly ever quarrel, but become affectionate and full of good nature. Their idea of drinking is to imbibe until they are quite insensible. When I was in Russia I had occasion to know one a month past to come and see me for leave to get drunk during two consecutive days. I can inquire, I found that on these conditions would a-self into a projecting doorway when they swept by with a rhythmical swing-ing gait, to the measure of the watch-ed melody. I waited until the crowd had melted into the distance, and then I made a beeline for the hotel.

A little sugar and a trifle of milk being added the luxury of the tea is soon perceived. Europeans drink tea in this fashion. The Chinaman never puts milk and sugar in his tea. The Russian follows this latter fashion, but adds lemon.

There is more tea used in America than in any other country in the world, and for this reason the consumer should be all the more careful in practicing the herb. There is no trick so that is finer than "the cup that cheers but does no inebriate" when the material used is honest. Inter Ocean.

WHATEVER is worth doing at all, is worth doing well.—Chesterfield.

The Bathman Was Ten Year.

During the progress of the funeral of a German in the Catholic Cemetery in San Francisco on Wash—ington street, along to steer flowers on the grave of her husband. Finding they were burying the Bath-man beside him she flew into a passion, and for a time it looked as though she was going to clear out the whole lot. Forgetting the sacred character of the place and the solemn services in progress, she violently apostrophized the funeral party in a blasphemous and vulgar language, to the horror and consternation of all present. Dennuis were made for the police, but none were to be found, and it was amid considerable excitement that the burial services were brought to a close.

THERE are 150,000 thieves in London known to the police, and 10,000 of the many policemen known to the thieves.

"Oh susans-i-night—
So fair and bright—"

But suppose a frightful attack of summer complaint set-es you in the middle of the lightful summer night; where are you? That depend-on whether or not you have a bottle of Peaky Davis' Pain Killer. Policeman Hunt, of Rochester, N. Y., says that his daughter and some of her school friends were thus attacked in a summer excursion place. Had it not been for the Pain Killer, that night might have been their last. When you pack your trunk for the seaside, remember that the emergence may arise in which you will suddenly need "Pain Killer."

"When this was repeated to Garfield he said that Mr. Gould ought to know that he entertained the same views that Mr. Gould did respecting the interests of these corporations, and he wanted Mr. Gould to be assured that, if elected president, and it should fall to his lot to nominate a member to the supreme bench, he would take care to appoint a man whose views in that regard were the same as his own. This was taken to Mr. Gould. He announced himself as entirely satisfied with it, but he made the gentle suggestion that it be placed in the form of a pledge and in writing. This was done and it is alleged that the pledge can be produced, as it is understood to have been committed to the keeping of a gentleman who holds it subject to the order of both parties. When Mr. Gould warranted up to the republican party himself and subscribed $150,000 as is expected to be shown before the investigating committee, this money was taken to Cleveland, Ohio, and there divided. Part of it was sent to Indiana and the rest was used in Ohio. Garfield subsequently nominated the man to whom the agreement had reference, Stanley Matthews, to the supreme bench and Gould telegraphed senator Plumb, urging him to secure Matthew's confirmation. Matthews was confirmed by one majority."

Porter and the "Pauper Labor of Europe."

One the best answers yet given to ex-tariff commissioner Porter's representations concerning the workingmen of England is contained in the following communication, signed "republican," and published in the Chicago Tribune:

Mr. Porter, the hired witness for the New York Tribune appears to have no difficulty in England in finding such evidence against free trade as he has been told to get. He is a good example of that paradox that a man may lie in speaking the literal truth. The examples of poverty and distress that he exhibits are no doubt correct, but his inferences and his insinuation that they are fairly representatives of the condition of English workingmen are false.

Born and reared among the working classes of England, my boyhood was spent in London during the years of the free-trade agitation; I was 20 years old when the free trade policy was adopted and the "protection" antiquity discarded forever. I have a vivid recollection of the social and moral condition of the working classes during the period when the the "protective" system oppressed the industry of Great Britain. After a thirty years' residence in America, I returned to England a short time ago, and could scarcely recognize the people, so great was their improvement under the operation of the enlightened system of free trade. I found the workingmen receiving much higher wages for less hours of labor, while the price of every article of food, clothing, and other necessaries had been correspondingly reduced. And yet individual cases of poverty could be found in every town in England if the detectives chose to search for them.

If the Chicago Tribune will send me over to England with instructions to find evidence of the wealth and comfort of the English workingman, I will guarantee to find it; if you instruct me to find the evidence of their extreme poverty and degradation, I agree to furnish that also. Tell me what sort of testimony you want, and I will bring it into court of riches, of poverty, of virtue or vice, of manly independence or abject servility just tell me what you want and you shall have it. I will earn my wages.

If the London Times will hire me to furnish similar testimony as to the social condition of the people in America, I can do so, and in both cases I will tell the literal truth; the lie will consist in the inference that my exceptional instances fairly represent the general condition. Within the last three weeks I have seen and heard more violent expressions of discontent from the workingmen of Chicago than I ever heard in England during the hungry agitation of forty years ago. Within that time, at a large meeting of more than 300 people, I have heard the condition of the workingmen of Chicago described by themselves as a condition of "wage-slavery." I heard one very intelligent man declare that more people had been evicted from their homes in Chicago on the 1st of May, for the crime of poverty, than had been evicted during the whole year in Ireland. I heard another man, a good speaker, too, say, with intense feeling, "I fought four years to free the black slaves of the South; I am now ready to fight to emancipate the white slaves of the North," and when the hopelessness of successful revolution was suggested, he admitted that monopoly was so strongly intrenched that it could not be overthrown by open fighting in the field, but he said: "We can use dynamite" and then the whole company burst into applause. He continued: "Because the Chicago Tribune denounces dynamite weak men flinch from its use, but dynamite is the remedy to put an end to our slavery," and again the meeting applauded. Now, Mr. Editor, if I should sell this testimony to the London Times as fair evidence of the condition of American workingmen, I should imitate the swift witness, Porter; I should constitute myself a liar for money, although the facts related would be true.

This meeting was not a secret one; it was not held in any out-of-the-way corner; it was open to everybody, and took place on the very same street where the Tribune is published. It adjourned in a somewhat electrical condition. As I was passing out a man whom I never saw before addressed me in a rather excited manner.

"They never touched the true cause of our trouble," he said; "never touched it at all."

"What is it?" I inquired.

"The infernal tariff," he replied; "that makes everything dear that we buy."

"Why didn't you tell them so?" I said.

"Because I didn't get a chance; there were so many of them trying to spark that the chairman didn't recognize me."

This man had worked out the solution of the problem by the arithmetic of his household expenses, as the workingmen of England did at last. If the mechanics of American could see that English mechanics of 1842 and contrast him with his son of 1883, they would not be deluded another minute by the sophistries of what is falsely called "protection."

I SCREAM.

Tell us not in mournful numbers
That this life is but a dream,
When a girl that weighs one hundred
Gets outside a quart of cream—
And then wants more.
—[Elmira Gazette.

Life is real, life is earnest,
And the girls know what they revel,
But on cream they are the biggest
Set to show their grit and greed.
No cheese.
—[New York Times.

Be not like dumb, driven cattle,
Be a hero in the strife;
Never with her mother battle,
Save the ice cream for your wife.
Proceed.
—[Brooklyn Eagle.

Let us, then, be up and doing,
With a heart for any fate;
But never let us go a-sowing
Girls that want another plate.
How's that?
—[Meriden Newsboy.

Lives of such girls all remind us,
As we float adown the stream,
That the boys who come behind us
Will have to pay for lots of cream.
Never!
—[Yonkers Statesman.

And, departing, leave another
Bill for unpaid plates of cream,
Which, perhaps, some forlorn brother,
Seeing, may take heart again,
And get trusted also.
—[New York E. R. Journal.

Not enjoyment, and not sorrow,
Is our destined end or way;
But to treat, though cash we borrow,
Deserted when we cease to pay.
—[Palmer Journal.

Trust no girl, however pleasant,
With one plate to be content;
She'll eat until her lover hasn't
To his name another cent.
And then shake him.
—[Somerville Journal.

The Civil Service Machine.

Noting the start of the "new patent nickle-plated, back-action, reversible, civil service machine," the New York World gives the following table of questions asked by the examiners:

ARITHMETIC.

Define addition, division and silence.

A clerk's salary is raised ten per cent. and the committee assess him twenty per cent. How much can he afford to spend on his vacation?

A contractor holds a statesman's note for $350 and loses it to the statesman at a game of poker. How much does the contractor gain?

Reduce £868 17s. 6d. to trade dollars.

The principal of the national debt is $1,800,000,000, and the annual interest six per cent.; if the rate of interest is reduced to three and one-half per cent., how many houses can be built on Wall street and Broadway out of the saving?

A ship costs $1,200,000, and a patriot contracts to build it for $900,000; how many extras will he need to clear 100 per cent. profit after dividing with the department?

Explain the meaning of the following numerical expressions: "320," "306," "8 to 7," "4-11-44."

A scantor draws a salary of $5,000 a year and spends $6,000. In how many years will he be worth a million?

Twenty clerks in a postoffice receive salaries of $100 a month each. How long will an assessment of two per cent. support the grand old party?

Divide forty barrels of flour, 200 blankets, 800 pounds of cheese, and eight boxes tooth-picks among 700 Indians, and how much will the remainder be and what will the agent do with it?

GEOGRAPHY.

How far is it from Niobrara to Washington by a star route?

Name six leading Indian agencies and give estimated stealings of each.

How many square miles of railroad grants can be surveyed in the remaining territory of the government?

Where is Sing Sing? Joliet? What noted men live there and what industries do they pursue?

Name six principal rivers and harbors and the estimated appropriations of each.

HISTORY.

Give some account of the life and opinions of Garfield, including his opinion on the DeGolyer paving contract.

State what you know of Oakes Ames and of his aims and honors.

Who was Eliza Pinkston?

Sketch the life of the rag baby.

Give some account of the voyages and discoveries of Columbus Delano among the land grants of the west.

POLITICS.

Who organized the treasury department, and how did he come to die poor?

Name six prominent carpet-baggers and give some sketches of their penitentiary life.

Define a returning board.

What are the functions of a visiting statesman?

How are the judges of the supreme court chosen, and how much does a choice cost?

ENGLISH LITERATURE.

Spell the following words: "Freud," "ring," "star," "route," "crooked," "bose," "contract," "steal."

Write a letter to the governor of your state, requesting the office of inspector of beeswax, and give appropriate primary references.

Recite the declaration of independence if you can.

Give a resume of the Mulligan letters, of the Morey letter.

Would you begin a letter "Mr Dear Hubbell" or "My Dear Mr. Hubbell" "My Dear Dorsey" or "My Dear Mr. Dorsey?" And if so, why not?

A Fair Sample.

The Detroit Free Press of Wednesday calls attention to the fact that newspaper organs of the monopolists naturally, have no sympathy with the strike of the telegraph operators: The sneerings accredited to the Post & Tribune are entirely in harmony with their actions on the occasion of a strike in their own office, and which will be remembered for years by many good printers:

The Detroit Post and Tribune is the organ of wealthy monopolists. Its sympathies are naturally with the members of its high and mighty order, and when the public universally sympathizes with the operators in their struggle with the arrogance and greed of their employers, and wishes them success, the monopolist newspapers, the mouthpieces of a few rich men who, in words of Wm. H. Vanderbilt, "don't care a d—d for public opinion," have made themselves odious by their superserviceable zeal in making war upon the strikers. The Post like several of its monopolists contemporaries, has from the outset sneered at the strikers; belittled their cause; derided their grievances; reproached them for their discontent, and, by clipping and garbling from its exchanges, arrayed against them all the hostile expressions that have found their way into print. Few, indeed, are the strikes where the occasion for striking, the excess of the demands, the unfair and riotous conduct of the strikers, the vagueness of their discontent, have not alienated or suppressed the public sympathy. But this one, exceptional in its calmness, its regularity of method, its temperate and self-controlled conduct, has evoked the heartiest approval. Notwithstanding its merits the organs of monopoly have treated it with the same heat, the same contumely, the same discouragements, denunciation and rebuke, as if the strikers were murdering those willing to work, burning property and terrifying communities with riot and bloodshed. This proves that no cause can be just enough, no demand personable enough, no strikers sufficiently decent, intelligent and well-behaved to placate or conciliate a monopolist. Like the king who rules by divine right, the monopolist is aggrieved, not merely by the ingratitude and insolence of rebellion, but by the audacity that dares question his supreme power to ride roughshod over every right and interest that does not contribute to his own importance, wealth and greatness. And the monopolist organs show clearly that the offense of the operators is not, as is often the case, in asking for extravagant wages, and in demanding them with violence and riot, but daring to ask at all.

Cheering Auguries.

To show the feeling among prominent democrats in the union respecting the course which the party should pursue in future, and also the general belief that the republican party is doomed to certain defeat at the next presidential election, we quote as follows: Congressman Hunt, of Louisiana, says:

"It is clear that, in order to succeed as it ought the democracy is obliged to be united, and must be conservative and wise. It must be faithful to the teachings of the fathers of the republic and to the principles of the American constitutional government. It must be temperate and prudent. It must be practical to be strong. It must be just to all interests, and entirely national—the party representing the power of the body of the whole people, and upholding their rights, interests and honor."

Congressman Lowry of Indiana, says:

"Let the democratic party now manifest its loyalty to the principals inculcated by its founders; let the councils of wisdom, coolness and conservatism, associated with a bold determined and aggressive policy, prevail, and this country may now be restored to a condition of purity and prosperity under democratic rule, akin to that of other days, and in view of our territorial expansion, unexampled for grandeur and simplicity of administration."

Congressman Caldwell, of Tennessee, attributes democratic defeats in the past very largely to personal animosity; but "nothing in the past, present or future action of the democracy, whether dissensions among our chiefs, or possible blunders of our statesmen, will avail to prevent that change of administration of national affairs which has been predetermined by the American people." Ex-senator Doolittle, of Wisconsin, takes the most encouraging view of the political situation, and Congressman Holman, of Indiana, regards "the times most propitious for the friends of free and honest government, who stand by the landmarks of the fathers." Hundreds of other equally prominent men express themselves in a similar manner. All agree that the times never were so auspicious for the success of the democracy in the next national campaign since the birth of the republican party.—[Chippewa Democrat.

The Republican Resolve.

The republication by Mr. Dorsey of his story of the negotiations with Garfield and of his management of the Garfield campaign has made a deep impression on the republicans, and they have inwardly resolved never to trust Dorsey again. They are like the old toper who heard of the death of his chum from the combustion of his breath caused by blowing out a candle, and who thereupon sent for a bible and solemnly swore thereon never—to blow out a candle. [New York World.

Ernest Longfellow, the poet's son, has made a selection of twenty of his father's poems, which he will illustrate. The subjects are mostly landscapes, and the pictures will be made of the scenes themselves. [New York Post.

The appraisal of the property of the poet Longfellow shows a value about $850,000, of which $200,000 is personal property and $150,000 real estate.

I heard another man, a good speaker, too, say, with intense feeling, "I fought four years to free the black slaves of the South; I am now ready to fight to emancipate the white slaves of the North;" and when the hopelessness of successful revolution was suggested, he admitted that meagerly was so strongly intrenched that it could not be overthrown by open fighting in the field, but he said: "We can use dynamite;" and then the whole company burst into applause. He continued: "Because the Chicago Tribune denounces dynamite weak men flinch from its use, but dynamite is the remedy to put an end to our slavery;" and again the meeting applauded. Now, Mr. Editor, if I should sell this testimony to the London Times as fair evidence of the condition of American workingmen, I should imitate the swift witness, Porter; I should constitute myself a liar for money, although the facts related would be true.

This meeting was not a secret one; it was not held in any out-of-the-way corner; it was open to everybody, and took place on the very same street where the Tribune is published. It adjourned in a somewhat excited condition. As I was passing out a man whom I never saw before addressed me in a rather excited manner.

"They never touched the true cause of our trouble," he said; "never touched it at all."

"What is it?" I inquired.

"The infernal tariff," he replied; "that makes everything dear that we buy."

"Why didn't you tell them so?" I said.

"Because I didn't get a chance; there were so many of them trying to speak that the chairman didn't recognize me."

This man had worked out the solution of the problem by the arithmetic of his household expenses, as the workingmen of England did at last. If the mechanics of America could see that English mechanic of 1843 and contrast him with his son of 1883, they would not be deluded another minute by the sophistries of what is falsely called "protection."

I SCREAM.

Tell us not in mournful numbers
That this life is but a dream,
When a girl that weighs one hundred
Gets outside a quart of cream—
And then wants more.

—[Elmira Gazette.

Life is real, life is earnest,
And the girls know what they need,
But on cream they are the biggest
Set to show their grit and greed.
No excuse.

—[New York Times.

Be not like dumb, driven cattle.
Be a hero in the strife;
Never with her mother battle,
Save the ice cream for your wife.
Proceed.

—[Brooklyn Eagle.

Let us, then, be up and doing,
With a heart for any fate;
But never let us go a-wooing
Girls that want another plate.
How's that?

—[Meriden Newsdom.

Lives of such girls all remind us,
As we feast across the stream,
That the boys who come behind us
Will have to pay for lots of cream.
Newsed.

—[Yonkers Statesman.

And, departing, leave another
Bill for unpaid plates of cream,
Which, perhaps, some fathers brother,
Seeing, may take heart again.
And get trusted also.

Not unpleasant, and not sorrow,
Is our destined end or way;
But to treat, though each we borrow,
Dearest when we cease to pay.
Don't it?

—[Palmer Journal.

Trust no girl, however pleasant,
With one plate to be content;
She'll eat until her lover hasn't
To his name another cent.
And then shake him.

—[Somerville Journal.

The Civil Service Machine.

Noting the start of the "new patent nickle-plated, back-action, reversible, civil service machine," the New York World gives the following table of questions asked by the examiners:

ARITHMETIC.

Define addition, division and silence.

A clerk's salary is raised ten per cent. and the committee assess him twenty per cent. How much can he afford to spend on his vacation?

A contractor holds a statesman's note for $950 and loses it to the statesman at a game of poker. How much does the contractor gain?

Reduce £868 17s. 6d. to trade dollars.

The principal of the national debt is $1,800,000,000, and the annual interest six per cent.; if the rate of interest is reduced to three and one-half per cent., how many houses can be built on Wall street and Broadway out of the saving?

A ship costs $1,200,000, and a patriot contracts to build it for $900,000; how many extras will he need to clear 100 per cent. profit after dividing with the department?

Explain the meaning of the following numerical expressions: "220," "306," "8 to 7," "4-11-44."

A senator draws a salary of $5,000 a year and spends $6,000. In how many years will he be worth a million?

Twenty clerks in a postoffice receive salaries of $100 a month each. How long will an assessment of two per cent. support the grand old party?

Divide forty barrels of flour, 200 blankets, 800 pounds of cheese, and eight boxes tooth-picks among 700 Indians, and how much will the remainder be and what will the agent do with it?

GEOGRAPHY.

How far is it from Niobrara to Washington by a star route?

Name six leading Indian agencies and give estimated stealings of each.

How many square miles of railroad grants can be surveyed in the remaining territory of the government?

Where is Sing Sing? Joliet? What noted men live there and what industries do they pursue?

Name six principal rivers and harbors and the estimated appropriations of each.

HISTORY.

Give some account of the life and opinions of Garfield, including his opinion on the DeGolyer paving contract.

State what you know of Oakes Ames and of his aims and hoaxes.

Who was Eliza Pinkston?

Sketch the life of the rag baby.

Give some account of the voyages and discoveries of Columbus Delano among the land grants of the west.

POLITICS.

Who organized the treasury department, and how did he come to die poor?

Name six prominent carpet-baggers and give some sketches of their penitentiary life.

Define a returning board.

What are the functions of a visiting statesman?

How are the judges of the supreme court chosen, and how much does a choice cost?

ENGLISH LITERATURE.

Spell the following words: "Fraud," "ring," "stair," "route," "crooked," "hoss," "cabinet," "steal."

Write a letter to the governor of your state, requesting the office of inspector of beeswax, and give appropriate primary references.

Read the declaration of independence if you can.

Give a resume of the Mulligan letters of the Morey letter.

Would you begin a letter "Mr Dear Hubbell" or "My Dear Mr. Hubbell?" "My Dear Dorsey" or "My Deur Mr. Dorsey?" And if so, why not?

A Fair Sample.

The Detroit Free Press of Wednesday calls attention to the fact that newspaper organs of the monopolists naturally, have no sympathy with the strike of the telegraph operators: The same papers assailed by the Post & Tribune are entirely in harmony with their actions on the occasion of a strike in their own office, and which will be remembered for years by many good printers:

The Detroit Post and Tribune is the organ of wealthy monopolists. Its sympathies are naturally with the members of its high and mighty order; and when the public universally sympathizes with the operators in their struggle with the arrogance and greed of their employers, and wishes them success, the monopolist newspapers, the mouthpieces of a few rich men who, in words of Wm. H. Vanderbilt, "don't care a d—d for public opinion," have made themselves odious by their supererviceable zeal in making war upon the strikers. The Post like several of its monopolists contemporaries, has from the outset sneered at the strikers; belittled their cause; derided their grievances; reproached them for their discontent, and, by clipping and garbling from its exchanges, arrayed against them all the hostile expressions that have found their way into print. Few, indeed, are the strikes where the occasion for striking, the excess of the demands, the unfair and riotous conduct of the strikers, the vagueness of their discontent, have not alienated or suppressed the public sympathy. But this one, exceptional in its calmness, its regularity of method, its temperate and selfcontrolled conduct, has evoked the heartiest approval. Notwithstanding its merits the organs of monopoly have treated it with the same heat, the same contumely, the same discouragements, denunciation and rebuke, as if the strikers were murdering those willing to work, burning property and terrifying communities with riot and bloodshed. This proves that no cause can be just enough, no demand reasonable enough, no strikers sufficiently decent, intelligent and well-behaved to placate or conciliate a monopolist. Like the king who rules by divine right, the monopolist is aggrieved, not merely by the ingratitude and insolence of rebellion, but by the audacity that dares question his supreme power to ride roughshod over every right and interest that does not contribute to his own importance, wealth and greatness. And the monopolist organs show clearly that the offense of the operators is not, as is often the case, in asking for extravagant wages, and in demanding them with violence and riot, but daring to ask at all.

Cheering Augories.

To show the feeling among prominent democrats in the nation respecting the course which the party should pursue in future, and also the general belief that the republican party is doomed to certain defeat at the next presidential election, we quote as follows: Congressmann Hunt, of Louisiana, says:

"It is clear that, in order to succeed as it ought the democracy is obliged to be united, and must be conservative and wise. It must be faithful to the teachings of the fathers of the republic and to the principles of the American constitutional government. It must be temperate and prudent. It must be practical to be strong. It must be just to all interests, and entirely nationalthe party representing the power of the body of the whole people, and upholding their rights, interests and honor."

Congressman Lowry of Indiana, says:

"Let the democratic party, now manifest its loyalty to the principals inculcated by its founders, let the councils of wisdom, coolness and conservatism, combined with a bold determined and aggressive policy, prevail, and this country may now be restored in a condition of purity and prosperity under democratic rule, akin to that of other days, and in view of our territorial expansion, unexampled for grandeur and simplicity of administration.

Congressman Caldwell, of Tennessee, attributes democratic defeats in the past very largely to personal animosity; but "nothing in the past, present or future action of the democracy, whether dissensions among our chiefs, or possible blunders of our statesmen, will avail to prevent that change of administration of national affairs which has been predetermined by the American people." Ex-senator Doolittle, of Wisconsin, takes the most encouraging view of the political situation, and Congressman Holman, of Indiana, regards "the times most propitious for the friends of free and honest government, who stand by the landmarks of the fathers." Hundreds of other equally prominent men express themselves in a similar manner. All agree that the times never were so auspicious for the success of the democracy in the next national campaign since the birth of the republican party.—[Chippewa Democrat.

The Republican Resolve.

The republication by Mr. Dorsey of his story of the negotiations with Garfield and of his management of the Garfield campaign has made a deep impression on the republicans, and they have inwardly resolved never to trust Dorsey again. They are like the old toper who heard of the death of his chum from the combustion of his breath caused by blowing out a candle, and who thereupon sent for a bible and solemnly swore thereon never—to blow out a candle. [New York World.

Ernest Longfellow, the poet's son, has made a selection of twenty of his father's poems, which he will illustrate. The subjects are mostly landscapes, and the pictures will be made of the scenes themselves. [New York Post.

The appraisal of the property of the past Longfellow shows a value about $350,000, of which $200,000 is personal property and $150,000 real estate.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

FLAMES nearly extinguished the town of Eglintah, Pa. The loss is estimated at about $500,000.

SEVERAL cases of Texas fever are reported to have developed at Boston among cattle brought from Worcester, and the State Board of Cattle Commissioners will forbid the bringing in of any more stock from the Lone Star State....Binns, Curtis & Co., mercantile and label printers and stationers, Boston, have suspended. The liabilities are said to be some $120,000, of which $75,000 is secured by the indorsement of Curtis Guthrie.... E. W. Hoffman & Co., cotton goods, of New York, have failed for $500,000. The collapse created a sensation in the cotton circles....An assignment has been filed by the Manchester Iron and Steel Company, of Pittsburgh, whose capital stock is $500,000.

EIGHT more suits for damages for injuries in the accident on Decoration Day have been begun in New York city against the Brooklyn & Queens Transit Company. The total claims amount to $40,000.

THE Mercer (Needle Library" building, New York, was almost totally destroyed by fire. The loss is estimated at $200,000. Several persons narrowly escaped death, having been rescued by the firemen on the roof and eighth floor of the building.... A coincidentally cruel story of money was sent to Bonanza in a letter to Secretary Teller will recognize as an appropriation of at least $5,000 to buy provisions for the starved men. The Amusement Association of Boston and Worcester, about one hundred on an excursion at Rutland, Ohio, with an attendance of 1,000.

THE Village of Onondaga, Mich., suffered great damage by a cyclone. Near Jerome Mrs. Barnes was killed. Limbs of trees were carried in palpable masses. At Rapids the house of Eugene Henry was blown down, three children were killed and their parents hurt, and the father being fatally injured.

A PARIS telegram from Denver says of the commotion that was found in that county. "Information has been received here that L. J. Dean, the County Clerk, who was wounded in the late fight between the assisted sheriff and the partisans of Grand county, is dead. His wounds were of a fatal character, and he died from the effects of the fatal shot. Dean was a prominent citizen of Grand county, and his death is a loss to the community. Those who took part in the fight will be arrested for the murder of Dean, and will be brought to Denver for trial. Governor Routt has ordered a company of militia to Grand county, and the sheriff will have no trouble in arresting the murderers."

HON. GINERY TWICHELL, well known throughout the Union as a railway President and Congressman, died at Brookline, Mass....Fifth men entered a furnace at Lesden, N. Y., in construct a new dump. and were crushed to death by the fall of the brick and mortar. A young Philadelphian was rocked to China when a message to his parents to come into of a passenger for a dance one missed Maggie Summerfield. He returned at work with a stake of $7,000, and married the girl of his first choice.

CHARLES E. UPTON, President of the defunct City Bank of Rochester, has been sent to the county penitentiary for six months, under the new criminal code, for overdrafts to his accounts. It will be remembered that his self-speculations cost the bank $50,000....A private fight was broken up in a coal town near Wilkesbarre, Pa., by a party of armed women.

THE WEST.

A TORNADO, having its origin somewhere in the region of Huron, Dakota, swept across a large tract of country intervening between that point and the Mississippi river, killing several people and destroying an amount of property. Its track was from one to two miles wide. In the vicinity of Huron nine persons are reported killed and a great many wounded. Leaving Dakota the cyclone entered Minnesota, and crossed Blue Earth, Waseca, Steele, Dodge, Olmsted and Wabasha counties. The number of persons killed as yet reported is as known, Blue Earth county, three persons. Steele county, three at Manterville, Dodge county, and at Erin, in Wabasha county. At Elgin one woman was fatally and a man and woman severely injured. Near Monteville two people were killed outright and others severely hurt; a number of houses and barns were demolished. Near Hitchcock, a man and his sander were killed by the falling timbers of their house. Near Bedford, but one woman was killed. In the vicinity of Exeda and Owatonna, Minn., numbers of houses were demolished and several people injured, some probably fatally. At the store Buda, barn, store-building and portable building in Nodden were been down. Further down, found a Northwestern train was caught up by the cyclone and hurled from the track and overturned. About fifty passengers were injured, many of them very severely. The damage to crops by the tornado is estimated at nearly a million dollars.

BY the lassoing the western portion of their reservation the Arapahoe and Cheyenne will receive $150,000 per annum in money and cattle. Inside this year have resulted in stockraising of money was subscribed in New York at a meeting of California local to put their brethren more in arms. Gen. Hancock has ordered to go to the front and direct military operations.

Wanted A Railroad.

The greatest need of this community is a railroad giving quick and sure connections with the east and south. Here is a county as rich in resources as any in the lower peninsula, shut in from the outside world during the close of water navigation, with no communication whatever except the uncertain and unreliable stage mail. Here are a few thousand people doing a business which, during water navigation, runs way up into the millions, and with a railroad could be more than doubled. Here is one of the best harbors on lake Michigan, on a direct line from Detroit to the upper peninsula, lying unimproved, while other less favorable places are being improved all and more than they will ever be made to pay. Here is a point which would give, on a line of transportation to Escanaba and the mining districts, at least one month more for active business than any point further north. Here are fourteen large saw mills on Pine lake, depending entirely on summer shipments, whose business could be greatly increased, if not doubled, with winter transportation added. Here are millions of feet of first-quality hardwood timber, awaiting the slow, easy going water transportation, which, with a rail connection east, might be turned into cash in half the time. Here is a rich agricultural district, the basis of all wealth, awaiting only a quick transportation to a sure and steady market to insure its fullest development. Here is a spot unsurpassed in natural beauty and advantages to the pleasure-seeker, whose cool and invigorating climate will give renewed life and activity to the over worked merchant and mechanic, or the frail and careworn housewife. All this and more, yet no railroad.

Efforts have been made in the past to bring the attention of railroad officials to our resources and advantages, but so far without encouraging results.

The Toledo and Ann Arbor road is seeking a terminus on lake Michigan, and other towns are competing with our own in presenting advantages.

The Michigan Central, too, would like to strike the lake somewhere in this vicinity, but they are slow to decide.

The Toledo and Ann Arbor road is now built to Howell, and in its extension northward it could be made to strike the county seat of nearly every county through which it passed. With a northern terminus at Charlevoix it would get not only a good local traffic but a permanent through traffic, in the winter a large freight business which must now wait for spring, and in the summer the thousands of pleasure seekers from the east and south who now come by a more indirect and circuitous route.

A line from some point on the L. L. & S. northern extension would doubtless be the shortest to build, and while it would be of little more benefit to Charlevoix than the Toledo route in giving us direct connection with the trunk lines to the east, it would be a benefit to Detroit business. Goods which now come from Chicago by boat in the summer, and in the winter any way they can get them, would come from Detroit all the time by reason of the certain and speedy transportation.

Last spring a meeting of our business men was held, a statement drawn up giving facts and figures, unnecessarily signed, and a copy forwarded to the officers of each of these roads, but so far as we can learn they have given the matter no action. What they may be considering or preparing to do we are unable to say. We believe if they select and build their road to any other point on lake Michigan than Charlevoix they will see their mistake, possibly when it is too late.

In another article we shall give a few figures to show that Charlevoix county is one of the richest in resources in the lower peninsula.

The great strike of telegraph operators still unsettled.

As Others See Us.

The Charlevoix JOURNAL, a new weekly of democratic persuasion, has made its appearance. It is edited and published by Chas. J. Strang, late of Lansing. He is an industrious young man, for whose success his many friends will hope. [Detroit News.

It is five column quarto, bright and newsy, and radical in politics. We think Mr. Strang will make a success of his enterprise. [Petoskey Record.

Barring politics we wish the new paper success. [Antrim Co. Herald.

It is a neat five column quarto, but its politics are terrible. [Elmira Gazette.

Filled with choice local and general news. [Elk Rapids Progress.

The people of that shire should give it liberal patronage, and thus enable the publisher to continue to give his paper the fine appearance and large amount of reading of the initial number. [Mich. Trade Journal, Grand Rapids.

The first number of the Charlevoix JOURNAL made its appearance last week, and our failure to notice it in these columns was due to circumstances well known to our readers. The JOURNAL is a handsomely printed five-column quarto, and has every appearance of being a good paper. Mr. Strang understands his business, and will succeed. [Charlevoix Sentinel.

The first number of the Charlevoix JOURNAL has reached us, published by Chas. J. Strang, formerly of this office. It comes out in fine shape, and is democratic in politics. Mr. Strang is one of the most steady and honorable of men, and with such an exhilirating atmosphere as northern Michigan affords, will put nerve into the work sufficient to make it abundantly successful. Our best wishes are with the JOURNAL and its publisher. [Charlotte Leader.

No. 1 of the Charlevoix JOURNAL published by our old friend C. J. Strang, finds a welcome place upon our table. It is a five column quarto, printed from new type, overflowing with fresh local and general news, and presents as fine an appearance as any paper in the state. Charlie knows how, and will keep it up in first-class style. The JOURNAL is well worthy the patronage and support of every democrat in Charlevoix county and we trust will receive it. [Gratiot Co. Democrat.

Notes and News.

Bankrupting for United States senator continues in New Hampshire, with little change from day to day.

The best exchange we get at present is the Chippewa Democrat, as is shown by its appearance after the regular weekly encounter with the editorial shears.

We have been sending sample copies of the JOURNAL to a few whose names were recommended by their friends. We will esteem it a favor if they notify us by postal card or in some other manner if they do or do not want it.

Three pardons were granted by the governor on July 26th. It would be much cheaper if his excellency would discharge the judges and shut up the court rooms, thus saving many expensive and tedious trials besides no end of heart-aches. What are laws and courts for, anyway?

The losses resulting from the great strike will turn the attention of the people to postal telegraphy, where there can be no such general stoppage of business. Now, was not the whole thing forced on by the monopolists as they can unload their watered stock upon the government?

The republican journals have already begun compounding their campaign whitewash for 1884, with the Detroit Post & Tribune well to the front. It is a pretty good encyclopedia for papers of lesser importance to consult in their search for the true type of republican literature.

If our democratic friends throughout the county will make a little extra effort just now in the matter of subscriptions, they will confer a greater benefit than any amount of help will give later on. We want a good list of names, and any small amount of cash is acceptable, if you cannot pay the year in advance.

The bids for the state printing for two years commencing Jan. 1, 1884, were opened last Wednesday, and the contract awarded to P. L. George and George Jerome. The bids were opened and read in a manner to give entire satisfaction to all competing but unsuccessful bidders. Chas. N. Ayers, of Detroit, gets the contract for furnishing stationery.

Mr. Geo. M. Chester has purchased the Detroit Chaff, and Lloyd Breezee steps down and out. Chaff is supported chiefly by the dramatic profession. It has been very successful, financially, and Mr. Chester is said to be abundantly able to keep it up to its present high standing. Mr. Breezee is one of the firm who are to start a two cent evening daily in Detroit. We hope he will be as successful in his new venture as in the old.

Dorsey's disclosures have created consternation in the camp of the republicans, and they are undecided whether to repudiate him or not. To call him a great thief and rascal, which he is, would be base ingratitude, for his methods and management elected their candidate to the presidential chair. They would much rather give him his old place as manager than echo the popular cry "imprison the rascal and his confederates."

"Turn the rascals out!" Why, certainly. They were turned out twenty-two years ago, when they had knocked the bottom out of the treasury, sent the navy to the ends of the earth, and, could the last democratic secretary of war have had his way, would have sent the army to join it. The rascals were very effectually turned out, and they'll have to struggle hard to get in again. [Harper's Weekly And as the republican party seem to be doing pretty much the same thing now, it is but fair the rising generation should "turn the rascals out."

Another fool has met his deserts by attempting to trifle with the great Niagara. Capt. Matthew Webb, an English swimmer, made an attempt last Wednesday to swim the Niagara river whirlpool rapids, and was engulfed. His body was found floating in the river a short distance below Lewiston, N. Y., on Saturday. On the top of the head was a ragged cut, evidently inflicted by a rock, of itself sufficient to cause death. The body was coffined and removed in a hearse to Suspension Bridge, N. Y., where it will be prepared for shipment to Boston, where Mrs. Webb is at present residing.

Taken altogether, Dorsey's disclosures make up as black a record of political villainy against the republican party as it is possible to conceive of. When we add to this the rotten-ness unmasked in the administrations of Grant the outrageous steals perpetrated by ex-secretary of the navy Robeson the corruption of ex-postmaster general Creswell the whisky ring disclosures and the ten thousand other rascally doings which have been brought home time and again to the republican party the self-styled "party of purity" a misnomer for "party of putridity" we think it is indeed about time to have a change. [Chippewa Democrat.

A reunion of the John Morgan confederation was held at Lexington, Ky., last week. Several hundred members of that force were in camp on a part of the estate of Henry Clay in tents furnished by the war department. Jefferson Davis was invited, but sent a letter saying that ill health prevented him from attempting the fatigue of so long a journey and the excitement of so joyous an occasion. He continued: "The name of your association is eloquently commemorative of the daring deeds performed, of the dire suffering borne and the barbarous indignities inflicted on men who had bravely struggled in equal combat to vindicate the rights their fathers left them.

The Buffalo Courier comments as follows upon the Dorsey exposures: "We rise from the perusal of this miserable narrative with the conviction that Garfield had no moral right to persecute Dorsey; that Arthur had no moral right to prosecute him. He was the hero of a shameful and venal canvass, in which the leaders of the party bargained for the spoils of office, assessed the government employes, blackmailed monopolists, accepted the body of thieves and purchased the vote of a state. And the whole organization approved of the work. Dorsey should be restored to the pedestal on which the speechmakers at the Delmonico dinner set him. He is the typical republican politician of this generation; and if the party is fit to be in power he is certainly fit to sit in its high places. It is to his credit that he refused a cabinet office when others were engaged in a wild scramble for spoils, and that although threatened with disgrace and the punishment of a felon where others were only threatened with the loss of patronage, he took little share in the quarrel that culminated in the murder of the president."

The Law that Monopoly Wants.

The proposition of the New York Evening Post, that strikes by telegraph employes should be prohibited by law, is the most honest and outspoken statement we have yet seen of the monopoly position.

Unfortunately, however, it is too vague and indefinite. A law which merely prohibits an employe of a telegraph company from leaving the company because of any difference of opinion concerning wages, or other conditions of employment, is good enough as far as it goes; but it does not go far enough. It does not make provision for cases of departure when the operator alleges as the cause the illness of himself or family, or any other reason not connected with wages. A law which fails to provide for a full investigation in such cases to see whether the employe is shamming or not, is obviously imperfect. Provision should be made also to prevent the employe leaving on account of old age or a desire to retire after a long accumulation of salary.

Even when this is done the law will still be insufficient in dealing only with those actually in service. Something should be done to enable the telegraph corporations to fill vacancies occasioned by death from starvation, overwork, or other causes. A law empowering any telegraph company which dispensed with Charlevoix and intend to return a little later in the season.

Miss Stella Keyser went to Whitewater, Wis., on Tuesday.

Dr. H. P. Snyder returned from Denver, Colo., last Friday.

E. S. Pratt, of Traverse City, was in Charlevoix last Friday.

A. S. Gale and wife returned to their home in Albion last Friday.

Mr. H. A. Jersey, of Boyne, was in Charlevoix Tuesday on legal business.

Mr. W. C. Nelson, of the Leelanau Enterprise, gave the JOURNAL a brief call last Saturday.

J. L. Reigle supervisor of Chandler, gave us a friendly call and reports everything favorably.

W. M. Beach, wife and son, of Howell, are the guests of A. D. Cruickshank, to remain a week or more.

Mrs. Ruth Bedford, who has been visiting friends at beaver Island a short time, returned home last week.

Miss Katie Lovelace, of West Duncey, Wis., is at Frank Shanbut's, and will probably remain all summer.

Mr. James L. Pitts, of Grand Rapids, has been spending a few days in our city, and while here registered at the Fountain City house.

Mr. Harrison Miller, of Beaver Island, was in Charlevoix a few days last week, and returned home on the Lawrence Sunday evening.

Charles Chalupka and J. A. Cunningham returned Tuesday evening from Texas where they purchased twenty five horses, which will be here in a few days.

Mr. D. A. Lapham, of Rockford, brother of the popular landlord of the Fountain City house, is here for a week or more, enjoying the pleasures of the vicinity.

Mr. C. E. Blakely and wife, and their daughter Fannie, of Coopersville, who have been a stopping for a few days in Charlevoix at the Fountain City house, left Tuesday evening to attend the camp meeting at Bay View.

The wife, daughter, and grandchildren of barber inspector Jas. Corbett are stopping temporarily at the Fountain City. They may conclude to remain until he can complete his work and return home with them.

Mr. O. C. Ainsworth, wife, and daughter, of Sandwich, Ill., are stopping at the Fountain City for the summer. Mr. A. is largely engaged in the real estate business. They are well pleased with our town as a summer resort.

Messrs. S. Van Holsteen, John Tramp, M. V. Beiger, Joseph DeLorme, H. D. Hughes and James Wellver, of Mishawaka, Ind., made a short visit to Charlevoix, stopping at the Fountain City house. They were very much pleased with Charlevoix and intend to return a little later in the season.

Miss Effie Johns and the Elfin star combination played an engagement of two nights at the opera house this week, but on account of severe rain storm each evening, they did not get as good houses as on their previous engagement. Teachers should not forget the institute to be held in Charlevoix next week, commencing Monday, 6th.

The new furniture made for Cruickshank & Grier is in harmony with the finish of their rooms,—ash oiled.

The man who wants to keep posted in the affairs of the county cannot do so without taking his county paper.

Improvement is the word at the resorts, not only in grounds and buildings, but moral and social culture.

On section eighteen, Hayes township are several cedar trees over three feet in diameter, growing on high and dry ground.

The floor and foundation of the new boiler works of Joseph Hyland is finished, and work is being pushed as fast as possible.

Piles were driven this week for a new dock on the lot east of the machine shop. We understand it is for the use of the Belvidere.

The Cassopis Democrat for July 19 has nearly a full page of illustrations and description of Mackinac, which it styles "the fairy Isle."

Owing to a pressure of freight business, the passenger service of Addis' narrow gauge railroad has been discontinued until next season.

The Muscelon Herald is now a six-column quarto, and is printed on a new power press. It is a clean, business-like sheet, and a credit to the town in which it is published.

The lake was too rough this morning for a tug to go out to the Fountain City, consequently the coal land no freight or passengers. This is but one of the uncertainties of water navigation.

Mr. D. C. Nettleton has on hand a few of the old reliable studebaker wagons which he desires to close out at once. Those in want of a wagon will do well to call on him, as he advertises bottom prices.

The resorts are fast filling up, many pleasure seekers arriving on every boat. All who come here speak well of our town, and many promise to come another year, bring their families and stay all summer.

Mr. J. E. Zaak, of Greenville, is about to establish himself in the merchant tailoring trade in Charlevoix. He comes well recommended, and will no doubt build up a profitable business. We wish him success.

On Tuesday morning Messrs. Cruickshank & Grier put into their new rooms in the Bowers block a fine new safe, purchased of the Detroit Safe Co., through their agent, Mr. Edwin A. Lee, on his recent visit to Charlevoix.

It is impossible for ye local to know everything that is going on, especially as he is a stranger in the town, but if persons making improvements or additions to their property will inform the office he will be pleased to give them a notice.

Carpenter Bartholomew & Co., will probably advertise in the JOURNAL as soon as their business is sufficiently begun to warrant the outlay. Messrs. M. See, Mason & Co., they say they have more business than they can attend to without advertising.

Mr. Geo. Durance is now manager of the livery stable recently owned by A. A. Cameron, and those in want of horses for riding or driving will find him ever ready to please. He has at present twelve good horses, also a first-class outfit of carriages, harness and saddles, etc.

Our readers will miss from our advertising columns this week the artistic typographical cross of Upright, Emrey & Co., that firm having decided to avail themselves of the benefits of the business A-B-C column. Mr. Draper, the artist, may stop a long time before he constructs another to beat it.

Mr. Joseph Beauvais has purchased of Dr. Cramer the beach and boat house in the rear of the drug store, and will continue the business. He has as present thirteen good boats, and will add more from time to time as necessity demands. He fattens also to erect a larger shop, when he will be prepared to do anything in the line of bathing and repairing, and guarantee first-class work.

When you see the local newspaper well filled with cards of professional men and advertisements of business men, you can mark it down that their town is a live and growing town, but when the advertising columns of the paper are unoccupied you always feel instinctively that that town is as dead as a nail. And it is the surest way by which to judge a town.—[Muscelon Herald.

The announcement of A. J. McLeod will be found in our advertising columns. In buying meat at his market, the customer will notice that he has not only a neat, clean market, but the meat blocks, counter, scales, etc., are behind a screen, thus preventing any contact of flies or other insects with the meat. Farmers who have hides, pelts, or fat to sell will find a member that he advertises to pay the highest market price in cash.

The East Jordan Enterprise came out last week enlarged to a six-column quarto, but we must confess not at all improved in appearance. It has a little more reading matter on its first page than usual, but just a line on either the fourth, fifth, or eighth pages. This is not a fair deal to the advertisers. The reader will glance at the page, and finding nothing but advertisements will at once lay the paper aside, or perhaps turn to the "patent" side where it is well edited and printed.

The excursion to Mackinac Island on the steamer Exeter, under the auspices of the East Jordan band was well attended and all seemed to be satisfied with their trip. The lake was a little too much to be pleasant, causing a majority of the excursionists to hug the railing very earnestly, and from the expressions of their faces their thoughts were not far away,—one hand on their heads the other on their stomachs, and the tale of their sorrow was told. Fun and sea sickness was the order of the day. Everything passed off very pleasantly until the boat was almost in Charlevoix, when one small fight occurred, but was promptly and effectually stopped by the mate. Taken all in all there was more fun, more sea sickness, and more big heads from the lesser class than any excursion of the season.

Last week, we "got left" on the report of the organization of the fire department. But perhaps "better late than never" will satisfy some of our readers. The following are the officers of the company: Business officers: President, John Nichols; Vice-president, A. E. Colgrove; Sec'y, E. F. Bisbee; Treas., E. Miller. Active officers: Foreman and chief, A. J. McLeod; assistant foreman, R. Adams; foreman of hose, H. C. Cooper; assistant, Wm. Ferguson; engineer, Gurley Brock. The company will recruit its members, and put themselves in active drill.

Stockman & Iddings are building a sixty-feet addition to their hardware store to accommodate their large and increasing trade. The east half will be used for a tin shop, the west half and basement for storage. The present tin shop will be transformed into a stove room, which will give more shelf room in front, and more storage room up stairs. When completed they expect to have the most convenient place of business and most complete stock in northern Michigan. They will also build a six-foot sidewalk from Bridge street to their dock for the convenience of the traveling public.

A few of our republican friends have thrown aside all prejudices and lent a hand to help this paper avoid the snares and traps which surely await every infant journal, and place it on a solid business foundation. These favors are appreciated, gentlemen, and though we may differ politically, as we grow stronger shall endeavor to help you in return by building up not only the village but the surrounding country, by bringing constant additions of live, energetic, young mechanics, farmers, and business men to buy your goods, buy your real estate, and build homes for their families.

Those in want of hardware, stoves, farm implements, etc., should look over the mammoth stock of L. D. Bartholomew. Among his specialties are the Garland stoves and ranges. These are said to be the best stoves on the market, and where one is sold others are sure to follow soon. He also keeps the Belknap wagon, single and double; the Walter A. Wood, Warrior, and Hopkins mowers; the Perry Royce reaper, and a good, substantial carriage manufactured in Milwaukee. He manufactures nearly all kinds of tinware, and keeps in stock everything usually found in a first-class house. A full assortment of shelf goods always on hand.

Those who have agates, corals or other stones to dress and mount for pins, rings, etc., will do well to call on O. W. Smith, at his shop in the rear of Nettleton's wagon shop, opposite Bridge Street house. Mr. Smith runs his saws and polishing stones by steam, which enables him to not only do his work first-class but quick and cheap. Those who are not fortunate enough to find handsome stones, can purchase of Mr. Smith almost anything they want, as he has collected and keeps on hand a great variety of all kinds, and for all grades of work. He uses nothing but the best material for mounting stones for charms, pins, rings, etc., and will guarantee satisfaction.

Bartholomew's Opera House.

This new place of amusement is now finished, although it has been opened to the public several times prior to its completion. Entering at the main stairway from Bridge street, the visitor is favorably impressed with the broad, easy steps, the comfortable chairs, the high and perfectly white ceilings, and the rich and handsome curtains and scenery.

There are at present 300 chairs arranged to face the stage, and room for 250 to 300 more, which will be added as necessity requires.

The stage is 18x22 feet, and is furnished with eight scenes and a drop curtain. The scenery was painted by one of the best artists in the business in Chicago, and includes parlor, street, rock, landscape, etc., all first-class in every respect.

Although the house is lighted with lamps, they are arranged to give a most excellent effect, and show to advantage the beauties of the various scenes.

For the benefit of tramps using the house, and also the audience in case of a fire or panic, there is an entrance from Main street, of sufficient width to empty the house in a very few minutes, which our people should remember.

The floor of the house was made level, and the rows of chairs removable, to accommodate the numerous balls and parties who may desire to use it.

In the course of time the walls and ceiling may be frescoed, but not while they retain the handsome white finish they now have.

It is the intention of the proprietor to make and keep the stage and its accessories equal to the best in the cities outside, thus making it an object for the best traveling troupes to visit Charlevoix.

The house is a credit to the builders and to the town, and is said to be the handsomest and best equipped in northern Michigan. We hope, and believe, it will prove a profitable investment, as it was certainly a necessity.

Abstract of the Budget of Stephen W. Dorsey--How Garfield Secured the Nomination.

Story of the October Election in Indiana—The Astounding Promises Made at the Fifth Avenue Conference.

Secret of the Stalwart Pilgrimage to Mentor--The Pledge Made to Jay Gould and Stanley Matthews's Appointment.

Conkling's Suspicions Regarding Garfield's Word—Blaine's Efforts to Protect the Star Routers.

Garfield Showing Dorsey the Evidence Against Them—How the Mighty Republican Party Has Fallen.

[From the New York Sun.]

The sequence of some events that had their beginning with the nomination of Garfield was ended with the verdict in the recent star-route trials. Two of the defendants in the trials were intimately connected with the Republican canvass in 1880, and one of them at least so connected because of his relation with the star-route contractors, that the very remarkable history of that canvass has been really in their power to tell. They have both refrained from doing so, because they were under fire, and because they know that they had the sympathy of many of the leading Republican politicians. When the Congress ordered an investigation into the system of letting the star-route contracts, Gen. Garfield, at Gen. Brady's request, made a very thorough examination into the whole matter. The result was that Gen. Brady and Senator Dorsey that he was satisfied the system could be defended, and he promised that if the accusations against them would be satisfactorily defended. They had received Garfield's most positive assurance that he would do all in his power to set them right, and they had every reason to believe that he would keep his word. But when the matter came up Garfield and many other friends, but he also allowed his influence to dwindle into indifference in a parley with a number of the House and leaving town when the matter came up. Dorsey was invited to forgive him for this mid-Brady. The Assistant Postmaster General realized that Garfield had disappointed the hopes of many were received to star-route contractors, and he was inclined to think that Garfield would be disposed to make use of this knowledge at a later day. Before Brady left though Garfield did not care to go on record except sufficiently to satisfy the men who had used him to defend them. All this occurred some months before the Chicago Convention. It was well known that Brady favored the nomination of Blaine, while Dorsey preferred to be earnestly for Grant.

In the winter of 1879-80 a club of the "better element" was organized in Philadelphia by a young man with political aspirations named Wharton Barker. This club, among other great missions, undertook to prevent the nomination of either Gen. Grant or James G. Blaine. Mr. Wayne MacVeagh was a member of the club. He had a profound dislike for Blaine, having characterized him as the most obnoxious man in America on politics. Mr. Wharton Barker regarded the determined nomination of Grant as a step toward monarchism. The point was to find the man who could beat both of these in the Chicago Convention. Many names were suggested. Sherman, he would not do; he had no elements of popularity. Edmunds—he would not do, because they would talk about the black battle flag in the connecticut room. Hawley—oh, no; he came from an insignificant State and was connected with a bluestone, and so on. At last, one evening, Mr. Barker suggested the name of James A. Garfield. It was received by nearly all the members of the club. Then a plan was with a rosy face and keen expression, arose. He was Mr. Wayne MacVeagh. The proposition, he said, is absurd. Garfield's record is so bad that the party could not afford to nominate him. The history of the Credit-Mobilier case, of the De Golyer business, and other matters that may not been made public would all come out. No, gentlemen, we cannot afford to think of Garfield.

Stephen Dorsey heard of this speech afterward, and Garfield heard of it, and Mr. Wayne MacVeagh was always presented that Garfield had a friend in Dorsey.

Mr. John Sherman learned very speedily what was going on. He read about for means to circumvent it, and he hit upon a plan. He insisted that Garfield should go to Chicago at the head of the Ohio delegation. Sherman believed that Garfield in that position would not dare betray him and would then be in a position to allow new movement in the Pennsylvania that looked like treachery. But there was a movement under way, now, Governor of Ohio, in the delegation. Foster was a man of the Garfield stripe, with an air of frankness, good-fellowship and faithfulness, but not so easily led away for a moment by a bunch of bustle. Foster, Delegates that to hold there was a perfect wire-pulling. There were two men in the Cincinnati caucus, who were early conceded to was in the van of the Ohio delegation. One of these was Dorsey and the other Garfield. Dorsey kept his knowledge to himself, except that he said to a caller one day, "There is no boy over there," pointing to Charley Foster, "in the Garfield-patch."

Both Garfield and Dorsey realized early in the season that the Republican candidate for President would have to be embarrassed by a calky, jealous, and ungracious faction. The relation that the New York stalwarts permitted themselves to assume toward Conkling's friends was a humiliating one to Garfield and Dorsey. The candidates were to be used for their relief upon the top of the party New York machine. He refused to be used in this way. He declared that he was not the tool of Conkling, and knew that if he was nominated the machine's opposition it could not be overcome. Dorsey promised to help him if he would nominate himself. It was a walk that Brady had to do. Garfield knew that he was committed to nothing else than supporting the ticket after Garfield's nomination, promised only to help in the campaign. He was in New York early in July and told Arthur that Dorsey who gave encouragement to Garfield, and that was how the latter happened a private conference that met Garfield and Dorsey at the house of Jay Gould. The men present were Gould, Dorsey, Garfield, Arthur, Conkling, Platt, Cornell, and Jay Gould. Garfield was asked to give his views on the situation. He did so, and then Conkling asked him if he would not say that he would not be a candidate before the convention. Garfield replied that he would not say that, because he was not a candidate, and he could not say what he would do if he were nominated. Conkling then asked him if he would not say that he would support the nominee. Garfield replied that he would not say that, because he could not tell what he would do if he were nominated. Conkling then asked him if he would not say that he would not be a candidate before the convention. Garfield replied that he would not say that, because he could not tell

It is conceded that H. W. Beach, of Banks, has one of the most promising fruit farms in the Grand Traverse region. He has 600 trees, now beginning to bear considerably and which, in a few years, will constitute as profitable a property as a silver mine. Mr. Beach has a fine farm which he has made by seventeen years hard work, and he deserves success.–[Sentinel.

A late number of the Cassopolis Democrat has the following concerning the naming of certain counties in this vicinity: "Mr. Turner's letter last week contained speculation on the naming of a group of five counties in this state, with Irish titles. We have been able to arrive at the facts in the case. Hon. Joseph Patterson, now a venerable resident of Jefferson township in this county, was a member of the legislature in 1839, being a representative from Lenawee county. The state was surveyed into counties, and to each member was awarded the privilege of naming five. The five falling to him with fond recollections of his native isle, were named from Irish counties, one, Antrim, the county he was born in, and the others, Wexford, Roscommon, Emmet and Clare."

Hay is a splendid crop. All crops look well.

Mr. J. Close has a mowing machine, and has cut grass for several in this town.

Corn in this vicinity has been found five feet three inches high by actual measurement.

Bark-peeling continues to be a farmers stronghold when wet days do not admit of haying. This has been a very rainy season.

A young man of this township was taken into one of the whiskey dens and treated until he knew nothing, then asked questions concerning the finding of money, etc., belonging to an East Jordan merchant. He had found it, he said. They straight way locked him up. Contemptible business we call it. But the moral is plain.

We notice Mr. A. Barbanks is building a new farm house on the mail route.

A member of the East Jordan band, disliking to honor the Orangemen, took his instrument home without permission, which they found to be against the rules. He was therefore arrested, and paid $5.00 hush money before being released. He now enters into suit against them. The end is not yet.

Mr. and Mrs. Cowert, of Bellaire, and Miss Nettie Hawks, formerly teacher in Charlevoix, were guests of Mr. and Mrs. James Thompson in Echo this week. Miss Nettie has begun a two months term of school in the Bennett neighborhood.

The new law respecting the county paying the mill owners for fish-ladders put in, has placed H. C. Seofield rather on the triumphant side, and the township board are consequently cast down.

A young gentleman of Ironton is paying his addresses to one of the fair ones of Echo.

The Intermediate lake is a grand fishing ground for the tourists. No less than seven were seen in one day.

Through an oversight no chaplain was appointed on the East Jordan fourth of July programme, but during the services Rev. P. Blake was requested to act, and did so. His name was omitted from the report afterwards published. F. A. N.

Political Notes.

While it is plain, even to the casual observer, that the country is preparing for a change from the republican to democratic rule with the next administration, our leaders everywhere, in town, county and state, should not be so over confident of results as to neglect the importance of thorough organization and united action.

Let them not lose sight of the fact that they have to deal with a party which has achieved success out of seemingly certain defeat by simply a magnificent display of generalship, —by perfect organization and the use of even the humblest means to further their ends.

Let divisions and personal animosities, wherever they may exist in the party, cease at once, and all true democrats work together, with a desire simply for the overthrow of the corrupt opposition.

Let there be no trading, no cringing, no cowetting with the enemy. Let the lines be distinctly drawn. Stick to your colors, and fight the good fight to the bitter end.–[Chippewa Democrat.

The Eagle evidently is in no sympathy with the disposition manifested by the great proportion of the republican press to make a scapegoat of Dorsey. It says: "The Chicago Tribune says of Dorsey that the stalwarts fastened this wretch upon Garfield.' How is that? Dorsey was in 1880 the secretary of the republican national committee. As such officer he had a leading part of the campaign work to do. But was not the republican party stalwart? Was not Garfield stalwart? Did not the delegates in the Chicago convention vote themselves stalwarts, with only two or three exceptions, upon a resolution introduced by Mr. Conkling, declaring that they would be stalwart and support the nominee of that convention?" The Eagle is right. Dorsey was very big Indian in the republican wigwam. He managed the campaign and won the presidency for them, and by means of the questionable methods which the chief party leaders then endorsed but which now they repudiate. The Eagle evidently feels that it is base ingratitude to "go back on" Dorsey.–[Grand Rapids Democrat.

The Coldwater Republican is somewhat severe in its criticisms upon its party in Michigan for extravagance as developed at the recent session of the legislature, and takes the position that unless reform and economy is inaugurated the people will repudiate it as the polls. The following is an extract from an editorial in a recent issue of the Republican: "How is it in the state? Our last legislature has not made a very good record. The appropriations were about $400,000 greater than in 1881. This will be noticed by the people and the republican party must stand it even though individuals in the party may have done all they could to stem the tide. More than that, some little schemes, like the Michigan military academy bill, were endorsed by the republican members on the committee, while the opposition came from democrats. The senatorial question was not satisfactorily settled, although we believe there is a disposition to give the new incumbent a fair trial. The opposition to him comes largely from the strong temperance element in the party which does not believe in the social customs of the large cities. This is a powerful element in the rural sections where the total abstinence sentiment is the strongest and most out-spoken."

The New York Sun, in support of the right of parties damaged by telegraph delays to recover of the companies, cites the opinion of Judge Davis of New York in a similar railroad case; as follows:

Upon the question whether railroad corporations can refuse or neglect to perform their public duties upon a controversy with their employes over the cost or expense of doing them, the opinion said: "We think this question admits of but one answer. The expense has in law no validity. The duties imposed must be discharged at whatever cost. They cannot be laid down or abandoned or suspended without the legal consent of the state. The trusts are active, potential and imperative, and must be executed until lawfully surrendered; otherwise a public highway of great utility is closed or obstructed without any process recognized in law."

The court decided that a railway company may be obliged to exercise its duty as a carrier of freight and passengers, and that demand of the freight handlers for increased wages did not justify the railroad companies in neglecting to perform their functions; that a railroad corporation cannot refuse to perform its functions because of a controversy with its employes over the expense of performing them.

Reduced Postage.

A circular was issued July 18, from the office of the third assistant post master-general officially notifying postmasters throughout the United States of the reduction in the postage rates to take effect October 1, and directing them to make preparations for it. Postmasters are notified that it is desirable to have as small a stock of the present three cent postage stamps and stamped envelopes as possible on hand when the reduction in rates goes into effect, and they are accordingly directed to limit their requisitions for stamps and envelopes of this denomination to such quantities as upon a careful estimate they may deem sufficient to last until October 1. They are also instructed to take all available means, without incurring any expense, to call public attention to the coming reductions, so purchasers may not accumulate an unnecessary supply of three-cent stamps and envelopes.

The circular also directs that as no arrangements have yet been made for the redemption of the three-cent stamps and envelopes in the hands of postmasters, or for exchange by postmasters of those stamps and envelopes in the hands of private holders, until further notice postmasters will not make exchanges for the public nor return to the department the stock that remains on their hands after October 1. Postmasters are, however, notified that as the two and three-cent stamps and envelopes of the present issue will continue to be valid after that date, they must be accepted in payment of postage when offered in proper amounts; and that three-cent stamps can be used in combination with other denominations on letters requiring more than one rate of postage, and on parcels of third and fourth class matter.

The circular announces that the department will be ready to issue two-cent stamps of the new design September 15, but that these stamps and envelopes must not be placed on sale or used by postmasters before October 1; also, that no three-cent stamps will be issued after September 14, unless the requisition therefor is accompanied by the statement that they are needed for immediate use, and that the full supply called for will become exhausted by October 1; and further, that no three-cent stamped envelopes will be issued after August 31, unless a requisition for them is accompanied by a similar statement.

The circular further instructs post masters as to the design for the new two-cent and four-cent stamps and stamped envelopes, and notifies them that the prices of envelopes (exclusive of postage) will remain the same as at present; that no change will be made in "postage due" stamps, and that rates on drop letters will remain the same as at present.

On the Model Farm, Ontario.

The province pays $30,000 a year to maintain a school for the practical education of farmers. This institution turns out annually from 200 to 300 well disciplined and splendidly equipped men to take charge of the most important, healthy and altogether honorable pursuit on earth. We in the states are accustomed to think if a man is fit for nothing else he can settle down on a farm and get on. We have made the farm the last refuge of the tramp. They here are making the farm the first place for the true gentleman. And this is right. We must have one of these institutions in every state of our Union, a dozen if necessary, to dignify and make easy and intelligent the office of the farmer. The trade of war is out of date, the lawyer's office is of doubtful calling, for what does it give to the world in return for his bread? The doctor's place is hardly desirable for a refined nature; but the Canadians have decided that the farmers hold the world on their shoulders and are standing truly by them. They have altogether in the dominion more than eighty associations devoted to the culture and development of stock and grain. This province of Quebec has an institution not widely unlike that of Guelph, Ont., only on a much smaller scale. I did not visit this, but am told that it is conducted entirely by a lady. The province pays $5,000 bounty towards state expenses. As against these we have only little to show except the school in Michigan. Yet it is true that we have many institutions that profess farming. But I fear that they do not practice it as at this model farm. Of course I cannot enter into detail or attempt to digest the big book making up their annual report on this place. But I may say as a cardinal idea they seek to be solidly practical; severely so; to keep the feet of the students set down firmly on the hard earth. They ignore Greek and all such nonsense. Yet no ignoramus is admitted here by a great deal. Each applicant must be at least 16 years old, must be of sound morals and good health and pass a severe matriculation examination if not a graduate of the many high schools in the country.–[Joaquin Miller.

The Western Union's Watered Stock.

Since its establishment the company (the Western Union) has issued, for the purchase of the Pacific telegraph company's franchises, stock to the amount of $1,279,260; for the United States company, $7,216,800; for the American company, $11,833,100; for the American Union company, $15,000,000; for the Atlantic & Pacific, $8,400,000, and in its recent transactions, for which the courts are trying to call it to account, $15,500,000. Of those $58,000,000, more or less, not more than $12,000,000 represented actual investment, and it is probable that of its present $80,000,000 of nominal capital fully two-thirds, and certainly more than one-half, represents nothing but water. By the construction most favorable to the company, the granting of all demands of its employes would not reduce its capacity, without advancing rates, to divide at least ten per cent upon every dollar actually invested. Probably fifteen per cent would be much nearer the true figures. That a company thus managed should inflict incalculable injury on the business of the country in order to keep its employes in absolute servitude to its arbitrary dictation is simply monstrous, and the unchecked perpetration of such an outrage is a serious strain upon the justice of the government under which we live.–[New York Sun.

OUR COUNTRY.

By John G. Whittier, Read at Rowland Park, Woodstock, Conn., July 4, 1883.

We give thy natal day to hope,
As country of our love and prayer,
Thy way is down no fatal slope,
But up to freer sun and air!

Tried as by furnace-fires, and yet
By God's grace only stronger made,
To meet the new tasks before thee set
Thou shalt not lack the old-time aid.

The fathers sleep; but men remain
As wise, as true and brave as they,
With equal hearts to dare and do,
With round the world to-day.

Whate'er of folly, shame and crime
Within thy mighty bounds transpires,
With speed defying steam and time
Comes to us on the morning wires;

While of thy wealth of noble deeds,
Thy hours of peace, thy victories moral,
The love that pleads for human needs,
The wrong redressed, but little is told!

Each poor wretch, in its gross cell
Of callous stillness, is interviewed;
We know the single culprit well,
And not the nine and ninety good.

Yet, if on daily scandals fed,
We seem at times to doubt thy worth,
We know the still, when all is said,
The best and dearest spot on earth.

From the warm Mexic Gulf, or where Belted with flowers, Los Angeles
Looks in the sunset's golden glow,
To where Katahdin's cedar trees

Are dwarfed and bent by northern winds,
Thy plenty's bounty equally filled;
Alone, the rounding century finds
Thy liberal soil by love's hands tilled.

A refuge for the wronged and poor,
Thy generous heart has been the blame
That, with them, forced the open door,
The old world's evil outcasts came.

Ban, with thy just and equal rule,
And labor's need and right in all tasts,
Free press and rostrum, church and school,
Thy sure, if slow, transforming hands

Shall mould even them to thy design,
Making a blessing of the bane,
And Freedom's elemdntary combine
The alien elements of man.

The power that broke their prison for
And set the dusky millions free,
And welded in the flame of war
The Union fast to Liberty,

Shall it not deal with other ills,
Redress the rural man's grievance, break
The Circean cup which turns men's wills,
And kaiser full regittal make?

Alone to such as fitly bear
The right to share, to hold, to give, to fall,
And call the daughters forth to share
The rights and duties pleasant to all?

No luck was in thy primal stock,
No wedding feasters bidded here;
Thine were the meek Quaker Rook,
The Huguenot and Cavalier.

And they whose firm endurance gained
The freedom of the seas of men,
Whose hands unstained with blood maintained
The sacred cross on banth of Penn.

And thine shall be the power of all
To do the work which duty bids,
And make the people's council hall
As lasting as the Pyramids!

Well have thy later years made good
Thy brave-said word a century back,
The pledged of human brotherhood,
The equal claim of white and black.

That word still echoes round the world,
And all who hear it turn to thee,
And read upon thy flag unfurled
The prophecies of destiny.

The great world-lesson all shall learn,
The nations in thy school shall sit,
Earth's farthest mountain-tops shall burn
With watch-fires from thy sea to split.

Great without seeking to be great
By fraud or conquest, rich in gold,
But richer in the large estate
Of virtue which thy children hold,

With peace that comes of purity,
And strength to simple faith secure,
So rang our royal dream of thee;
God of our fathers! make it true!

O Land of lands! in thee we give
Our prayers, our hopes, our service free;
For thee thy sons shall nobly live,
And all thy need shall idle for thee!

A Good Argument for Free Trade.

Discussing the depression in the iron and woolen industries, occasioned by the over-production, for which protection with its stimulus, is responsible, the New York Herald says: "What, then, is the remedy? Obviously the opening of new markets for the surplus which cannot be consumed here. Almost at our own doors ever markets which our own folly and stupidity have prevented us from monopolizing; and, already large, they stand prepared to take surplus cotton, woolen and glass manufactures, our iron and steel, raw and wrought, our leather and paper. A possible market of $250,000,000 exists in South America, but at present we only occupy one-tenth part of it. The West Indies import more than $115,000,000, but they take only $31,000,000 from this country. Canada obtains only one-third of what she wants from us, and the same proportion holds in Mexico and the central American states. On this continent, then, in the aggregate lies open to us a market for our manufactures of at least $500,000,000. In no instance, save perhaps in that of Canada, are any of the nations included in this survey manufacturing nations, and therefore they would not compete with our domestic industries. They will take our manufactured products if we will only take from them their raw materials. This our tariff forbids. We refuse the cheap raw materials which would enable us, through low cost of production, to monopolize these markets, and we make no attempt to secure that extension of the sale of our commodities which would enable our manufacturers to run to their fullest capacity the year around. Was ever a commercial policy more narrow or suicidal?" [Chippewa Democrat.

The Rights in the Case.

It is absurb for the monopolists to talk of the "Operator's Brotherhood" as an oath bound conspiracy menacing the rights of the public. It is simply a combination of employes against a powerful employer, who, they think, has treated them unjustly and who they are quite certain, will not listen to them unless they speak in a fashion to compel attention. They ought to have gone "in person" and have talked the matter over, ridiculously say the critics of the strikers. This is preposterous and it is of itself proof that the champions and mouthpieces of monopoly are not disposed to treat the question seriously. How could 10,000 men, or any number of men, unless they were a few representatives of the 10,000, negotiate, consult or discuss with a half a dozen directors in New York? Had these representatives approached the Western Union magnates they would have been repelled, because they could not have presented any stronger claims or credentials than the executive committee of the brotherhood had to show. It was pure arrogance and impudence for the directors of the Western Union to pretend that they had no proof that the committee represented the operators. The president of the United States might as well demand that the English minister to this country should bring some proof, outside of his credentials, that the English people chose him to represent their interests. It would be an insult to the English people, just as the reply of the directors was an insult to the operators.

The monopolists complain that the operators are trying to dictate terms to their employers. But the employers have been for many years dictating terms to the operators. The operators have just as much right to say what they must work for. The sole question is as to the manner in which the demand is made. If they be orderly and law-abiding, the right of any number of persons to make reasonable demands is universally conceded. In the case of telegraphers, railroad employes, gas company employes, or any other combination on whose labor the daily necessities of the people closely depend, they must be perfectly sure that their demands are reasonable. Otherwise, they will have no public sentiment back of them, and are the more likely to fail.

It is the pride rather than the good sense of the Western Union company that has prevented their recognizing the brotherhood. The brotherhood has just as much right to have its existence acknowledged as the corporations which sell the company its wires and its telegraph stock. It has as much right to advance the price of labor upon Mr. Jay Gould and his fellow directors as the iron and steel men have to advance the price of wire. It is no more humiliating or unbecoming to recognize the existence of the brotherhood which undertakes to control its labor market than it is to recognize the existence of other combinations that have products to sell. The price may be rejected in either case, but in one case the Western Union meets the combination on common sense, business-like principles; in the other with childish folly and flouting. The puerile and arrogant refusal of the company to acknowledge the existence of a well-behaved body of men demanding a higher price for their labor had much to do with the trouble. Even if after a conference the company had refused, as steadily as it does now, to concede the demands of the brotherhood, the feeling on both sides, and on the part of the public, would have been different. The "right" would not have been as bitter nor the company so generally hated. [Detroit Free Press.

What brave, fine business some of these Washington officials are engaged in! It makes an American proud of his country when he sees what lofty flights of statesmanship, what splendid schemes of patriotism, what noble ambitions, are developed and encouraged by the great minds who carry on and control "this grandest government the sun shines on!" Lest peradventure there should be one clerkship vacant which might be filled under the rules of the civil service examination, the officials of the bureau actually bulldozed a young lady in the redemption agency of the treasury department, who had asked for the usual thirty days' leave of absence which is granted to all female clerks about to be married; her resignation in fact to be sent in and accepted thirty days after her actual departure. And so, in order to snatch every scrubby little place for some scrubby little politician, did not the great treasury department of the United States of America actually insist in that girl's outstanding her resignation so as to create a vacancy that was demanded; and when she refused, threatened to dismiss her in disgrace, and without her pay unless she complied? To avoid this disgrace she consented, and so another clerk who would not, or could not, pass the examination was rushed in before the date assigned for bringing that sort of a thing to a stop. Nice business for an administration, is it not? Before flying to Colorado President Arthur might well afford to sit down hard on any one guilty of such contemptible business. If such pettiness can be transacted it is well worth even a president's time to bring it to a well-deserved end.–[Free Press.

A recent visitor to the Lansing house found in the bureau of his room two interesting souvenirs of the last republican state convention. One was a delegate's ticket to the convention and the other an empty eight-ounce vial labeled "champion whiskey." The occupant of that particular room must have been a light and solitary drinker. For the average republican delegate an eight ounce vial of whiskey would be a mere "tantalizer."

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

THE body of Capt. Webb was found floating in the river near Lewiston, N. Y. There was a cut on his head, evidently caused by a rock at the entrance to the whirlpool, which was in itself sufficient to have caused his death. The remains were sent to Boston, where Mrs. Webb is at present residing.... Senor Francisco Barca, the Spanish Minister to Washington, shot himself through the head in his room at the Albemarle Hotel, New York. Financial troubles led to the terrible act. Senor Barca was appointed American Minister in 1881.... Several steamboats in the region of the headwaters of the Allegheny river produced a sudden rise in the stream that proved more disastrous than any flood since 1881. Eleven acres of boards and timber were set adrift down the Ohio, causing a loss of fully $1,000,000.

ROBERT S. SHEPARD, a shipping clerk for a New York firm, and his wife were found dead in a furnished room in that city, both shot through the head. In a letter written to Shepard, he declared the purpose of himself and wife to die together.... The discovery of Schenker attempted to take $10,000 from a bank cashier at Jersey City. They were arrested on Sunday, and on Monday were tried, convicted and sentenced to ten years each in State prison. Haste from start to finish is a peculiarity.

THE Coroner's inquest on the body of Capt. Webb, who was lost in the Niagara whirlpool rapids, rendered a verdict of death from an unknown cause, the evidence being unable to agree whether death resulted from drowning, a blow on the head or the force of the water in the rapids. The Coroner's jury thought best not to venture an opinion. Mr. Webb and Mr. Kyle were at the funeral, but there were no religious services.... The burning of John D. & Charles King's brick-mill, at Johnson's, Fulton county, N. Y., caused a loss of $5,000.... John Walters extensive factory, at Albany, N. Y., was partly consumed by fire. Loss, $50,000; insured.

TWO PASSENGER trains on the Troy and Boston road collided between Petersburg Junction and Poestal, Vt. Eight men were killed and a number injured. The collision was caused by the neglect of the telegraph operator at Petersburg Junction to convey orders to the train dispatcher to stop the train at his station.... Boxley & Sharp's factory at Danbury, Ct., burned; $25,000; insured. The loss is nearly $50,000.... The failure is announced of the Lancaster Watch Company. The Directors say the supposition is only temporary.

CHARLES H. WARD'S Co., the manufacturers of Ideal, have made an assignment. Their liabilities are about $250,000.

THE WEST.

MRS. F. A. SEARLE, of Cleveland, once a popular teacher in the public schools, was indicted on a charge of running a railroad car the test of Hanover street, in that city. Her leg was completely severed at the hip, and rolled into the road through a hole in the deck.... The Hon. James Wilson, who has recently leased a gymnasium building in town, gives a glowing account of the crops in the Dells State.

THE first Sunday of the enforcement of the bowling law in St. Louis did not operate satisfactorily. Some 700 saloon-keepers were reported, as also were all the newspapers, street-car officials, cigar stands, Sunday-school teachers and the Dutch Company on Sunday, who has united to bring an equitable population to canvas to have very strict regulations governing the matter. The outcome is a National fund, and half a dozen others in shorter contingency. It is feared that he is not of sound mind.... A $2,000 fire occurred at Minneapolis, Minn., Sunday, aged vagabond known to the country as "Old Bill" broke destroying the cracker stock of Bridgeman & Co.; wrecking the crockery stock of Bolles & Griffin, the runner valued at $15,000 and damaging the saloon of A. Lincoln Neil, destroyed the wholesale drug house of Leight & Co. Brown and adjoining build ings causing a total nearly $200,000.... Mr. Manning, Commissioner of Agriculture, Monday, reports an increase of 18,000 acres in winter and predicts a crop of at least 22,000,000 bushels as a yield in the southern counties will more than make up for the loss in the Red River Valley.

PROF. ALVORD, of the University of Nebraska, states that the help-owners of Nebraska have expended a sum named by gentlemen. The Professor claims to be the victim of sinple-boss extensiveness, and promises to pay every dollar of the false report.

SELLING has the city of Chicago seen an assemblage of men more representative of the trade, than the meeting of the Board of Trade, which ordered to attend the funeral services of the Hon. Thomas Dent, who met his fate in a railroad accident in New York. Mr. Deane was one of the most prominent men of Chicago, a man of high-bred lawyer, a man of wealth, and was more respected for his love of truth and fair dealing in everything.... The Salt and Lime Company's mill at Detroit, Mich., was destroyed by fire. Loss $50,000.... F. S. Todd's establishment and barber pooling house, Ice House, Iowa, was burned. Loss on building and contents, $12,000; insurance small.... Morgan and Saunders, near Belleville, Ill., was destroyed by fire. Loss, $75,000; insured for $30,000.

A SECTION of the $16,000,000 has just been recorded at Springfield, Ill. Cyrus Hines, of Indiana, and the Union Trust Company of Illinois, lend the money to the Chicago and Mississippi Air-road company, and the borrowers thereby regained control of their property in Illinois.

INTERNAL REVENUE COMMISSIONER EVANS has decided that butters and various alcoholic compounds of alleged medicinal worth were beverages, and should be taxed as such under the law. Hereafter all persons selling any of these alcoholic articles without special permit therefor will be ordered to arrest and fine. In addition to this fine each article will be taxed the same as whisky and other liquors.

Notes and News.

The republicans of New Hampshire believing that there were as good fish in the sea, etc., landed a Pike for the senatorship. [Free Press.

The telegraph strike is causing immense damage to the country, and as the Western Union company is alone responsible for it, the property of that corporation ought to be confiscated to make good the damage. [Independent.

For some unaccountable reason our democratic exchanges are slow to come in, while on the other hand our republican neighbors are generous, and sometimes even lavish with their advice not to follow in what they deem "sinful ways." If it is because we gave an extra edge to our shears, why we will throw them aside and borrow a knife to sharpen our little stub of a pencil and wade into "them republican fellars."

Austin F. Pike, who has just been elected Rollins' successor in the senate from New Hampshire, was indebted for his election to the determination of some of the supporters of Rollins not to vote for any one who was unfriendly to him, and to the mutual jealousy of the small men who are at the front in New Hampshire republican politics. Pike is an old man who has not taken any active part in politics for some years, though he has been a member and presiding officer of both houses of the legislature, chairman of the republican state committee, and a member of congress for one term. [Free Press.

The Chicago Inter Ocean evidently understands the art of conducting a tariff discussion on the basis of sound reasoning and the facts. It is a pleasure to meet an adversary capable of stating so frankly as it does in reply to a free trade champion in the Christian Union the doctrines of protection and the position of an antagonist. It says: "The puny puppies of the Christian Union, being still in their first nine days of economic blindness, and knowing not the circumcision from the uncircumcision as respects economy or religion, undertake by their milk-fed yelp to define what is unchristian." [Free Press.

The effect, on summer travel in this section of the country, of opening the resorts in the extreme north of this peninsula continues to be more manifest season by season. The tendency to go to the seashore, where the chances of the ruralen traveler are strongly in favor of exorbitant prices or unpleasant accommodations, has about disappeared before the manifest advantage of comfort in one's own camp, prices practically warranted to suit, and a luxurious and life giving atmosphere, the attractions of northern Michigan. Comfort is the universal desire in the heated term and it seems to be most nearly attained in the summering places of our own state. [Kalamazoo Telegraph.

In a brief harangue before the associated press the sage of the Chicago Tribune urged as an argument in favor of a government telegraph that there would be no strikes in that case. We are by no means sure of that. The postoffice furnishes no analogy for a postal telegraph system. In the former a close combination of all the employes in the country is impracticable, and would be of little use if made. The labor is largely skilled; but the skill is mainly such as comes from long practice. While it would be difficult to replace upon short notice the practiced distributors and other trained employes in an office like New York or Detroit, for instance, the most of the work is such as can be done in some fashion by green hands. If everyone of the skilled employes were to strike the work would be much delayed; but it would not of necessity be suspended. In the telegraph business it is different. The employes in a government telegraph could combine as perfectly as those in the Western Union employ did; and if they should all strike they would put the offices and wires, and service in a condition where green hands would be of no avail. The man who has had no experience in telegraphy would be utterly useless in such an emergency; while in a similar emergency in the mail service a great deal of work could be got out of men who never went into a postoffice except to mail a letter or get one. As for the improbability that any body of government servants would strike, it should be remembered that the printers in the government office at Washington have struck more than once. Given the practicability of enforcing by a strike demands deemed reasonable, and government employes are as likely to resort to it as the employes of private corporations or individuals. The Charlevoix JOURNAL is the name of the new democratic paper established at Charlevoix by Chas. J. Strang, for a long time a skillful compositor in the state printing office. It is a lively, newsy, well-printed five-column quarto, and notwithstanding the abominable politics of the sheet we sincerely hope that its able and genial manager will reap a good fortune from his venture.—[Lansing Republican.

How the Republicans carried Indiana.

In a recent number of the Grand Rapids Democrat is reproduced a very suggestive letter which originally appeared in the Indianapolis Journal, the leading republican paper in Indiana. It was written by S. P. Connor, chairman of the republican central committee of Newton county, Indiana, and settles the question as to the Irish use of money by Dorsey in that state:

"Since a few republicans have entered the arena," Mr. Connor wrote, "to disrupt the republican party and give aid and comfort to the enemy, I propose to have them cease taking liliputian treatment and swallow heroic doses. To this end I invite the reader's attention to a brief history of the doings of the republican party of Indiana during the last political campaign. Being chairman of the republican county central committee, I was invited to their inner council at Indianapolis and witnessed the 'expediting' process, by which process the captured Irish voters of this state. I conversed freely with John C. New, his secretary, and all his clerks, and then met Joe Gray, the lieutenant of senator Dorsey. After learning from Gray how double tickets were voted and counted, and being fully instructed, I was ushered into the presence of senator Dorsey, who was secretary of the national republican committee. I was presented to Dorsey by John C. New, the chairman of the republican central committee, and after being introduced, Mr. New withdrew and left me. Senator Dorsey had his bankers in an adjoining room, upon whom he drew to furnish the money with which to corrupt and carry the election in Indiana. Senator Dorsey demanded of me 600 majority in Newton county. I told him we could not give it. He then said he would give me the money to help us, and that being my state Illinois that we could colonize from Illinois and make the 600 majority. I told him frankly that I was not zealous enough in the cause to engage in such disreputable business. As untoward, he seemed greatly incensed, and dismissed me from his august presence with a promise to see me later. I met him again at an appointed hour, and he gave Joe Gray a piece of paper and waved us from the room. I was led into an adjoining room by Joe Gray (all this was in the new Denison hotel at Indianapolis), and there I met an old gray headed man and a middle-aged man. Joe Gray gave them the paper he had received from Dorsey, when the bankers retired to an adjoining room and returned in a few minutes with a package of bills just printed for the business of carrying Indiana. I was informed that my county being small I must be content with half a thousand. I learned that larger counties received from 1,000 to 5,000 of these new $1 and $2 bills, just printed to carry Indiana for Porter and Garfield. I then met United States marshall Dudley and received many encouraging words from him. I felt that the star routes had all been 'expedited,' and that Garfield ought to reward Gray. John C. New did the work, and his influence at Washington brought the money, but the politicul ring gave all the credit to Dorsey for carrying the state. Poor New was forced to silence, and Garfield refused to give him an office. Garfield rewarded Gray just as Hayes rewarded the Louisiana scoundrels who counted him in, but John C. New was crushed to silence, and Dorsey walked off with the honor of having carried Indiana. Where the money came from I cannot tell. It was printed by Uncle Sam's presses, and may be it is the star route fund. Let Brady and John Sherman answer this. Every spenker brought to Indiana had his pockets stuffed full and then sent out to work. Every county had a generous supply. It was new and just from the press, and somebody furnished it to carry Indiana, and it did carry Indiana for the republicans."

A Great Day at Bay View.

From the Daily Resorter.

THE DAY.

Better weather for the principal day of camp meeting could not have been had if made to order. The sun shone brightly and it was just warm enough to be pleasant, a fresh lake breeze serving to cool the ardor of country couples who flock to camp meeting on the big Sunday as they go to a circus or fourth of July celebration.

Petoskey and Bay View were crowded all day. A great many came in from all over the country, four hundred over the Harbor Springs road, the morning train came in with every conch loaded, and some five hundred more came in on boats. It is probable that not far from fifteen hundred people came from outside points to Bay View yesterday, which with six or seven hundred on the grounds and that many more from Petoskey made a large crowd, the largest, it is said, ever in attendance.

The Faxton brought in seventy-five passengers, the Grand Rapids brought over two hundred from Traverse City and other points, and the Clara Belle and the Wright each brought down about a hundred from Boyne City, East Jordan and Charlevoix. The trains ran constantly all day until eleven o'clock at night, and nearly every car was crowded. Petoskey has not been so lively for a year, except on circus day.

THE SERVICES.

The morning service was conducted by Rev. Mr. Payne, of Ohio, who preached an eloquent sermon to a large and appreciative audience in the grove.

Before the hour for the opening of the afternoon service the seats in front of the speaker's stand were all taken, and many more were obliged to stand up. These services in God's own temple, the grand old woods, were undoubtedly the best ever listened to at Bay View. The services began at half past two by a splendidly rendered quartette, "The Lord is my Shepherd." After various announcements the congregation joined in singing "Trusting in Jesus," which was followed by the reading of the 23d psalm. After an impressive prayer by Rev. Mr. Shier the grand old hymn "Rock of Ages" was thrillingly rendered.

Rev. Mr. Fisk, president of Albion college, then delivered the principal sermon of camp meeting week, taking his text from Mark, 12th chapter, 26th and 27th verses. The sermon was a masterly and logical piece of composition, and the eloquent manner of its delivery fastened the attention of the congregation.

The afternoon service closed with singing "Come to Jesus," and Rev. Mr. Shier pronounced the benediction.

At half past four o'clock a prayer and praise meeting was held in the chapel, and at the same time a children's meeting was held in Conch's tent.

Rev. Dr. Joy, of Grand Rapids, preached in the evening, in the crowded chapel, from the text "What think ye of Christ, whose son is he?" This, too, was a profound and scholary effort, and fittingly closed the most successful camp meeting ever held at Bay View.

Wm. Mears, of Boyne Falls, was in town Tuesday.

Fifty teachers were in attendance at the institute on Tuesday.

Wm. See has purchased Thos. Nowak's interest in the ice bigge.

Chas. Fox, of Litlhefield, will soon return to his farm in Springvale.

Ask the clerk of the Fountain City model how he likes to ride on a tug.

There were 1,422 arrivals registered at the Fountain City during June and July.

Miss Lizzie Watson, of Boyne, visited the editor's family last Monday evening.

Mrs. Judge Dryden, of the Forum, Ida City, is somewhat indisposed this week.

Prof. Olney, of Michigan university, will preach at the M. E. Church next Sunday morning.

Mr. W. H. Auld, of the Free Press, Forest, Ont., is spending a week or more with Dr. Crozier.

Hon. J. A. Anderson and family went to Mackinac yesterday; expects to return next Monday.

Henry M. Campbell, of Detroit, son of Judge Campbell, was in town yesterday on business.

Mrs. Ruth Bedford left on Wednesday for a visit to her sister, Mrs. Albert Field, in Eaton county.

Mr. A. W. Chew, of Hayes, remembered the JOURNAL while he was in attendance at the institute.

Mrs. Alice Pardee, of Springvale, is recovering from an attack of acute inflammatory rheumatism.

Mr. J. H. Bennett is building a large new house on the south side, near the Charlevoix resort.

Rev. G. Daniels and wife intend to go to Traverse City next Saturday, to attend the district conference.

Prof. Edward Olney, of Michigan university, occupied the pulpit at the M. E. church last Sunday evening.

Jacob Weimer, of Springvale, is building a new gristmill with two run of stone, to be completed by a week or two.

Mr. H. E. Chatfield, of Springvale, made the JOURNAL a call during his recent attendance at the teachers' institute.

Rev. John Redpath, of Boyne Falls, was in attendance at the joint meeting of lecturers and examiners on Tuesday.

Prof. H. T. Burton and wife are residing the season here. Mr. Burton is Latin professor in the Rochester university.

Mrs. William Nicholls and two children, of Traverse, Wis., are spending a few weeks with the family of John Nicholls.

Rev. G. S. F. Savage, D. D., of Jackson, returned home on Wednesday last, well pleased with his stay in Charlevoix.

Mr. Wm. McLennan, one of Charlevoix's promising young men, who is attending Albion college, is home on a short vacation.

L. H. Williams, of Springvale, is going to move to Alanson, Emmett county, where he is building a new saw mill 24x36 feet.

T. D. Smith is making improvements about his residence, having built a six-sidewalk, and filled low portions of his lot.

Mr. O. C. Ainsworth, wife, and children, who have been stopping at the Fountain City some weeks past, went up the Jordan last week.

Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Sheldon and boy, among the most pleasant and enthusiastic visitors, came from Lincoln, Neb., to spend season here.

Mr. Hiram Daniels, of Birmingham, and Mrs. Julia Beebee, of Flint, father and sister of Rev. G. Daniels, arrived last Saturday and returned home yesterday.

W. A. Smith returned last Friday from his trip to the east. He went as far as New York city, and reports a pleasant journey, improved health as a result.

Roscoe L. Corbet, of Boyne City, elected county examiner for the term of three years commencing on the fourth Tuesday in August. He takes the place of A. W. Chew.

Mr. O. M. Allen who has been in business for a day or two left last evening for Charlevoix. Mr. and Mrs. L. P. Allen have gone north. Hon. Allen Potter left evening for Charlevoix. Mr. E. T. Mills left yesterday morning from Charlevoix, Mich., and has View. He reports having a splendid time. Oshkosh correspondent.

Miss Julia Beal, of Boyne, while at Charlevoix, on Tuesday, broke out with the measles and went home on the Clara Belle. This is one of the methods to spread such a disease which cannot always be prevented or guarded against.

Isaac St. John, charged with stealing money of W. A. Stone, of East Jordan, has had a preliminary trial and been bound over for trial at the next term of circuit court. In default of bail he was committed to the county jail for safe keeping.

Mrs. Lena Woodhull, of Saugatuck, called at the JOURNAL office Tuesday. She is searching for facts bearing on the history of Beaver Island with the intent of writing a series of newspaper articles in the near future, and possibly an illustrated magazine article next year.

F. W. Hathaway has been up the Jordan, and Deer and Monroe creeks, and wants it distinctly understood that there are no fish in any of the creeks or lakes, as he and Mr. Graves caught them all. But there are plenty of moss, quillons and some snakes—water snakes, he called them.

J. A. Bacon has just received from Sheboygan, Wis., a thoroughbred Holstein heifer and a bull, and a thoroughbred Durham heifer, with which he hopes to improve his herd. We are pleased to see any such movement on the part of farmers or others, as it indicates a progressive spirit.

Mr. Richard P. Nicholls, of Kings bridge, England, gave his brother Mr. John Nicholls and family a very agreeable surprise last Saturday by his presence, they not knowing that he was in America until he appeared at the door. Mr. Nicholls contemplates looking our northern and western country over quite thoroughly before returning to his eastern home.

Mr. P. D. Swerthen, late of Lowell, Kent county, is building a dock on the Lake to accommodate his business, having already driven over 200 piles. He has altogether some five hundred acres of choice land in Hayes, and will engage extensively in the wood, bark, and hardwood lumber trade. He evidently intends to employ his means to the best advantage, and to the fullest development of the resources of that locality.

Mr. W. M. Bench, wife and son, of Fowlerville, who have been visiting the family of A. D. Cruickshank for the past week, left Tuesday afternoon to return to their home. Mr. Bench is a brother-in-law to the finest town in this region, and has the best prospect for a large and permanent growth, the one thing lacking now being a railroad to reach the eastern part of state. He is evidently of the opinion that we might secure it by a little united effort and active work.

News Brevities.

Fruit is doing well in this county, and promises to be a full crop.

Some of the inhabitants of Springvale are wrestling with the ague.

There are 160 regular boarders at the Belvedere house, Charlevoix resort.

Oats in Hayes township are reported as looking as now's acres, and well headed.

The revenue cutter Andy Johnson stopped outside for an hour on Tuesday morning.

Reports from Hayes township are to the effect that hay is all in, and winter wheat cut.

Why don't some enterprising man build some dwelling houses to rent? There's money in it.

A boat house to accommodate twelve to fifteen boats will soon be completed at the Charlevoix resort.

Two hundred and sixty-five persons have registered at the Belvedere house, Charlevoix resort, during this season.

As local itemizers the Cedar Springs Mail and Bellevue Gazette take front rank. Both are live papers, and well printed.

The Pine Lake Iron company at Ironton consume in manufacturing pig iron 2,500 bushels per month of four-foot wood per month.

We were informed last Friday that fishing on the Boyne was good, tourists not having visited that stream as much as the Jordan.

Burglars invaded the Fountain City hotel ice box last Monday night, carrying off about fifteen pounds of lard, and the lock and key.

In Marion township oats and barley are an extraordinary crop, but wheat is touched slightly with rust, probably caused by too much wet weather.

A party of ten or a dozen from Springvale are fishing in Pickerel lake, with moderate success. Another party are picking huckleberries on the plains and doing well at it.

A slight error was made in the time card of the Clara Belle last week. The captain evidently thinks it takes a pretty smart boat to leave Boyne half an hour before she gets there.

The business card of Messrs. Norton & Kent, of Boyne, will be found in our directory column. These gentlemen gave us a cordial and substantial welcome while at Boyne last Friday, which will be appreciated.

It is said that if two table spoons of carbolic acid be put into a gallon of water and sprinkled over potato vines it will cause an immediate emigration of the bugs and cause no bad effects, like Paris green. The solution is equally efficacious for cutworm worms.

"Up at Harbor Springs, Mich., they have a resort hotel named "We-que-ton-sing." It is probably Indian for "We-spitt-on-the-ing." If this is the correct inter, pretation of the name we commend the We-que-ton-sing as a first-class resort."—Chicago Hotel World.

The hardware business of Messrs. Hodge & Nichols, at East Jordan, has been sold to Mr. H. L. Page, recently of the firm of Page & Lovejoy, of Cedar Springs. Mr. Page will occupy the same building with his business and will doubtless prosper. We wish him success.

A handsome new school house is being erected by Mr. Mills, of Charlevoix, in the Hilton district, township of Norwood. When completed it will have all the modern improvements, among others being the Northville patent seat, and a two hundred and fifty pound bell.

The steam barge Mary Mills, with Worthington in tow arrived Tuesday for their second cargo of lumber and timber for the Detroit house of correction. The former will load at Boyne, the latter at East Jordan. The Mills received some slight repairs at Campbell's ship yard.

"Three hundred and thirty-six new, cash in advance subscriptions have been received by the Herald during the month of July." [Grand Traverse Herald. What a grand lift that would give the JOURNAL just now. If our democratic friends will push the matter, perhaps they can come very near to it.

A strange steam craft came into the harbor last Monday from Ludington, which attracted much attention. She was a little wider than a good-sized row boat, and about twice as long, and was equipped with steam boiler, engine, pump, etc., for fast running. We did not learn the captain's name, nor his errand here.

It is expected that a grand excursion and picnic will be held on Holy Island next Wednesday, the details of which, however, are not yet fully settled. It is for the benefit of the Congregational church, the society and citizens to furnish refreshments, for which there will be a small charge. The Gazelle and Clara Belle are to be chartered if possible.

We have received the August number of the Northwest Farmer, published by D. C. Leach, at Traverse City. It is devoted to the agricultural interests of northern Michigan, and we shall probably have occasion to make extracts from its columns from time to time, which is the best testimonial we can give of its value. It is worthy a good support from the farmers of this region.

The Treadsell lay on the bar at the mouth of the channel an hour or more last Sunday, having struck while trying to make her way around the wreck of the Parsons. The Lawrence and Champlain both passed over the bar along side of the Treadsell, the Lawrence experiencing very little difficulty in getting over. The Treadsell passed up while the other two were unloading, which left plenty of room for them to go out.

"The Chicago & West Michigan railroad company calls for sealed proposals for building the extension of that road from Crooked Lake, Newaygo county, to Baldwin, Lake county, 12½ miles. This is another step on its way to Traverse City."—[Grand Traverse Herald. Let the good work continue and not stop until the "wilds" of Charlevoix county have been penetrated, and the lumbermen's village connected by rail with the outside world.

It having been reported that Mr. Taylor, of the Bridge Street house, is to retire from the management of that hotel on 1st inst., Mr. N. B. Willis, at present clerk of the Fountain City, at once made an effort to get its management. If he succeeds, the traveling public may depend on finding a house well run, and devoted to their comfort, as he thoroughly understands the business, and will make it a deserving competitor for the other hotels in this vicinity.

The card of Mr. John Nicholls will be found in another column. He employes twenty to twenty-five men in and about his saw mill, and is pushing the lumber business to its fullest. His interests, however, are not confined to that branch, as he has valuable property in other portions of the county, the management of which fully occupies his time. A dozen other men like him would soon double the population and business of Charlevoix county by bringing here more active and enterprising mechanics and workmen.

Nine chairman of township boards of school inspectors were present at the annual meeting held this week, Mr. Wm. Harris, of Norwood, presided over their deliberations. Matters of general interest to schools were discussed. The standard of qualifications established for teachers was raised, as follows: 95 plus, of second grade summer, 90 plus, of third grade, 75 plus, 50 plus. A. E. Upright presided over the election of examiner. The names of R. L. Corbet and A. W. Chew were re-elected, the former receiving five votes, the latter four.

"The Veteran" is the title of a sixteen page, well-printed semi-monthly magazine just started at Lansing, Mich., under the auspices of the G. A. R., department of Michigan, and devoted to the interests of the boys of '61 to '65, and their heirs. The name of W. L. Smith, for a number of years deputy superintendent of public instruction, appears as editor, which is a sufficient guaranty that the work will be well done. Its motto is "fraternity, charity, loyalty." Subscription price, 50 cts per year,—within the reach of every old soldier. In the marine news of a city daily we find the following concerning Sabbath breaking and its punishments in Canada. Perhaps a little such rigorous enforcements of law would work to advantage here in Michigan, but there are times when it would also work to great disadvantage and loss: "The tug Active and consort in the ferry trade to Toledo received permission to pass through the Welland canal Sunday. Some of the men refused to work. The captain of the vessel reported the matter to Inspector Collbourne who was summoned before the magistrate and fined $1 and costs. At Thorold he was taken before a magistrate, and three forty papers showing that he had been previously convicted. The case was then dismissed, but defendant was told he was very fortunate in having previously been fined, as the fine which would have been inflicted at Thorold would have effectually checked Sabbath desecration. This has been lockstenders were fined for helping the tug through."

The Gale, the Wreck, Etc.

The schooner B. Parsons, which was wrecked on the north pier some two weeks ago, went to pieces during the gale last Thursday, and now lies a total wreck between the two piers at the mouth of the channel. Great excitement prevailed a short time after, as another schooner was making the port, and for a few minutes it seemed as if she, too, would strike the wreck and be dashed to pieces on the bar. Navigation into this port was effectually closed until the wind went down.

On account of the gale neither the Grand Rapids nor the Faxton could stop and the Faxton could not land at Petoskey, but was glad to get into harbor at Harbor Springs.

On Friday morning the wind had gone down so that the Sea Gem and Hercules, which had rode outside could come in, and other small craft also passed in and out.

Sunday morning, in trying to enter the channel south of the wreck, the steam barge Treadsell, with a cargo of iron ore, got on the bar, and was unable to get off until about four o'clock in the afternoon. While she was still on the bar, the propeller Champlain came in and ran on the same bar. She experienced no great difficulty in getting in, and was just entering the river when the Lawrence came in. She, too, took a short rest on the sand pile by the side of the Treadsell, but only for a little while.

In leaving the harbor the Champlain tried to make the channel ahead of the schooner Hope, in tow of the Higgie, when the gib boom of the schooner Wright, on returning from her excursion to Bay View, ran into the bow spirit of the schooner Hercules, and broke off her flag staff.

The tug Bob Stevenson pulled out her lumber Monday while assisting the Treadsell over the bar.

Institute Notes and Jottings.

Reported for the Journal.

Monday forenoon, at the time appointed, only one teacher was at the school house.

At 2 p. m. of the same day the organization was perfected, with 41 teachers present.

Program for Monday afternoon: Elementary sounds, by J. H. Coombs; language lessons, by Mrs. Williams.

All of the teachers enjoyed the social on Monday evening very much.

Major E. H. Green was very busy Monday in caring for the teachers and securing places for them; he is deserving of great credit for his efforts in promoting their welfare.

Tuesday: Language lessons, by Mrs. Williams; geography and civil government, by J. R. Crombie; U. S. history, by Mrs. Williams.

Prof. Olney, of Ann Arbor, was present Tuesday morning, and made some interesting remarks on geography and arithmetic.

The teachers were out in force on Tuesday evening to attend Prof. Coombs's lecture on "Our public schools." It was bristling with good points, and a vein of humor, which all seemed to appreciate, prevaild throughout the entire lecture.

Wednesday morning found fifty-five teachers enrolled. This is the largest number that ever attended my institute in the county.

Program for Wednesday morning: Language lesson, by Mrs. Williams; geography and primary reading, by J. R. Coombs; U. S. history, by Mrs. Williams.

Prof. Ewing arrived on the Clara Belle and was in attendance Wednesday afternoon, addressing the teachers with a few pleasant remarks before commencing his work.

Program for Wednesday afternoon: Elementary sounds, by J. R. Crombie; arithmetic, by J. W. Ewing; civil government, by J. R. Crombie, U. S. history, by J. W. Ewing.

An interested and appreciative audience listened to the lecture of Prof. J. W. Ewing, Wednesday evening, on school government. Among the many interesting topics discussed, the following are the most striking: Children should be taught to respect age; the individual rights of pupils was brought forward in an interesting manner; the bad habits of teachers, as the use of slang phrases, and their effect upon the children, was ably handled; the best point was in regard to the relations of parents to teachers, a point which cannot be too much considered.

LINES TO HER MEMORY, WRITTEN BY HER MOTHER.

Little Katie is not dead, but sleeping, Short was her time here, long is her rest. She's gone, gone forever, gone to dwell with the angels above. No sighs or tears can recall her. The doors of the mansion are departed. How mournful the looks of empty chair, the deserted couches, and the dangling shoes peeping from the tiny bed. Little Katie's name is in the golden book. To join the angels and sing we cannot teach her such. The mother is dreaming of her girl whose sun is set and covered, and the nights are full of anguish, and tears, and thoughts unrestrained, full of hopes, and fears.

"Then on dear babe, and take the rest;
God called thee home, the thought it best."

THE GALLANT COWBOY.

Oh, it was a gallant cowboy
Who had traveled from afar
On the southern exposure
Of a hog and cattle car,
Just to be a bold road-agent,
As in books road-agents are.

He'd a second-hand revolver
And a six-inch jack-knife, too,
And he wore but one suspender
And a hat with holes jabbed through,
And he bought a sorry pacer
Just to tell him what to do.

Then he made a call of business
On a leading tenderfoot,
And observed, "My gentle partner,
I'll relieve you of your loot.
So elevate your digits,
Or I'll be obliged to shoot."

But arose with ire malignant
That augentle tenderfoot,
And lampiled the gallant cowboy
On his patent bowie-knot,
And he severed him through the gloaming
Like a whirligig to wood.

THREE-FINGERED JACK.

On the Saturday of a certain Houghton meeting, in a year not far removed from the present period of grace, a party of somewhat disconsolate aspirits were gathered around my, I trust, not inhospitable hearth. It had been a disastrous week. Fortune had, from the beginning to the end, steadily set her face against that portion of the racing community which sporting writers delight—I presume in irony—to allude to as "the talent;" and, though I had sought to legatie them of their melancholy with such delicacies as the establishment of a bachelor, whose means were limited and whose credit had seen better days, could at a short notice provide, the hearts of my guests were still heavy. When the dinner had come to an end—and I must say that mi-fortune did not appear to have materially affected my friends' appetites—various proposals were submitted for the lightening of the hours that had still to be got rid of before custom, or fashion, would permit of the universal refuge of bed. But my chairs and my tobacco were felt to be present pleasures which no wise man—and in theory my friends were among the wisest of their kind—would be willing to exchange, while change could be deferred, for the uncertainties of the future. A duet or two was therefore turned to the eloquent appeals of the youngest of the company in favor of a new star, lately arisen in the murky firmament of the music hall—a young person liberally gifted alike in lung and limb, who was then nightly delighting the intellect of our critical youth with a ballad of abnormal dullness and impropriety. Cards, too, had been interdicted on the rational grounds that, with the prospect of a "black Monday" already imminent, to woo still further the pranci-mious smiles of fortune would be but the vainest invention of the most foolish mind.

Yet though cards, as a pastime, were prohibited, they were found to provide an agreeable and salutary subject of conversation. For some little time we instructed each other as to various tales of our triumphs and reverses, with marvelous histories of fortunes that should have been won and might have been lost, of authority that would have been overthrown by the mere production of a P'Attagnan, or impassibility that would not have disgraced an Athos.

It was in one of the pauses of this intellectual talk that a youth, familiarly known in society of greater or less politeness as Tommy the same who had pleaded the cause of the music hall—was observed to be in labor of an idea. The process was watched with some curiosity, as one with which familiarity had not yet bred contempt. Since the rejection of his original proposition he had, indeed, maintained an unbroken silence, which might, however, have been dictated as much by petulance as discretion. At length he spoke:

"This conversation has been particularly entertaining and instructive to one of my small experience and limited intelligence; and I'll tell you what I'll do in return, if you'll let me. I will tell you a story. I don't know that it will prove very amusing; but I do know it'll be true. It won't be very long, I think; but if so, I dare say one of you will be so obliging as to tell me when you've had enough.

Assuring him of our unalterable determination to abide by this generous proposal, we settled ourselves to an attentive, and our friend began:

The scene of my story is laid at Oxford, and the time toward the close of the first year of the not very arduous course of study I pursued at that distinguished seat of learning. I was still according to undergraduate law, a freshman, but, of course, panting to be quit of that opprobrious, if theoretical, slur of freshness. We were rather lively lot at St. Dunstan's in those days, and not, perhaps, over sensible. Cards were much in fashion among us, many other practices not included in the written law of a university education, and, though at that time I knew no more of the binomial theorem than, I dare say, some nineteen-idea'd freshman does of the binomial theorem. I had, I fancy, some nineteen-idea'd notions about the value of money, the chances and chances of multiplied loo, "even though the stakes were confined to sixpences, would have the effect, in the eyes of us seniors, of prematurely effacing the bread of "fine bucs," from my youthful brow. At any rate, the college could hardly have afforded a notary of that exhilarating, but variable, pastime than my humble servant. Nor was I many weeks re-trained to supplied experiences ariel from a promise given to a very sensible uncle that I would engage in no games of chance when money was on no hand. The said promise having been given under pressure (I fear) of a present of the guidd—for drawing on an old relation, and yet greater pressure to believe, from the fruitful resources of his imagination, and not, as he then asserted, from his own experiences of the Cocoa Tree and Crockford's. For my father, he contented himself with making, not extorting, a promise to the effect that any losses I might incur in my pursuit of the blind goddess would have to be made good, not out of his pocket, but my own. The statement which impressed me greatly at the time, but to which subsequent reflection induced me to attribute more sound than sense, for reasons which, on maturer consideration, would probably have commended themselves no less forcibly to my parent.

There was at that time perpetually to be seen about Oxford a fellow known to the general public as "Three-fingered Jack," by which name alone he shall, for reasons which will shortly be obvious, figure in my story; and indeed, there was more foundation for it than for most of the terms of endearment, or otherwise, which the undergraduate sets delighted to coin. For this gentleman's right hand was adorned with no more than three fingers, though how he became shorn of his proper complement, or whether, like Tegey, he "growed so," I never knew. He had himself been a member of the university, though some time before I went up; but his stay had been neither long nor glorious, nor had he, I believe, earned very good opinions from any class of men. What brought him, under the conditions, to Oxford, I neither knew nor cared to know. But there, at any rate, he always was, loitering about the inns we delighted to honor, and enjoying a casual acquaintance with those who were careless what company they kept, or glad enough to get any.

Coming, then, into the hall, one evening in November, toward the close of my last term of "freshmanship," I was astonished to see sitting at the seniors' table, the guest apparently of a party of the name of Russell, our friend of three-fingered fame. I was astonished, I say, for the man was, as I have told you, of indifferent repute, and we of St. Dunstan's rather prided ourselves on our society. But I was still discussing the strange phenomenon with my immediate neighbors, there came to be no strangers, that I remember, among the throng of our freely entertained friends, when I was called, and as I suppose everybody calls, that rule which gives to the dealer who, after a "safe" deal, is fortunate enough to turn up an ace, the stakes of his opponents, who are each and all incontinently hard for the sum of those stakes. At any other time I give myself the credit of supposing that I should have refused to be any partner to so outrageous a transaction; but I wished to get back my losses, which were just then particularly inconvenient; I did not wish to offend Russell, who was the proposer; and, moreover, thought I was as sober as any gentleman need be at 11 o'clock at night after a skinful of good liquor, I was not, very possibly, completely master of my usually sane and reflective judgment.

As sober, I say, as a gentleman need wish to be under the conditions I have specified; but still there are degrees of sobriety, and even mine was perhaps not the superlative. Champagne, too, had begun to flow; a mighty beaker of that exhilarating liquid stood at each man's elbow when we took up the cards again. True, I hardly put my lips to mine, for my fall had shaken me a good deal, and I didn't feel much in the frame for immoderate cups. The stranger, too, as I observed, used his glass but sparingly; but Russell and the freshman drank like fishes, and devilish thirsty ones to boot. Before long, as you may guess, the play began to grow unpleasantly high, and our host, from being generously convivial, began to become a little short in his temper, as well as a little thick in his speech. The freshman contented himself with smiling fatuously and spilling about as much wine as he drank. But that Russell lost nearly £20, and I had shrewd doubts whether his exchequer contained at that particular time an equal number of shillings. You will hardly want to be told that our speculations were being carried on through the medium of "paper." Russell, too, had had hidden here been the largest owner, began to experience reverses, and to objurgate them freely. My luck was fluctuating, but still the average was not bad, and I still thought some of you for something to drink."

"And what became of your three-fingered friend?" asked one of the company.

"I don't know, knows," said Tommy. "All I know is that he left his inn, and a pretty long bill into the bargain, by the first train next morning, and never showed his ugly face in Oxford again as long as I was there."

"Which wasn't very long, I fancy, was it?"

"No, it wasn't," was the short reply, "if you want to know, though I don't see what that has to do with it."

"And Russell—what became of him?"

"Well, he disappeared, too, before long, up that hole pocked, down like a stick. He is writing for a newspaper somewhere, I think, poor devil."

"And the freshman?"

"Oh, took him off to bed, and there we may leave him. What beggars you are to ask questions."

"And hand have been a nice young lot at St. Dunstan's," said one of the party, who had sat silent through these interrogations. "I should like to have been there with you; it would have been more remunerative, I fancy, than Newmarket."—London World.

A LAWYER retained in a case of assault and battery was cross-examining the witness relative to the time of the stroke: "What kind of a blow was given?" "A blow of the common kind." "Describe it to the jury." "I can't describe it." "Show me what kind of a blow it was." "I cannot." "You must." "I won't." The lawyer appealed to the court, and the court told the witness that if the counsel insisted upon his showing what kind of a blow it was he must lay on with the cane." "I object," said the witness. "I don't want to show you, it was this kind of a blow!" and he drove sailing into the face of the astonished lawyer with such force as to fracture his nose.

MAKING UP MEALS.

How a Tramp Keeps Count of All the Dinners He Has Missed.

He was a ragged and unkempt looking person, and very profuse in his thanks for the coin which the New York Tribune reporter had just given him. "Thank you, sir, very sincerely—this will buy me last—Tuesday—week's dinner, I think." Then, after a pause, "Yes, I had Tuesday week's breakfast yesterday afternoon, and this will bring me up to Tuesday night. You see, I'm near on to a fortnight behind now, but that ain't much.

"What is not much? I don't quite catch your meaning."

"Why, being a fortnight behind ain't much. I've run as much as four weeks in the rear before now, but that's bad, and I was pretty well done up, I can tell you."

Seeing, however, that the reporter still looked rather puzzled, he set to work to explain himself. "Well, it's along this way. I allows myself two meals a day. Two meals a day is what a man really needs to keep in any kind of trim, and if he can get 'em regular so much the plen'ainer, but if he can't, why it's his duty to make 'em up when he can. If I only get one meal on Monday the other stands over to Tuesday, and if I m one short on Tuesday again, that leaves four for Wednesday. And do I really keep a score and work off arrears when I can? "Why, of course I do, but its hard work sometimes," he continued, meditatively, "with the scoring, and the beating off arrears is hard. You see one's very apt to get mixed carrying the count in one's memory from day to day—and I don't rightly know whether I ever had Saturday fortnight's breakfast now, but I had a meal late at night on last Thursday which I think was Saturday fortnight's breakfast, but I never felt sure it wasn't only Friday fortnight's dinner. But I don't like getting mixed; it makes one awfully hungry and uncertain like about one's stomach, not knowing whether one has had a meal or not. But what's worse is getting into new a month. I don't feel so bad getting into new week's victuals, or the week's before—when it comes to last months it's hungry work. That's why it is, I'm planned, "I'm always kind o' low for the first few days of a month."

Here he grew sad, as if pondering on some harrowing thought or other. "I only once tramped the year in arrears, and that was in '79. As a general rule I manage to pick up a dinner about Christmas and work off all old scores before the 1st of January. But somehow or another that year money didn't seem very plenty, and I had to begin the new year with a fortnight's meals on my mind, but not in my stomach. It's a terrible thing, sir," he said, bitterly, "to have the new year opening when you ought to be full of hope for a fresh start, and to be dragged back by the twenty-eight dinners and breakfasts in arrears! May you never know what it means sir, and thank you again," and he turned gloomily away to buy last Tuesday week's dinner.

I Am the Doctor, Madam.

Surgeon Blank was noted for his success with the ladies. He never liked to joke always at the rear of the regiment in accordance with regulation style, and was finally made Brigade Surgeon for no better reason than that he might ride with the General at the head of the column. This increased his opportunities for forming acquaintances, and, as he remarked, enlarged his circle of usefulness.

On one occasion as the General, staff and escort were riding easily through a pleasant country, some distance in advance of the infantry, a fine of musketry brought the detachment to a halt. The bullets were ordered to go forward and discover what the trouble was, with instructions to report to the General at once near which they had stopped. The cavalry went, and the General, staff and escort waited, but the regimental drum majors behind, went with the staff officers in the house. They sat near by in a large room. Opposite the door was a low bed on which reclined a woman apparently sick. She had a pale face, and did not appear to be suffering much. The surgeon was quick to see the advantage he possessed over the officers. Laying aside his hat and gloves, he assumed a professional air and approached the bed. "I am the surgeon, madam. Are you sick?" No answer. The doctor repeated: "I am the doctor, madam; perhaps I can help you." The woman made a sort of moan. Conscious of the smiles of his fellow-officers, and conscious, too, that he was very much confused, the doctor, in a sort of desperation, exclaimed: "I am the doctor, madam; I am the physician; I am the surgeon, you know." Even this emphatic statement elicited no reply. The doctor thereupon took up the hand of the woman, and proceeded to feel her pulse, saying, as he seated himself in a chair near the bed: "I am a doctor, and I think I can help you." At last the woman turned her head and said in a hollow, doubting tone: "Do you, doctor?" Then you air the nineteenth person who has felt my pulse this morning."

The doctor retired abashed. The regiments had passed over the road, and the drummer boy had represented himself as a doctor, and had felt the woman's pulse, and gravely expressed his conviction that he could help her. The firing of guns caused by drummers who thought themselves engaging parties, and the laughter of the regiment, had further added to the confusion of the surgeon, who had been badly sold by his artistocratic associates, but a French writer who has been badly the matter up finds that this practical joke was a game, and that he is not the Hugos, as far as can be ascertained, were ordinary farmers.

How Pretzels Are Made.

The best white flour is used, and yeast dough is made similar to that used in the manufacture of bread. In the bake-rooms is a twenty-gallon kettle filled with boiling lye made with water and potash, which is bought in cans. A workman seizes a piece of dough, rolls it out into long rolls as large as a bologna sausage, and then cuts the roll into pieces about three inches long. One of these pieces is rolled into a long strip, large in the middle and small at the ends. The workman places a thumb and forefinger at each end of the strip, crosses his hands in a twinkling, dabs the ends into the fat part of the strip by the same motion, and the pretzel is shaped and ready for the lye kettle.

A QUEEN OF THE STAGE.

"Her Second Love," and the important Secret She Reveals for the Benefit of Women.

[From the New York World.]

Several years ago the American public was amused by the extraordinary success of a little lady who had been previously but little announced. She was one of an innumerable number of aspirants for public favor and had no instrumentality aside from her own talents to cause recognition. In spite of this fact, however, she quickly achieved a warm place in the heart of the public which she was even loused to hold ever since. Whatever was announced, therefore, that Miss Minnie Granger would star the coming season in the play "Her Second Love, written by Mr. John A. Stevens, it was only natural that unusual interest should be manifested, not only in theatrical circles, but in other branches of the community. This was especially the case, as it was known that Miss Granger had, for the past year, been in exceedingly delicate health, and the determination to start in a strong emotional play was the more surprising. One of the staff of this paper was accordingly deputized to see the popular lady and ascertain if the rumor of her illness was correct.

Miss Granger's countenance is familiar to nearly every one in the United States. It is a face one soon never to be forgotten. Features remarkable in their outline and contour are surmounted by a pair of large and deep eyes beaming with the greatest soul power. It is easy to see where Miss Granger obtains the ability to portray characters of the most emotional nature. She possesses within herself the elements of feeling without which no emotion can be conveyed to an audience. The interviewer found the lady at her home in this city and was accorded a quiet welcome. It was evident at once that she was in greatly improved health, which the expression and color of her countenance both indicated.

"Is it true Miss Granger that you contemplate a starring tour the coming season?"

"Yes, indeed. My season opens in Chicago on the 16th of July. From there I go to San Francisco and then go over the remainder of the season through the Eastern and Western States."

"Are you confident your health will permit such an undertaking?"

A ringing laugh was the first reply to this question, after which she said:

"Certainly. It is true I have been ill for the past two years, but now I am wholly recovered. Few people have any idea of the strain a young actress undergoes when she is starring on continuous parts. It is necessary to put one's whole soul into the work in order to rightly portray the character. This necessitates an utter abandonment of one's personality and an assumption of the character portrayed. This is a mental and part it is necessary to do of the same emotions the part is supposed to feel. For months at a time I actually cried each night over certain passages and I was then playing the medicine considered it art. Probably it was this strain so soon the less real tears and the effect was more than I could bear away my health.

"Do you anticipate avoiding this in the future?"

"Not in the least. I expect to have just as great a strain as before, but with restored health and a knowledge of how to retain it I do not fear."

"You speak of a 'knowledge of how to retain health.' Will you kindly explain what you mean by that?"

"You must be aware that women by their very natures are subject to trouble and weaknesses which have their origin in the same of these troubles is legion, but in whatever form they may come they are weaknesses to which I have been well versed in person and those by professional relations, and of which even their best friends would rather not speak. I am glad to be able to say that in my case all of these troubles have been entirely removed by the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. I was also troubled with kidney disease, which was very distressing, but which is now entirely removed. I speak from the depths of a heart overflowing with gratitude and I am thankful I know the means of relief, and how to retain it in perfect health."

"Then a explain more fully."

"Well, I have found a remedy which seems specially adapted to the needs of women. It is pure and palatable, and contains the best and life as I believe, nothing else will. It is really invaluable and if all the women in America were to use it I am quite sure most of the suffering and misery would be avoided."

"What is this wonderful remedy?"

"Warner's Safe Cure."

"And you use it?"

"Constantly."

"And hence believe you will be able to go through the coming season in good health?"

"I am quite certain of it."

Such was the interview. Miss Granger. Will you please give me a list of the parts you have created and the characters you have taken part in since your first appearance in public?"

"I first played for a time with the amateurs in New York and Brooklyn. I then went to Europe and studied under the instructions of the best dramatic teachers of the day. On my return I made my first appearance in this city. Next I supported John Mcculloch, Lotta, the great Rose Eytinge, Frank Mordaunt, etc. Subsequently I created and took part in Harry Hilton in 'Rosedale' and Mary Arnold in 'Hazel Kirke.' and the coming season, as I have said, will be devoted to 'Second Love.'"

As the writer was preparing home he fell into a train of musing, and could not help but feel that the women in the land who are suffering could make the Miss Granger's experience, and the remarkable results achieved by the pure remedy she used, how much suffering might be avoided and how much happiness secured.

News Brevities.

People traveling between Boyne and Boyne Falls will find F. M. Abraham one of the most careful and obliging drivers on the road.

L. S. Benham, of Alma, is about to settle near East Jordan and engage in bee keeping. After he gets well started he will have bees to sell to those wishing to engage in the same business.

The Enterprise gives the following figures as the shipments from East Jordan for the season: Lumber, 2,800,000 feet; 1,000,000 lath; 11,500 cedar posts and railroad ties; 460 cords of wood and bark.

M. G. Cook, of Boyne, has a pleasure yacht, the "Little Teaser," which he claims will beat anything on Pine Lake. Here is a good chance for a race and some fun, for there are doubtless others who own yachts who have the same opinion.

The United States hotel at Boyne, under the management of Mr. Geo. W. Childs, has come to be one of the most popular houses in the county, and it has been called the best $1.50 house in this region. It takes all the best custom at Boyne and that vicinity,—tourists and pleasure seekers making it their headquarters. Before he could get such patronage a great amount of work was necessary, and the house was renovated and refitted throughout. The walls have been covered with new paper of the latest design, the woodwork painted, the floors recarpeted, and the rooms refurnished with complete sets in ash and black walnut. An addition of 44 feet has just been completed on the south side, the upper stories of which are made into guests' rooms, and all the furnishings are new. The bedding is of good material, and ample for these chilly nights. The ladies' parlor and dining room are separated by very large doors, which may be thrown open, if necessary, making the two as one large room. Both are handsomely decorated with new paper, and the furnishings of the best quality. Last, but by no means least, the manager and all employes are courteous and obliging, giving every attention to the wants of guests, as we know from experience. The traveler who contemplates visiting Boyne should write U. S. hotel where he will not fail to see it. Mr. Childs was formerly proprietor of the Bailey house, Stanton, and those who knew him there will not fail to hunt him up when traveling this way.

Clippings from the Boyne Statesman.

The sidewalk between the U. S. hotel and postoffice is being widened. Quite an improvement.

Gran White, now head sawyer in the Sheboygan mill, cut 1,054 feet of lumber in thirteen minutes last Thursday—scale measure.

Our business men have evidently taken a fancy to black fronts trimmed with red. A number of store fronts in Boyne City look well in those colors.

H. A. Rothenburger, living about three miles from town, was badly injured last Friday by a large limb falling upon his head and shoulders.

Sprinkles from Springvale.

Farmers about done haying for this season.

Plenty of new potatoes.

Mr. Harmon Bixby made Springvale a flying visit, the past week.

Red raspberries are ripe, and the small bay may be seen going to pick berries for "tun."

Springvale takes the cake for having the largest potatoe field in the county. It contains sixteen acres.

Mr. Geo. Embury, sports a "drag" new wagon. Won't you please give us a ride, George?

JACQUES.

Clippings from the Harbor Springs Independent.

About 500 Grand Rapids people are spending the heated term at the various northern resorts.

The Harbor Springs turn table, which has been out of order for a time has been repaired, and now goes around as easily as the hat in the church.

The site for the Harbor Point lighthouse has been surveyed and staked out. The association reserves a fifty-foot drive between the government land and the beach.

The hay crop of northern Michigan is immense this season. In some localities large fields of beautiful grass will remain uncut, the price hay is selling at not warranting the cutting.

The life saving station on North Manitou Island has been made a full pay station, with a constant guard and patrol of the shore, the many wrecks that have occured there making extra precautions necessary. The captain receives a salary of $600, and each of his men $50 per month. The station has recently been supplied with a complete outfit, including boats lines, car, mortars, etc.

Making other Hearts Ache.

The monopolists' organs are very sensitive lest the Western Union strikers shall invade the rights of the telegraph company. These organs talk with a sort of horror of the "outlawed conspiracy" which the operators have entered into against the peace and good of the company that has employed them. The facts, however, speak for themselves. The strikers have been orderly, peaceable and self-controlled. They have in no way attempted to interfere with the company's business. They have refused to work for what they consider insufficient pay. That right has never yet been denied in this country. The right demanded and exercised by many labor unions, to forbid or prevent other men from working, has never been conceded in this country, and never will be. But the operators make no such claim, and have so far abstained from interfering with the company's obtaining whatever assistance it can command. It is only when strikers undertake to intimidate by violence those who do not want to strike, or who wish to return to work, that a public sense of justice feels that they put themselves in the wrong.

Moreover, it does not lie in the mouth of the Western Union corporation to condemn anybody for invading other people's rights. It is itself a most insolent and aggressive public enemy. If it wishes to run its lines anywhere it never says "by your leave." Its poles disfigure the streets. Its wires are laid wherever it is most convenient for the company to place them. Its charges to the public are what it pleases to make them, without regard to competition, and with sole reference to its dividends upon fictitious capital. For the Western Union corporation to talk of being annoyed or injured by a strike of its operatives, is absurd as Louis XV.'s complaining that the French people annoyed him by crying out in the streets that they were hungry, and parading their starving children in front of the palace filled with idle and well fed menials, courtiers and servants who lived on the fat of the land.

The chief of the striking "linemen" of New York, in a speech before the striking telegraphers "hit off" the situation very graphically when he referred to the company's setting the police to watch the linemen. "After we have sneaked on the roofs of private dwellings," said he, "put fixtures up, drove spikes, stole right of way, climbed walls, and risked our lives for the company, bluffing the property-owners who attempt to interfere with us with some story or other, and all the time stealing for the company, they have now no better use for us than to turn us over to the police."

A corporation without a soul has no feeling, when it treads on the toes of other people. So when it has its own toes to tread on, having no feelings, it has no claims to sympathy or condolence. When a bull crushes through a china shop, the owner of the china will not weep much should the broken china cut the animal and set the blood to running.—[Detroit Free Press.

Clippings from the Detroit Free Press.

Ten thousand intelligent, honest, hard-working, sober men and women, fighting nearly $100,000,000! What man or woman, unless their hearts are like Jay Gould's, can help sympathizing with the operators against monopolists?

After paying six per cent on its enormously inflated stock last year the Western Union company had a surplus of nearly $2,000,000. Deducting $315,000 spent for new lines, wires, etc., there remained a balance of $1,-685,000. This divided among their operatives would have made an average addition of nearly $10 a month to each one's salary.

The Detroit Post and Tribune, a bigoted and stupid organ of the monopolists, says that the action of the telegraphic operators is the same which resulted in "the destruction of property at Pittsburgh, which stopped the business of the country without by rail, produced such vast distress and so many crimes in the coal regions of Pennsylvania, and which has always resulted in disaster, mischief and crime." No other paper has the news. Your monopolists very naturally looks upon a man's attempt to get higher wages as a "disaster" and a "crime," no matter how orderly, lawful, and just his demands and conduct may be.

Governor Foster says that Forker's chances in Ohio are "splendid," because Forker was "a soldier during the war." This does not help an Ohio man, as "Calico Charley" himself ought to know. Foster was called "Calico Charley" because, during the war, he stayed at home and made money by selling cotton goods at a large advance to soldiers' wives and widows. Yet when Foster was a candidate against Ewing, who was a gallant and thorough officer during the war, it did not help Ewing's "chances" at all. On the contrary, Ewing was defeated and "Calico Charley" elected. Why, then, should Forker's war record aid him. The Ohio people lay no stress on a man's military record. They appear to be willing to elect a civilian as readily as they would a soldier.

The New York Commercial Advertiser, which like nearly all the prominent republican papers, with the notable exception of the orthodox New York Times, sympathizes with the monopolists against the operators, says that the strikers are "an infinitesimal fraction" of the people of the United States. They are said to number at least 10,000. If 10,000 operators in the telegraph business are only "an infinitesimal fraction" of the people of the United States, what size are the "operators" in telegraph stock Jay Gould, Russell sage, Cyrus W. Field and half a dozen of the men who are as much responsible for the strike as the men in their employ? Do such men count any more than common people? The monopolists and their organs seem to count them more, but in this country where votes, not names or dollars, are supposed to be counted, they will soon begin to count as much as the strikers.

The two eminent, conspicuous, bigoted, big iron-clad protection journals in this country, while sniveling about the interest of the workingman and laborer, are the unblushing champions of the capitalists and the monopolists. These are the New York Tribune and Chicago Inter Ocean. And these two papers signally and exceptionally among the newspapers of the United States are the friends of the Western Union and the enemies of the strikers. This is perfectly natural. The perpetual champions of monopoly in one kind of business jump from mere habit to uphold monopoly in every form. Their sympathies, their modes of thinking and of writing fall as naturally into the monopoly channel as do drops of water by capillary attraction drawn into the trickle, the rivulet, the brook and the river. It is their nature to. The same is true of the Post and Tribune of Detroit—an insolent and ignorant champion of monopolists of every sort. It has had nothing but sneers, derision and abuse for the strikers; going so far as to accuse them of misusing and misappropriating the wires of the company to organize their resistance to what they regard as tyranny and greed. The mouth pieces of monopoly hate any movement calculated to weaken monopoly.

A TURNED-DOWN PAGE.

There's a turned-down page, as some writer says,
In every human life;
A hidden story of happier days
Of peace amid the strife.

A bold leaf that the world knows not—
A love-dream rudely crushed;
The sight of a face that is not forgot,
After the voice be hushed.

The far-distant sounds of a harp's soft strings,
An echo on the air;
The fairest page may be full of such things,
Of things that once were fair.

There is a hidden page in each life, and mine
A story might unfold;
But the end was sad of the dream divine—
It better rests untold.

The Nail-Makers and the Tariff.

Grand Rapids Democrat.

The condition of trade just now in many of the "protected" industries is a good illustration of the pernicious effects of the present high-tariff system. By reason of the enhanced cost of production, which is the inevitable result of the protective tariff, the American manufacturer's wares are shut out of the foreign market where they find it impossible to compete with the cheaper goods of England. His sales are thus confined to the home market, and this once glutted his goods remain on his hands and he is forced to stop his machinery, discharge his employes, and wait for the surplus products to be worked off. This feature of the so-called "protective" policy is trade pressed nearly every month by the processings of the western association of nail manufacturers, which association yesterday held its regular meeting at Pittsburgh and decided to order an general resumption of work in the mills for a few weeks from next Monday, the suspension for the past four weeks having resulted in greatly diminishing stocks." The western nail association includes the great bulk of all the nail factories in the country. Its mills, extended under the stimulating effects of a high tariff on nails, have a capacity when run on full time far greater than needed to supply the American demand, and the increased cost of manufacture caused by the high tariff on iron, machinery, and coal renders it impossible for them to compete successfully in the foreign markets with the cheaper English product, which is shut out of the American market by prohibitive duties.

Therefore about once every month this western nail factory trades union meets, discusses the state of the nail trade, and if it is thought that nails are getting too cheap, decides to create an artificial scarcity by stopping all the mills for two weeks or a month, as the interests of the great combination seem to demand. It is simply another method of getting up a "corner" on nails and thereby increasing their price; and this is made practicable only by the Chinese policy which forbids the consumer buying his nails where he can get them for the least money. It enables the nail factories to get on the principle of "small sales and large profits," while free trade would force them to adopt the policy of "large sales and small profits" and it requires no argument to show which of these commercial policies is to the benefit of the consumer.

By reason of the artificial scarcity caused by the shutting down of the factories during the past month, the nail monopoly has been enabled to hold up the wholesale card rate to dealers at three dollars per keg of one hundred pounds for "standard" sizes, which makes the retail rate by the keg $3.35 at least $1.10 higher than nails were sold at in this city in 1879.

But there is another view to be taken of this rail making monopoly combination, which is the direct outgrowth of the "protective" tariff, from which are the wage earners of these nail factories benefit by a "protective" tariff under the workings of which they are liable to be thrown out of work for two weeks or a month half a dozen times a year?

The fact is there is more capital invested in the nail factories of the countries than can, at normal prices, be profitably employed in supplying American markets and any considerable foreign demand is shut off by the high cost of production. The nail factories are driven to the combination policy in order to prevent ruinous competition, and, finding that they have the power to keep prices above the normal rate, they use the power which the prohibitive tariff gives them not only to protect themselves but to bleed the general public and keep down the wages of their employes. For what large have such employes of resisting a cut in wages when they know that it is the settled policy of their bosses to halt the nail market by stopping production? A strike only stops the expenses of the pay rolls and greatly enhances the prices of all the nails in stock in fact causes just what the nail combination has accomplished by its just-ended month's shut down.

What has been above said in regard to the nail factories applies very generally, but of course with certain limitations and qualifications, to the great majority of the "protected" industries of the country. They have far more capital and machinery to pay interest on or to get interest from than can be kept employed in supplying the home demand for their products, and the higher cost of their wares caused by the tariff makes any considerable export trade impossible. They can supply the American market by running, say half or three quarters time, but if they run more they must pile up their warehouses and enter into agreements to stop with each other. They are therefore either forced into a combination to hold prices up by causing an artificial scarcity, or driven into a cut-throat competition in the endeavor to unload their over product upon an already glutted and home-restricted market. Whether they do the one or the other depends upon whether the circumstances are such as will or will not permit the successful formation of such a monopoly combination as that of the western nail association.

Political Assessments.

The near approach of the Virginia and Ohio elections and the presence of many interested congressmen and politicians at this time have created the opinion that a still hunt for campaign funds is being conducted. In the opinion of many of these gentlemen the civil-service law does not place it out of their power to receive such funds from government employes. They concede that the bill was framed with the purpose of putting a stop to political assessments, but hint significantly that it will by no means do so, for the reason that the removal of clerks "for cause" can not be prevented. It will never be impossible to find a "cause" for getting rid of a clerk when his continuance in office is not desired. It is still lawful for state committees of the national committee to invite the clerks to contribute, and, if they fail to do so it will not be impossible to send them a draft. Almost my lawsuit be evaded when those charged with its execution are its enemies. The Pendleton bill, as amended, will do much good, but it will not effect all the reforms desired, because the executive function suits the power of removal into the hands of the president, or the secretaries representing him.

The right to "strike" that is essay, to refuse any longer to work for another is essential to the freedom of the workman. It cannot be interfered with by laws without dealing a fatal blow at his manhood. If he is to remain a freeman, he must be able to exercise the right to choose his employer, to make terms with him, to refuse to work for him if he pleases, and to do this in combination with his fellow workmen. The general public may suffer inconvenience by a strike, but that cannot be helped. Freedom is in many ways inconvenient, as foolish Americans, enamored of the Napoleonic despotism, used loudly to proclaim after a visit to Paris. But, after all, freedom is in the long run less inconvenient, more orderly, and less costly than the best devised despotism. [New York Herald.

Free Trade at Home.

No one will be surprised that Congressman Springer declines to debate the tariff question with Prof. Dewsbow, whose debate with Prof. Sumner of Yale last year showed how profitless such a debate may be made. One of the propositions then made by Prof. Dewsbow was that "Free trade has never been practiced by any nation that trades." This of course is not strictly true, and proves nothing as to the wisdom or lack of wisdom of the adoption of a free trade policy by this or any country. Of this the Chicago Times says:

"There is perfect freedom of trade throughout the United States. No state practices the policy of restriction on the exports of its people with the people of other states. We have been since the revolution free trade on a grand large scale for nearly a century, and our people seem to be pretty well satisfied with the results. There is not one solitary argument in favor of erecting a tariff barrier to shut out Canadian or English products that is not as equally sound and cogent argument in favor of the erection of the same kind of a barrier to shut Pennsylvania and New England products out of Illinois. And yet the people of Illinois are not clamoring for the repeal of some of the constitutional provisions prohibiting the erection of a tariff barrier by Illinois. They seem to be pretty well satisfied with the economic influences it is in this respect.

Oranges and Protection.

Charlotte Leader.

Oranges can be grown in Florida and sold in Charlotte for five cents each.

They can be grown in Charlotte and sold at the same profit for one dollar each.

To protect home productions a duty of ninety five cents is placed upon Florida oranges.

Will Florida oranges continue to be sold for five cents each? If not, does protection raise the price of goods? The protectionists may answer.

But look at the result. Upon each Florida orange consumed, Charlotte loses nothing, for the ninety-five cents duty paid by the consumer goes into the treasury. Upon each Charlotte orange consumed, ninety-five cents is lost, for while the consumer pays it, the treasury gets nothing, and the producer only gets for himself the profit of a Florida orange.

That is protection.

A Republican Opinion.

Traverse Bay Eagle.

Many of our republican exchanges are talking loudly and in a jubilant manner about the grand success that awaits the party next year. The Petoskey Record does not share this feeling of assumed success, but, on the contrary, predicts defeat if not total destruction unless something is done at once to avert the calamity. In an editorial of last week the Record says:

"There is no hope for the future of republicanism to be found in the present management, which is controlled by Conkling and Logan in the Senate. In the republican caucus of this session, on the question of a tariff commission, not the politicians, but a majority of congressmen and its policy, and with this in view, only in full force at the caucus next year, the democrats will be sure to elect the Speaker and control the house. Then the republican party in fact ceases to exist."

A DISPATCH from Fort Washakie, Wyoming, says: The President and party left Green River station, on the Union Pacific railroad, at 7 o'clock on the morning of the 6th. The three spring wagons in which the party was seated, were drawn by four Missouri mules each. The roads and the two mountain drives were made delightfully cool and refreshing by the early morning sun on the banks of the Sweetwater, a beautiful mountain stream, which in its gravel channel had been prepared under the direction of Lieut. Lord, the post quartermaster at Cheyenne. The President enjoyed the ride greatly, being seated outside outside of the wagon with the driver, leaving the last forty-five miles the road immediately preceding the reception. Hundreds of antelopes, sage hens and small game also graced the route during the journey. At the post the President and party were received with a salute of thirty-eight guns, after a handsome escort of cavalry that the officers had turned out for the occasion.

The 400 strikers in the Republic mine all returned to work, the company having conceded all their demands. Their wages were cut down some two months ago, and the strike was for the restoration of the old scale.

The lumber shovers at Bay City struck last Saturday for 50 cents an hour, and paraded the streets with a band, gathering in all the dockwolloppers they could find. The vessels have since conceded the demand, and no trouble is expected.

If farmers had the power to combine and put the price of wheat at $2.00, $2.50, or higher, how long would mill-owners or wheat-dealers hesitate before buying European or any other wheat, and glutting the American market if they could? We say, not a minute.

The Sun says that "the republican party must go." Over at Flint they won't go, and in 1876 they would not go down at Washington. It does begin to look as if there is but one power that can make a republican "go" and that is the republican party. [Charlotte Leader.

[Grand Rapids Democrat.

Careful inquiry among the former republicans in Ohio, especially in the western reserve, show that those persons who voted against republican candidates last year, will vote for Hoadley this year. The small elements of discord between leading democrats, of which republican papers have had so much to say, have already disappeared from the canvass and the prospects of a democratic triumph in October are good. [Grand Rapids Democrat.

As our republican friends are interested in knowing what becomes of their public servants after their retirement from office, we give the following from the Grand Rapids, Dak., Journal. Dakota may be a good place to go to if a man has money, but the poor sinner with nothing but hands as a stock in trade would better remain in Michigan. More than one good mechanic has spent all his savings in a ramble for Dakota's riches, and came back to begin new. Perhaps Mr. Latimer will fare better, as the Journal seems to intimate: "Hon. W. L. Latimer, ex-auditor general of the state of Michigan, came down the valley to-day from Jamestown, and gave the Journal office a friendly call. He is half owner of section 25-137-62, on which considerable improvement has been made, and 175 acres in crop. This is Mr. Latimer's first trip through this portion of the valley; he is well pleased with our country, and prospects and prospects returning next spring. Mr. Latimer was one one of the most capable and popular officials ever in the service of the people of the state of Michigan, and is a wide-awake and energetic business man. Men of his stamp taking hold of Dakota interests are of invaluable aid in the settlement and development of this great northwestern territory."

Rufus McGee, a prominent Indiana state senator, and for six years secretary of the democratic state central committee, in a recent interview in Chicago said that all the republican talk about hostility between McDonald and Hendricks was pure bosh; they were on the most friendly terms and really in no sense rivals. There was no doubt whatever, McGee said, that McDonald would have the entire support of the Indiana delegation in the coming presidential convention, and if there were any instructions given they would be for him. So far as he knew there was no talk amounting to anything in Indiana about nominating the old ticket of Tilden and Hendricks. The state would certainly go democratic by a good majority in 1884 unless it should be flooded with republican money as it was in 1880, and he did not think that game could be again successfully played. TRAVERSE BAY EAGLE.

The C. & W. M. railroad company is extending its line from Crooked Lake, Newaygo county, to Babbitt on the F. & P. M. road, a distance of 12½ miles. The road is expected to reach Traverse City by the time the asylum is completed.

The Manistee Democrat says a new steamer called the Lou A. Chamberlain has recently been built to run between Frankfort and Charlevoix in connection with the Sleeping Bear steamers. Her dimensions are: length, 92 feet; beam 18 feet; depth of hold, 7 feet. She is propelled by a 100 H. P. engine. When the owners of the boat expect to commence business the Democrat does not inform the public.

DOANE STATESMAN.

Our docks are never devoid of boats loading lark, wood and other raw material, an immense amount of which is yearly shipped from Boyne City.

A specimen of spring wheat was brought to our office by Mr. Kimball last Tuesday, which measured five feet eight inches. It was grown on C. A. Beaumann's farm, about one and one-half miles from town.

Wm. Moore, of South Arm, was arrested last Thursday on a charge of rape upon the person of Miss Bell Green, aged 16, daughter of Mrs. Thos. Moore, of the same place. The deed was committed on Sunday of last week. The rapist is a brother of his victim's step-father.

Frank Fillmore, aged about 20 years, son of Ebenezer Fillmore, of Long Lake, was killed last Saturday while engaged in repairing machinery at Rawson's mill. The timber carried up, crushing his head and shoulders. He was taken out dead. His body left Monday, at work with him, escaped with slight injuries.

W. T. Addis, of Bay Springs, proprietor of the Spring Harbor & Boyne Falls railroad, informs us that he has discontinued running passenger trains on that road until next season, as it interferes with his lumber business, one locomotive being unable to attend to both passenger and log trains. He also informs us that next spring he will run an exclusive passenger train. It being his intention to put on another locomotive expressly for that purpose. This, we think, will be a good scheme.

Some quite serious rascal stole a bag containing $25 in small change from the office at the depot one day last week. The money had been presented for change for the convenience of people, and was taken during the moment that Mr. Marsh turned away to attend to the last train that night. It is supposed the thief reached into the window, turned the key of the drawer and secured the money. It was the work of only a few seconds. Suspicion points strongly to the guilty party, who it is to be hoped will shortly be brought to justice.

DAILY REPORTER.

Work is being pushed on the 85th hatchery at Petoskey.

Two hundred and twenty-five died at the Arlington Sunday, and a hundred and eighty-three registered Saturday evening.

R. Putnam and N. Lampson, of Flint, are looking about this section of country with the view to purchasing a large tract of timbered land.

Mr. C. H. Beebe, of Weyerhauser, was stopping very high Saturday on account of catching a splendid fifteen pound pike which he captured in the harbor while fishing for perch. Mr. Christy also caught a very fine string of perch.

Charlevoix has had over 3,500 summer guests already this season. They have been distributed as follows: Fearless City and Bridge Street houses, 2,011; Belvedere and Chicago club houses, 300; other hotels and private boarding houses, 200; cottagers and boarding-vessels, 325.

The excursion on the Lawrence was well patronized, about 435 being the total receipts, which the M. E. church of Petoskey expected about $300. The excursionists brought away a good portion of the remains of Strang's horse, and a few more such raids will strip the Island of relics.

The engineer has submitted to the council his estimates for supplying the Harbor Springs with water both from the log and spring brook back of the hill, and the council will probably take steps to submit the matter to the voters at a special election. The estimate for the spring supply is about seven thousand dollars, and the log supply a thousand dollars less.

We don't see how people can live here, where nothing will grow! For instance Sam Shaw brought in the other day a stalk of timothy two feet eight inches long, and a head of oats five feet long. Now if he lived out west the oats that were not eaten off by grasshoppers or bloun out by the roots by cyclones, would be twenty or more inches high.

The Inter-Lake Iron Co has been employing a little Traverse boy who was taken by Wilson Bros. from one of their pound nets Saturday morning, and was on exhibition at the Harbor Springs fish house, where nearly all the fish caught in the bay are packed and shipped. It was a sturgeon as large as a shark, and had the fishes they fed the multitude been as large it wouldn't have been much of a miracle after all. This sturgeon was over six feet long, was thirty-eight inches in girth, and weighed one hundred and five pounds.

Elmira L. Marshall, who has been extensively engaged in the manufacture of toothpicks at Cleveland, Ohio, has decided to enhance his business to Harbor Springs, and has leased the large ware house at the new dock for five years with the privilege of ten. O. M. Cole is now at work remodelling it so as to adapt it to the business, and an engine house and sheds will be put up. The manufacture of toothpicks is not as small a business as it would seem at first thought, for it sometimes a large quantity of poplar and birch wood, and a couple weight or ten men and fifteen or twenty boys and girls. Mr. Marshall seems to be an energetic, wide-awake man, and he says he will get the factory running in three or four weeks.

Capt. C. S. Allen, Indian agent had a narrow escape from a serious ducking Monday night, while enroute for Beaver Island from Cross Village, which latter place he left about 6 o'clock in the evening on a small two-masted schooner, loaded with wood. When about four miles from shore the boat sprung a leak, and most of her cargo of cordwood had to be thrown over board. Toward the small hours of the night the boat, in a badly waterlogged condition reached shallow water two miles this side of Cross Village, when they cast anchor and came ashore in the yawl. The captain came to Harbor Springs yesterday to hire one of the ferries to tow her into the harbor. He states that she is dock down, and will go to pieces if not got inside before a blow comes on.

How Bryant Wrote It.

On the 15th of December he went over to the place [Plainfield] to make the necessary inquiries. He says in a letter that he felt as he walked up the hills very forlorn and desolate indeed, not knowing what was to become of him in the big world, which grew bigger as he ascended, and yet darker with the coming on of night. The sun had already set, leaving behind it one of those brilliant seas of chrysolite and opal which often flood the New England skies; and, while he was looking upon the rosy splendor with rapt admiration, a solitary bird made wing along the illuminated horizon. He watched the lone wanderer until it was lost in the distance, asking himself whither it had come and to what far home it was flying. When he went to the house where he was to stop for the night his mind was still full of what he had seen and felt, and he wrote those lines, as he, erelabilde as our languages, "The Wate r fowl." The solemn tone in which they conclude, and which by some critics has been thought too mournizing.

He was from zone to zone
Guides through the boundless sky thy certain flight,
In the lonely way that I must tread alone,
Will lead my steps aright.

was so much a part of the scene as the flight of the bird itself, which spoke not alone to his eye, but to his soul. To have omitted that grand expression of faith and hope in a divine guidance would have been to violate the truth of the entire vision.—From Godwin's "Life."

Affairs About Home.

Personal Gossip.

J. Milo Eaton returned from his western trip last Saturday.

W. H. Auld will please accept our thanks for late Canadian papers.

Junius S. Dixon, of sophomore class, state agricultural college, is home on vacation.

J. A. Cameron has lots of fun with the boys when they try to ride his mustangs.

Rev. G. Daniels will preach his last sermon before conference one week from next Sunday.

Wm. E. McLennan expects to return to Evanston on Friday, to resume his studies at the college.

Rozelle Rose, of the Petoskey Democrat, and E. J. Smith, of Adrian, state oil inspector, visited Charlevoix on Tuesday.

J. E. Wood went to Sheboygan Falls, Wis., on the schooner Lottie Mason, on Tuesday, to visit his old home which he has not seen in thirteen years.

Mrs. Hattie Strang, with our children, arrived on the 4th, and are now comfortably settled in the rooms in rear of the JOURNAL printing office, where we hope to meet new friends, and as many old friends as find their way to Charlevoix.

E. S. Bartholomew, a horticulturist of Westfield, N. Y., is stopping in Charlevoix a short time. He is looking up the fruit interests of this locality with the intention of establishing, if possible, a fruit, vegetable, and fish canning house in Charlevoix. He expresses himself as well pleased with our location and surroundings.

News Brevities.

The Fountain City house has a new cook.

Indian camp-meeting at Northport next week.

The Bellaire Breeze copies our railroad article in full.

The work of strengthening the south revetment is progressing.

Richard Knight, of Banks, put up a wagon loads of hay this season.

Wm. Flannigan, of Banks, loaded a vessel with posts and ties last week.

Messrs. Greening & Geiken report their fishing business a little slack just now.

A new scil craft of forty to fifty feet keel is in process of erection on the north south of the channel.

Stockman & Iddings have 180 new stoves in their warehouse, and the man who cannot be suited is indeed hard to please.

The Charlevoix fire company meet at the engine house every Thursday night for practice and drill. All hands are expected to come out.

O. F. Wisner sold the Orrin Campbell estate in Evelene township on Monday for $1,300, to Orson Campbell, of Beaver Island.

On Monday afternoon James Lynn, the planing mill, received a bad cut on the wrist from one of the small saws. A larger saw would have taken the hand off entirely.

Upright, Emrey & Co. have extended their dock northward to Mason street, and intend to build a plank driveway and sidewalk from Bridge street to the warehouse as soon as necessary help can be obtained. This is an improvement which will be appreciated by their numerous patrons.

Four hundred and eighty-three and one-half bushels of huckleberries, were shipped from Kalkaska in five days last week. What a tired lot of bodies that represents.

An attorney from Detroit, well acquainted with the various offices, says that Cruickshank & Grier's rooms in the new Butters' block, are as fine in finish and convenient in arrangement for business as any in the state.

The fishing business is not booming just now, although some pretty big stories are told by amateurs and pleasure seekers. As a business, fishermen say it don't pay wear and tear of outfit this month, though they expect to see it pick up about September 1st.

Mr. Orson Campbell has for sale a farm of 200 acres on Beaver Island which is cheap at $2,000, and anywhere on the mainland would be worth $5,000. It will raise as good wheat and corn as any land in northern Michigan, and he says he has raised 300 bushels of potatoes to the acre.

Last Saturday a diver was at work removing portions of the wrecked Parsons. Her hull has split into three pieces, and lies across the channel in the sand, with ten feet of water above her. The Trueshell cut a channel nearly eleven feet deep around the south end of the wreck while trying to get in on the 5th.

The Lawrence did not stop here on her last trip down, and went off on an excursion before she came back, delaying our ready-print three days, and adding greatly to the work of publication day. This is another of the difficulties which cannot be provided for or guarded against until we print our whole paper at home, or build a railroad.

Last Sunday morning, while adjusting a rope around the timber-head of a scow, the action of the waves caused a sudden tightening of the line and crushed the thumb of the right hand of Mr. W. L. French. It was afterwards amputated, and is perhaps doing as well as could be expected, but is still very painful. He will now find it necessary to practice writing left-handed.

Messrs. Washburn & Ackert have purchased of Mr. Allen his interest in the machine shop, and will continue the business. As soon as they get brick to finish their foundry, they will push the work on that, and within a short time be ready to commence casting. They will have a skilled workman to look after the details of business, and thus be able to guarantee satisfaction.

Mrs. Lucy Simpson, a colored temperance evangelist, from Detroit, will address our citizens at the opera house next Sunday evening at 7:30. The press speak highly of her as a speaker. She gave the principal address at Bay View on the temperance subject, and also another at Petoskey last Sunday. Of her address in Whitney's opera house, Detroit, the Evening News spake in praise. During this week she is working in the small towns in this county.

The Daily Reporter has completed its first month, and has not, it says, been a success financially. It is doing a good work in advertising the facilities and resources of this region for pleasure as well as business, and we have no doubt hundreds of people will hear and know of us from single copies of that paper sent to them by friends, who will come and see for themselves another year; and without that paper they might have gone on for years and never heard of us. For this reason, if no other, the paper should receive good support.

The ladies of the first Congregational society will hold a bazaar in Bartholomew's opera house Tuesday and Wednesday of the coming week, Aug. 21 and 22, at which time they will offer for sale a large number of useful and ornamental articles of their own making. Refreshments will be served in the afternoon and evening each day. The proceeds will go towards the building of the new house of worship of the society. The ladies have been some months in making their preparations for the bazaar, and we bespeak for them a liberal patronage from the friends of the enterprise which it is to aid.

Last week we stated that it had been reported that Mr. Taylor was to retire from the Bridge Street house Oct. 1st, and that N. B. Willis was negotiating for possession. The last portion of the statement we learned from Mr. Willis himself. Mr. Taylor states that Mr. Willis had not mentioned the matter to him at all, and also informs us that he does not intend to retire, but will continue to make the house first-class in all respects, and headquarters for commercial travelers and the traveling public generally as in the past.

Resorters and others having the management of local lecture courses should remember F. W. Hathaway, of the Redpath lyceum bureau, now making his headquarters at the Fountain City house. This bureau has the management of a large number of lecturers, readers, and entertainers, and can supply talent for any course in any part of the country. Among the names of lecturers are Burdette, Collyer, Cook, Gough, Livermore, Swing, Talmage, and Thomas, all of national reputation, besides many others. Although Mr. Hathaway is here for rest from business, he will give any information desired as to dates, terms, etc.

Upright, Emrey & Co. inform us that they have this week ordered a stock of hats, caps, and gents' furs for winter wear which is expected to exceed in quantity and quality anything in the same line ever brought to Charlevoix. They make a specialty of these goods, and can give bottom prices. To make room for this new stock, and to avoid carrying old goods over to next season, they offer their summer hats at cost, or below if necessary, to dispose of them. In collars they have the latest styles. One in particular the "Anchor B & B." is the neatest of the lot. It is double and reversible.

A stand up and turn-down combined, and is sure to be the favorite. In ties they can suit the most fastidious. They keep a line of gents' furnishing goods in styles and quality to please. Ladies will find there a fine assortment of kid gloves.

New Enterprise.

Mr. E. S. Bartholomew, of Westfield, N. Y., a life-long horticulturist, has been looking about this vicinity for some time, his object being twofold. For a number of years he has been in a position to see and know what the fruit of the Grand Traverse region is in market and at pomological exhibits. To gratify a desire to see the country which could produce such magnificent fruit was one object of his coming. Another, and perhaps of more vital interest to ourselves, was the possibility of establishing a fruit, vegetable, and fish canning house at some available point within this fruit region.

Mr. B. says it is a fact well known to horticulturists that fruit grown in this climate is more highly colored, and richer in flavor and all that goes to make a perfect fruit, than that grown in a higher temperature or a dryer atmosphere, and consequently brings a better price in market. Knowing this, and also that fruit can be raised here in paying quantities, he is satisfied that with some local demand to give an impetus to fruit-growing, the highest state of culture can very soon be developed right here in our midst.

But he does not confine his researches and observations to fruit. He finds that sugar corn, peas, beans, tomatoes, pumpkins, etc., can be grown here in as large quantities, and richer in all the elements of perfection, than in any other locality of which he has knowledge, and that they can be prepared for market in a manner to retain all their richness.

It is his desire to organize a company to engage in the business of buying and canning for market the various products of this vicinity, and not only build up a profitable business, but develop the actual resources of the soil. As a business investment, he says these factories pay a handsome profit wherever established. As promoters of industry and thorough cultivation of the soil, there is perhaps nothing to equal them. Sugar corn will grow thrifty and yield well, and being picked while the stalk is in prime condition for fodder, makes two items of income. Pumpkins may be planted with the corn, and alone yield a handsome profit for the labor expended, without detriment to the corn, making a third item of income for one season. Tomatoes, peas, and beans also yield handsome profits to the cultivator.

All kinds of berries and fruit, and all the vegetables named, may be canned in a manner to retain their superior qualities. As they grow, so they will be in market when placed side by side with the products of other communities. If we produce a better article, the consumer will soon find it out and the demand will greatly exceed the supply.

The canning of fish may also be added, thereby increasing the business of such a house.

It is estimated that a business of two hundred and fifty thousand cans per season may be easily worked up here, which would give employment to a large number of women and boys about five months every summer, and to a number of men dur ng the winter season making cans.

In considering this subject, there are two features to keep in mind. First, the advantage to Charlevoix county, by its influence in developing the resources of the soil, and making a market at home where the farmer can take his produce and know that it will surely bring a good price in cash; and second, the advantages to Charlevoix village by having such a house established within our corporate limits, both in the matter of bringing business and population and giving name and fame to our village as well as our products. Any further or other information on this subject may be learned of Mr. L. D. Bartholomew.

Institute Notes and Jottings.

Reported for the Journal.

The institute closed Friday evening, and the following items furnished by our reporter we publish to make the record complete as began last week.

Program for Thursday: Geography, advanced reading, elementary sounds, and civil government, by Prof. J. B. Crombie; school law, vocal music, and arithmetic, by Prof. J. W. Ewing.

Prof. Olney and Mrs. Williams were among the visitors at the institute Thursday afternoon.

Mrs. Huntington, of the Toledo, O., schools, visited the institute Thursday afternoon.

Program for Friday: Explanation of the U. S. survey system, and effects of alcohol and narcotic stimulants upon the human system, by Prof. J. E. Crombie; a course in self-improvement, and arithmetic, by Prof. J. W. Ewing.

All of the teachers were very much interested and very strongly impressed by Prof. Crombie's experiment with the egg for showing the effects of alcoholic drinks upon the human system and the brain.

Friday found 59 teachers enrolled.

Quite a number of visitors were present and listened to Prof. Crombie upon the subject of alcoholic stimulants.

Program Friday afternoon: Course of poor schools, and spelling, by Prof J. B. Crombie; grading of district schools, by Prof. J. W. Ewing; opening of question box, and answers.

Prof. Orcutt, of Ishpeming, was present at the institute Friday afternoon, and addressed the teachers in a few pleasant remarks.

At the close of the institute the teachers tendered Profs. Ewing and Crombie a vote of thanks for the efficient and satisfactory manner in which they conducted the institute.

A DREAM AND THE REALITY.

BY STANLEY HUNTLEY.

"And have you never left the power,"
The mocking sprite Dreamer said,
"To clasp to all true me-sweet hour,
And I have a hope we thought were dead?
Have you had it and it me only,
A kind thought in with each strain,
That once was brought to it harmony,
And to-comes like a called pain?

"The fair one's soft lash swept her cheek,
Scorned, but offered it to speak

"And so with me since first we met,
The Dreamer answered in her ear,
"The breath of faded mignonette
Came back to me from long ago.
I may be from some boyish dream,
That in the hilly hazy hinterland
Too soften had like a moan ray gleam,
When your fair hands the chords unbind!"

A hot tear burned the fair one's cheek,
Side sobbed, but never sought to speak.

"Come tell me, by what simple art,"
The Dreamer whispered in her ear,
"You stir the music in my heart,
And bring the old joy near to me?
What witchery do you possess
That brings a presence close to me,
And by a line me to love and bless
A dream I feel, but cannot see?

The fair one never deigned to speak,
While her husband thumped the Drummer's back.

THAT HANDKERCHIEF.

BY SHELLBARK HICKORY.

Not long since, while traveling in a Western State, I happened to find myself in the beautiful little town of Humbler, with a few leisure hours on hand.

As the day was fine, I strolled out to see what was to be seen. As I was leisurely advancing down one of the shady streets, whom should I meet but my old friend and classmate, Jake Raymond.

"Well, well, well, old boy, how goes it?" he exclaimed, as he shook hands with me.

"You?" I answered. "Of all men on the footstool! What in creation are you up to, away off here?"

"Here is where I hold forth, and you must go down home with me."

I went, and at dinner was introduced to Mrs. Raymond. She was not what would be called a handsome woman, but there was a wholesome look in her face, and her big brown eyes and white teeth, added to the bright color of her cheeks and the satiny smoothness of her dark hair, fairly entitled her, in the opinion of some, to a certain degree of beauty.

Jake was not wealthy, but he had a comfortable home, and the neatness of the house and yard, together with the trimness of his wife's attire, added not a little to his enjoyment of this world's goods.

Mrs. R. welcomed me cordially to their home, and I enjoyed more than I expected to, the well-cooked meal, prepared by her own skill, and their general society.

The sprightly conversation of my friend's helpmeet, and her infectious smile, completely won my regard; and I smothered a little sigh as I reflected on my own condition—that of a bachelor.

"Where did you get her, Jake?" asked, as we lit our cigars and walked down town.

He smiled in a dreamy kind of way, as he thumped the ashes from the end of his cigar.

"It is a long story," he said. "I will tell it to you when we get to the office."

I was much pleased, for, beside being interested in the woman, I used to like very much to listen to Jake's stories.

Arriving at the office, we made ourselves comfortable, after which Jake began:

When I was a jour in the office of Sheets & Clipper, in the town of Covel, in a State farther east than this, I belonged to an orchestra and to a brass band. I immured the festive guitar in the former, and thereby hangs a tale. You shall see how my membership in the latter also served its turn. So much for myself.

I had a friend, John Simons, who was also a musician, and it was he who guided my unaccustomed hand to finger the guitar.

I enjoyed his society more than that of any of my other friends, but he was a restless fellow, that was not satisfied for long; so he packed his kit 'grip' and left, much to my regret. A few months passed, when he'd John turned up again. He had not been doing anything; only wandering to suit his own gypsy taste, and had even sold the guitar that he so loved to get money to come back on. This being the case, he went a short distance into the country and went to work for a farmer—for he was good as a knecht, and would not stay around town in his shabby clothes. His plan was to stay in the country until he got himself a little 'stuff' in regard to his wardrobe and his finances, and then go back to town and take his old situation, which was agreed to him if he chose to accept it.

Now it happened that the farmer for whom he worked had a younger sister lately married, and he took a violent fancy to John. The young lady met was very proud of his wife and baby, and was not at all averse to company. John was a shy fellow in the presence of ladies, and was slow to accept the frequent and pressing invitations which Mr. Newman (for that was his name) would bestow upon him. But he came to the house, nevertheless, and in his company I, he learned their Mrs. Newman's relations from a neighboring State somewhat, with a certain inquisitiveness as to the reason of my taking the sole leaders to see who the handkerchief was there doing; and all the time I was there, although I never once saw her face, I felt unaccountably drawn.

What she looked like, for I'm sure he did not once look at her face, except to snatch a hasty glance when he was sure she would not see him. He observed narrowly, however, a neatly-sized foot which peeped from beneath her dress; and you are aware, probably from experience, that a pretty foot is almost as essential to a lady's appearance as a pretty face. But better than her soul-fy he found that of her guitar. With that instrument in his arms he seemed to feel quite at ease, and played accompaniments to his own singing the whole evening.

His case was a unusual treat to the family to which they were not accustomed, for Miss Warner's performance on any musical instrument was very amateurish, to say the least. That being the case, he was warmly invited to repeat his visit.

This he did several times; but, just as he was established on a footing of tolerable intimacy, Miss Warner left her aunt and went to Covel on a visit to some other friends. While there she joined some sort of a class that was organized for the purpose of studying certain branches of learning, and soon three of her cousins joined the same class and stopped at the same house she did. They dressed considerably alike, and appeared to be about of the same age; and, as they attended the meetings of their class in the forenoon and afternoon, they nearly always passed our office window four times a day; for our office was on the direct route between the residence of Mrs. Winans, the stopping-place of the girls, and the school-house. There were others passing, but you may imagine that a group of four lively young girls, all of them tolerably good-looking, was not long in attracting the attention of the bachelor portion of our establishment, nor were we long in finding out that this was the "Winans crowd;" as there were called all summer. Then it was that I had no need to go to the guitar to find out that which was embodied in his report. Very deliberately he proceeded to give me a manuscript.

"Friends and fellow-citizens: You will readily conceive that upon this mo-ment and never-to-be-o-

"Stop!" we shouted as one man.

"Plain facts and no foolishness, or it will be the worse for you, my man."

He knew well that we would give him a worse trick than that, so he "came down" at once.

"Well, then, the little brunette is Mollie Bell. The blonde is Gussie Ray. The one with the gray eyes and chestnut curls is Stub, otherwise, Sallie, or Sarah Thompson, and the remaining one is, as you must know by this time, Miss May Warner. They are all cousins, and related, in some mysterious way, to Mrs. Winans. Further than this I am unable to say."

"Well done, my dear sir," I responded, for I had a smacking notion all along as to "which was switch," as the saddler boy says, and it had turned out as I had hinted.

Then commenced the merciless raillery of the lovers. A thousand questions as to the reason of my taking the sole leaders to see who the handkerchief was there doing; and all the time I was there, although I never once saw her face, I felt unaccountably drawn.

What was my chagrin to find that she never had heard of me on the night of the guitar serenade; but, having heard my friend John sing the same songs, and knowing him to be a guitarist, she concluded the difference in the voices could be explained by a cold, and that it must be he. Thus was my little romance dashed to the ground, and the fair structure of my "Castle in Spain," had melted into thin air. I begged to be allowed to keep the handkerchief, though, for I was really interested in the girl by this time. She would not not do it, but her womanly heart was touched by my evident disgust with myself, and she gave me her hand saying she was sorry. There was no gleam of amusement in the brown eyes that looked into mine with an honest straightforwardness which was very captivating just at that moment. If there had been, I should have rejected with scorn any overtures of friendship that she might make. As it was, it soothed my wounded vanity to see that "splendid creature," as I mentally called her, glossing over my misadventure, and I resigned her company for a drive the next evening. She accepted the invitation with a smile that gave a glimpse of her white teeth, and my heart beat a little faster than usual, as I pressed her hand and said "good night." I was a little absentminded, and I don't think I could, myself, tell what thoughts so occupied my mind. She was not happy—that was everything else was a kind of bagatelle. I didn't question myself as to whether I loved her or not. Indeed, even as tangible as that was in my mind. The next evening I was actually seized by the throat by a hungry. A succession of those lopped sweetness with a narrow seat, and I blessed the maker thereof, for as we sat there her shoulder touched mine, and I could not shake the long leather, on her hat, in the side of my face. I fear I was very near gone, for the time, but I kept my head, and to feel their fervent pressure returned.

Was it love—seldom? I think not.

How many times did Romeo see Juliet before a premium was conceived, which sees stronger than love?

To go on with my story, I asked her to go to campmeeting in my buggy the next Sunday. I shall bless that grand old Methodist institution as long as I live for the privilege I had in my buggy that day, for I believe that it was on that day she first thought of becoming my wife.

When we started to the campgrounds the wind blew warm, balmy and moist from the southwest. It seemed to hesitate when I got to my own home, and I thought, and likely my looks; so she took that way to let me know it. The next evening Jim was ready with his report. We found out afterward that the sky rascal knew all about it from Sallie, who was the accepted lover of one of the girls. But he pretended that he had obtained his information at infinite pains, and had been obliged to go through inhuman or diabolical fiendishness

Around the County.

Springvale.

Harvest is in full blast.

Mr. H. E. Chatfield, one of the best teachers in Springvale, has closed his school in district No. 1, for the summer term.

Mr. S. B. Thatcher has enlarged his barn, and is now putting on a more substantial roof.

A number of our citizens have been picking huckleberries near Indian river, and report a jolly good time.

Here is a problem for some "political mathematicians" to solve. Why are the taxes in this township only partly paid for the year 1882? A link missing somewhere.

Newt. Webb, who has been employed in the Occidental hotel, Petoskey, the past spring and summer, is now domiciled in Springvale.

Mr. Frick, of Petoskey, moves on his farm in Springvale this week.

South Arm.

Haying still lingers, but will soon be over.

Fall wheat is ready for harvesting.

Mrs. Nieloy, of Hillsdale county, but formerly a pioneer of this region, has been visiting old friends here.

Rev. P. Blake has gone to campmeeting at Petoskey. Rev. H. C. Seofield occupied his pulpit at Echo, and Thomas Tyndall at Bennett's, on Sabbath last.

Rev. J. M. Smith and son, of Horton's Bay, came up last week for a short visit to James Bennett's. His mother is also visiting her daughter, Mrs. Bennett.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Nowlan, of Charlevoix, are visiting Mrs. N.'s parents in Echo.

Misses Papineau and Scofield, teachers, were in attendance at the teachers' institute in Charlevoix last week.

Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Vance, of this township, were visiting friends in Jordan and Warner, Antrim county, last week. They report very fine crops, and promising for an abundant harvest.

Mr. Will Lanway is building a new frame house on his premises.

Mr. J. Smith and Lizzie McKay were married at Ironton July 27th. The bride is from Echo, and a little past fourteen years of age.

Mr. D. Wells and wife are joint proprietors of a young daughter.

A couple of drunken men with their families visited Echo recently. In sympathy for their wives we forbear to mention names, but hope it will not occur again.

Mr. Wesley Cole, of Echo, and Miss Julia Dreyer, of Banks, were married at the residence of the bride's aunt, in Central Lake, last week. A party of friends from Echo were present. We wish the happy couple prosperity and success.

Sabbath desecration is altogether too common, both in the village and the country.

The new state road is in an almost impassible condition on account of mud.

A correspondent of the Bellaire Breeze regales the readers with delightful tid bits concerning wearing apparel. How very interesting, especially to the ladies; for the clear creatures only desire to know what others have, then "husband dear" must get something nicer. The male population will do well to keep the Breeze in their possession.

Green peas and apples have arrived; cholera morbus is expected on next train.

Notes from Exchanges.

EAST JORDAN EXCHANGE.

Two new store buildings have been added to our town, within the past 20 days.

There will be over million feet of lumber shipped from the head of the Arm this week.

The schooners Gauges, of Buffalo, Jessie Phillip, Z. G. Simmons, John Rabor, Potomac and Charlie Marshall, of Chicago, are all loading at this place.

The two story blacksmith shop mentioned in last issue is shouted up and the roof is nearly hinged. That of Coel Ilse caught thirty two trout at is the way buildings are erected in East Jordan.

J. E. Zunk, of Greenville, has purchased a lot on Main street and intends opening here in two or three weeks, a stock of clothing, gents furnishing goods, etc.

DAILY RESORTER.

President Abbott, of the state Agricultural college, Lansing, is at Harbor Point.

Burglars broke into the depot at Boyne Falls Tuesday night, and secured twenty-five dollars.

John Biddle, clerk of Mackinac county, has one-half dozen tea spoons which were made on Mackinac Island in 1825.

Horace Dean the man so seriously injured by falling from a scaffold at Petoskey Monday, died Tuesday at eleven o'clock.

L. M. Uring, of Coldwater, who is stopping at the Arlington, has been down on the Boardman fishing and caught a fine string of grayling.

The new fog horn at Waugoshance was heard Sunday for the first time. It is a much coarser whistle than the one at Skillagalee and blows every forty seconds, giving a long blast.

Among those arriving on the Champlain yesterday were several resorters from southern Illinois, some of whom were very sea-sick. One lady from St. Louis said she would rather walk all the way home than cross the lake again.

Bass fishing at Charlevoix is opening up finely. Quite a number are now caught every day off the piers, and parties stopping at the Fountain City house are within a minute's walk of as fine sport as is to be had around Charlevoix.

Last Thursday was like a fall day, the wind blowing cold and strong, and the bay white with breakers. Although the day was very unpleasant it gave resorters a chance to see nature in one of its moods, and was therefore appreciated for the sake of variety.

The steam barge Truesdell, engaged in carrying iron ore from St. Ignace to Charlevoix, could not enter the Charlevoix harbor on account of the Parsons, and consequently came down to this harbor. In coming to the saw mill dock she struck it head on and jammed a bad hole in the dock.

The state Board of fish commissioners, J. H. Bissell, A. J. Kellogg and J. C. Parker, accompanied by Supt. Chase, were at Petoskey Saturday looking for a location for a state hatchery. After making a careful examination of several sites the commission finally selected one on the little brook just east of the Arlington, and leased a piece of ground of H. O. Rose for a long term of years. Contracts for putting up buildings have been let, and work will begin at once.

John H. Dorner, of Buffalo, who is largely engaged in business at St. James, Beaver Island, was in town Saturday awaiting a boat to return to the island. He states that the fishing has been very poor there this summer, and business is dull in consequence. Mr. Dorner is the gentleman who originated the project for a steamer line from Harbor Springs to Manistique, via St. James, and although it was impossible to arrange the line this season he expects to be able to put a first class boat on the line next spring. Such a line is unquestionably needed to extend a market for Harbor Springs and to furnish an outlet for Beaver Island and the north shore.

GRAND TRAVERSE HERALD.

A visit to Judge Ramsdell's fruit farm shows that his crop this year will average about as usual, taking all varieties together, in spite of the unfavorable season. Plums will be about half a crop, and pears the same, though in the latter named some varieties will give a splendid yield, while others are bearing scarce at all. Apples are falling somewhat, being stung by insects. But peaches are in magnificent condition. If nothing unforseen occurs, the judge will have by far the largest crop he has ever picked. In spite of judicious thinning which is constantly kept up, the branches are so heavily laden that the trees begin to require propping even though the fruit is not nearly half grown. As in all sections of the country, they will be two or three weeks later in maturing than in former years.

Fish Tales.

On the 17th the Bloomington party caught one hundred and six fish: pickerel, bass and trout, at Round lake and Battle creek. Col. W. Crichton caught 25 black bass in the river the 23d; E. B. Miner and F. L. Miller, of Bloomington, Ill., caught 166 speckled trout at Battle creek; G. W. Bateman of the same place, caught a five pounder (black bass) in Elk lake; J. A. Reeves, of Rochester, caught 12 black bass at the short dock. The 14th day of July will be remembered as the day that "Shoo Minnie" caught thirty four bass at the chutes; Col. W. Crichton, of Louisville, Ky., caught 13; A. C. Green and Geo. McAdams, of Cadillac, caught thirty two trout at Yuba; Col. Crichton, of Louisville, twenty-three bass in the river. On the 24th the Bloomington party caught twenty-two fish; Major Dudley of Nashville, Tenn., caught four bass; J. A. Reeves, of Rochester, N. Y., caught fifteen bass after ten; S. Guy Sea and H. Grassie, of Chicago, caught fifteen black bass before breakfast. In the afternoon they caught fifty-eight perch, seventy-six rock bass and three black bass, and in the evening Mr. Sea wound up the day's sport by capturing twelve black bass at the saw mill. On the 19th J. A. Reeves, of Rochester, N. Y., caught seven bass at the short dock; Eddie Barbour, of Louisville, Ky., caught five at the same place, the Bloomington party caught fifteen bass and eighty-two trout at Round lake and Battle creek; "Shoo Minnie" caught eleven bass at mouth of the river; Major R. H. Dudley, of Nashville, Tenn., caught a three pound bass at the mouth of the river. [Lake View House, bill of fare, Elk Rapids.

"Here is a fish (rod and line) story and a true one. Monday last, at Cusp lake, Rev. W. S. Crow and J. W. Milliken were busily engaged among the bass and pickerel, when Mr. Milliken, being engaged with a trolling line carelessly laid his rod down in the boat, and a big bass improved the opportunity offered to secure a fine red, red and line, and grabbing the hook, which hung over, a few feet from the boat, made off with it. Away went rod all. Thus ended the first chapter. Yesterday morning Mr. Crow was fishing near the same spot and, hooking a fine bass, began reeling him in, and there was the identical fish that stole Mr. Milliken's rod two days before, for following the fish came a hundred feet of line and then the rod, and Mr. Crow brought all home and returned the stolen property to the right owner. Thus ended the second chapter. [Herald, Traverse City.

Messrs. J. P. Lancaster and J. O. Hutchins of this place, Geo. Steven of Traverse City, and Will Steven of Glasgow, Scotland, a nephew Mr. Steven, engaged about sixty pounds grayling in Cannon creek Monday. [Elk Lake Comet.

Henry Passage has just returned from a ten days' recreation at Petoskey. He tells, of course, a big fish story, in which he, Mr. C. B. Randall and 30 brook trout in 10 minutes are the principal figures. [Kalmazoo Telegraph.

We have recently noticed several fine strings of fish which have been caught at Crooked lake by our resorter friends. It is evident the fish in that lake are hungry. [Resorter.

A party of Wequetonsingers, consisting of Mr. Beadle, G. E. Smith, Mr. Windsor and their wives, and Miss Armstrong went fishing at Crooked lake and brought back a fine string of pickerel and bass. [Resorter.

Tariff Reform.

Charlotte Leader.

Congressman Carlisle, of Kentucky, has been interviewed in regard to his position on the tariff. He thinks his opponents who charge him with favoring free trade ought to give him credit for having at least sense enough to know that such a thing is not only impracticable, but impossible under the circumstances now existing. Of the practical tariff reform which he favors he says:

Practical tariff reform means a gradual reduction or abolishing of duties without a violent disturbance of the financial interests of the government or the industrial interests of the people. To what extent and upon what articles the reduction shall be made at any given time are questions of detail which cannot be determined upon a full consideration of the subject in all bearings, but I think that every intelligent and just man will agree that it is unwise to maintain duties of 100 per cent and over upon articles of luxury merely for the purpose of enabling certain individuals or classes to carry on an exclusive business at the expense of the community at large. No greater misfortune could befall the democratic party and the country than to have a democratic house organized for the express purpose of upholding and perpetuating those republican abuses of the tariff system. What the real reform could rationally be expected from the republican party as it is now constituted, there are, I am sure, elements in the democratic party sufficiently strong to compel its representatives to adopt some measure of reform, be it ever so small.

It would be as reckless as it would be danger ous to attempt to change the great popular demand for just and equitable legislation upon this subject. We cannot blame the democratic people of the country in pointing to a republican statute around which the great body of their constituents and representatives voted, and telling them that we must endorse it or, which is substantially the same thing, silently acquiesce in it because it is the work of our party. Of course we cannot do best by honest with ourselves and with the people, if we are in favor of revenue reform, but in so with plain terms and do not say we can do no more than this. If we are not in favor of it, let us so declare in our party platforms and not attempt to secure an equivocal position on the subject.

Cutting Down Vacations.

It has heretofore been the custom to allow employes ten or fifteen days additional leave that they might go home to vote. Now all absence from duty on that account will be deducted from the thirty days leave allowed by law. In case an employe has taken his full leave before the time for voting has arrived, he can only go home to vote by losing his pay for the time he may be absent.

The Western Union is not an object of sympathy. It is cunning that the public knows of ten per cent on a capital of $80,000,000, of which $15,000,000 has been declared unlawful and non existent by the courts, and of which it has often been asserted that seven-eights is really fictitious. If that statement be true, then its earnings on its actual capital are eighty per cent. What concern could better afford to pay something even a million if needful to prevent the derangement of the business of the country by a strike of telegraph operators? [Adrian Record.

The absorption of the telegraph service of the country by the government at Washington would be a political danger. It would mean an enormous addition to the long list of those who depend on partisan patronage, and who have a vested interest in supporting the party in power. It would put another obstacle in the way of the free exercise of the will of the people. [New York World.

A Pittsburgh woman who believes that she was miraculously cured in answer to prayer, is now praying for the success of the telegraph operators. The concession of the American Rapid company she regards as answer to prayer. Her success in bringing Jay Gould, Russell Sage and Cyrus W. Field to their knees will be a powerful instance of the prayer test. [Free Press.

The advocates of protection are pleased to accept of the doctrine of free trade as being of British origin, and as it advocates as being swayed by British influence and controlled by British gold.

They also rather loftily denominate the doctrine of protection as the "American system," their object being to delude the unthinking into the belief that they are the special guardians of American largeness and American honor, while the advocates of free trade are un American in their ideas and proclivities. Unfortunately the facts of history are against them. The doctrine of protection is especially the doctrine of despotism. It has long prevailed, as it prevails to-day, in those countries where the citizens enjoys the least liberty, where his rights are the least respected, and where his labor brings the least reward.

The doctrine of protection was imported from Great Britain entire, and nearly completed its work of ruin there, ere either it was in a fair way to be pronounced dead, or was finally repudiated, by the people as a fatal country.

The arguments used to sustain the doctrine of protection in Great Britain in its sway there, were identical with those used by the advocates of protection to-day in the United States. Those arguments are now the theorists of Europe now are also current in this country.

For nearly two hundred years before the introduction of free trade, the doctrine of protection was the doctrine of Great Britain. It continued to be such for half a century later, and was in full overthrown until 1846. For two hundred and fifty years, a period considerably more than twice the length of time this government has been in existence, the nation had put in force logically and thoroughly, that principle of protection. Every species of manufacturing industry, everything and everybody, had asked for, and obtained protection. It held its ground until it had starved and ruined almost every branch of industry, agriculture, manufactures, and commerce alike. Protection had brought Great Britain in the year 1842 to the last stages of penury and beggary, and it continuance, for a half a period, would have precipitated the country into a bloody revolution.

To show how the so-called "American system," affected the people of Great Britain, and to what result it is tending in the United States, we quote from a correct history of England: "Serious as was the talk of the ministers in every town, the most immediate sympathy was felt for him on account of the fearful state of the people. The distress had now so deepened as to the manufacturing districts as to render it clearly inevitable that many must die, while there seemed no chance of any number of the manufacturing classes coming out of the struggle at last with a vestage of property which could enable the world again. The pressure had long existed; it beyond the madness and advocated, and when the new ministry came into power, there seemed to be no other hope but to abandon it with ruin.

"In Carlisle, the committee reported that a fourth of the population was in a state bordering on starvation—actually cutting to their families as being relieved by extreme efficiency every time."

"In the whole district of Yorkshire the allowance to the unemployed laborer was at the rate of the large existing population consumed only a fourth as much bread and meat proposed by the smaller population in 1824."

"In Stockport, a city then half the number it now is, two thirds of the master spinners had failed before the close of 1842; shuttling looms to the number of 3,000 were shut up, and the complaints of many hundreds more were unable to pay rates at all. Five thousand people were walking the street in comparatively idleness."

"At a meeting in Manchester where humble shopkeepers were the speakers, resolutions were rejected which told more than declamatory. Great celebrities were afraid to meet their principals as no money could be offered. Provision dealers were subject to insults from a wolf a man prowling for food for his children, or from a half frantic woman with her dying baby at her breast; or parties from a gang of a dozen desperate wretches were lurking contributions along the street. The linen draper told how new clothes had become out of the question with the east-ones, and they bought only remnants and patches to mend the old ones. The baker and grocer and more surprised at the number of people who bought a half penny worth of bread. A procession did or used to throw among outside cesspits, but now, respectable customers of twenty years standing bought them so much the more eagerly."

"All these, the panic-stricken appointed to 15,000 for among the poor. Even these proved inadequate, and the pinching and doling nothing rather than to fail per week for single dwellings."

"The millwrights and other trades were offering a premium on emigration to induce their hands to go away."

"At Hucklley, one third of the inhabitants were paupers more than a fifth of the houses were empty. In Dorsetshire, a man and his wife had but 2s 6d per week, and three loaves."

Such was the condition to which the so-called "American system" brought Great Britain. It was a vast engine for the production of pauperism and pauper labor.

The reaction came. Free trade was established in 1846, and the prosperity of British manufacturers dates from that year.

The condition of the manufacturing and laboring classes, has constantly improved, and never in their history have they been so well fed, so well clothed, so well housed, so well paid, or been so independent, as they have grown to be under the doctrine of free trade, established on the ruins of the so-called "American System," more than one third of a century ago.

WILLIAM HENRY OSTRANDER was hanged at Utica, N. Y., for the murder of his brother-in-law, Lyman Gardner, Dec. 26, 1887. Upon the scaffold he did not want any one to pray for him. Prayer was offered, however, after which Ostrander spoke for three or four minutes in a rambling manner, claiming his innocence, saying that he had had a fair trial, and recommending the people of the county for hanging him. He was frequently profane and obscene. Ending with an oath, he said: "But as for hanging me, you can go to Hell if he is no good to me." Before the execution Ostrander told his spiritual adviser he did not forgive his relatives, and would not ask God to forgive him.

A FIRE at Vineyard Haven, Mass., destroyed property consisting of stores and summer cottages, of the estimated value of $250,000. The large tannery of the Costello Brothers, at Camden, N. J., was destroyed by fire. Loss, $100,000; insurance $50,000. ...Near Bender station, Pa., on the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, three men who were walking on the track were killed by an express train.

A REMARKABLY well-executed $5 gold piece, which accurately contained $4.63 worth of gold, was stopped in the Boston sub-treasury a few days ago. It is said to have been so well executed as to place experts at variance and to make it a difficult question to determine whether it was made from a die or by superior casting. Alfred Tetzner, Litchfield Observatory, near Utica, N. Y., announces the discovery of another new asteroid. It has a bright light of the ninth magnitude very small, and appears to move so rapidly that it must be a close neighbor of the earth.

IN a prize-fight near Pittsburgh Albert Cavanaugh, of New York, "knocked out" William Wagner, a Pittsburgh broiler, in the fourth round. In a "mill" at Hunter's Point, L. I., Dempsey and Turnbull fought twenty-three rounds, the former being declared the winner. ...Arthur W. Blaney, late cashier of the American Loan and Trust Company, of Boston, has been sent to the penitentiary for seven years for embezzling $41,981. ...The National Convention of the anti-secret parts of the United Presbyterian Church was held at Allegheny City, Pa., 240 ministers and elders being in attendance.

AT a meeting at Boston of the creditors of the bankrupt firm of Stacy & Braun, assignee presented statement showing the assets to be $2,926,949, and direct and contingent liabilities amounting to $2,284,109. ...Capt. THE WEST.

THE wife of United States Senator W. B. Allison, while suffering from an insane attack, drowned herself in the Mississippi at Dubuque, Iowa. Mrs. Allison left home in the afternoon, telling her servant that she was going to one of the near neighbors. Later in the afternoon, taking her parasol on her arm, she went to the river side, directly toward the country, where she was last recognized by the ferryman on duty that day. It is ascertained that she was insane. In the attempt to put out the fire during the afternoon, where she was seen to be very busy, she was slightly burned about the face. On returning by the house in the evening, where she was supposed to be, the nurse, Miss Frost, and a search was at once instituted, but no trace of her could be found. Mrs. Allison was highly esteemed, and among the city and state officials she has a host of friends. The body was found by the river bank, about two or three miles below the city. ...Near Vineland, N. J., Mrs. Mary Ann Hall, a widow, was killed by a Western New York express, and Mrs. Hall's daughter, who was riding in the same carriage, escaped with slight injuries. Mrs. Hall's husband was killed by the same train a few years ago.

THE State treasurer and other officials of St. Louis, Mo., were indicted on charge of violating the Sunday law, but the jury decided that the latter provision was unconstitutional, owing to an error, and that, even had the error not been committed, the law was unjust in its discrimination. The Board of Trade of Chicago, by a vote of 1,000 to 1, decided to continue the call system of dealing in grain and provisions. The Chicago Herald's report of the proceedings of the Illinois Democratic State Convention, held at Springfield, was the first to announce the nomination of Governor Fifer for re-election. The Republican State Convention, held at Springfield, Ill., nominated Governor Oglesby for re-election by acclamation. The platform declares for the protection of American industries, and for the restriction of immigration, favors the Australian ballot system, and declares for the free coinage of silver.

THE Kimball House, at Atlanta, Ga., one of the largest hotels of the South, has been entirely destroyed by fire. There were about 500 guests in the house when the fire broke out. All escaped with the loss of wearing apparel and other personal effects. The building cost $600,000. The total loss is placed at $1,000,000, and the insurance at about $600,000. Gen. Bob Toombs owned a large interest in the hotel, and he is heavy loser, as he was uninsured. ...Near Bender station, Pa., on the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, three men who were walking on the track were killed by an express train.

A DESPERATE fight occurred between a white man and a negro, near Ivy Depot, Va., in which the white man was killed. The negro then attacked the dead man's wife, and beat her to death with a rock. A mob overtook the negro and hanged him to a tree near the jail in Lexington.

THE mutilated remains of four white men were found in a railroad camp on the Cincinnati Southern road, near Cumberland Falls, Tenn. The theory is that the men fought a double duel over cards. ...At Edgemore, Mayor Pelkney Whyte, Thomas W. Campbell, Charles E. Slingluff, Samuel Hinkle, Samuel W. Register and Burt F. Smith, comprising the Board of Fire Commissioners, have been indicted for conspiracy in that, it is charged, the letting of materials for the fire department. The affair causes much excitement in the city. ...Four horse-thieves who raided a camp-meeting in Monroe county, Ga., were pursued into Mississippi and lynched.

A MELLON-GROWER at Barnwell, S. C., finding that the business had been so overdone that the crop was superfluous, staked off a place for his grave and poisoned himself.

NEAR Goldsboro, N. C., the porter in a sleeping-car caused an explosion while filling a lighted lamp and was immediately enveloped in flames. A passenger, to prevent the car taking fire, ordered the man into a close compartment, from whence he jumped through a window, and where the train was stopped, was found to be fatally burned and in a dying condition.

ACCORDING to the August returns to the National Department of Agriculture, the average condition of spring wheat is 97, the same as in 1885, but higher than any previous August since 1878. There has been little improvement in the appearance of the corn-fields during the month of July, and the crop it is reckoned 14 a single point in the month since last year's report of development. The average condition of oats is 97 per cent., a fraction of a point less than in July, and 3 points higher than in August, 1887. The condition of barley is 97 per cent., a fraction of a point less than in July, and 2 points higher than in August, 1887. The Strike Ended.

The telegraph strike has virtually ended, the strikers generally having returned to work or signified a willingness to do so. In Detroit the Western Union superintendent refused to receive back any of the striking lady telegraphers, and the News says that on this account none of the really first class men have yet asked for employment. In New York the main office was besieged from an early hour Saturday morning by nearly one hundred operators seeking reinstatement. But few women and girls were among the number. Superintendent Hunstone was busily engaged discriminating between applications from first class workmen and those who were considered second and third rate, only the best workmen being taken back, and quite a number of operators were disappointed by being rejected. Those operators who were taken on after the strike commenced will be retained by the company in their present positions. Since the strike was declared ended only twelve women have been received back into the employ of the company. The total number of women who have applied for reinstatement is over forty five, so that thirty-three of that number are left without work. Seventy-five male operators were taken back on Saturday. At Pittsburgh, of sixty five who quit work at the beginning of the strike, all but fifteen were taken back upon promising to renounce the brotherhood. The knights of labor are severely denounced by the strikers for failing to give them the support promised. At Washington, at a quarter past twelve, the striking operators called in a body on manager Clark of the Western Union and stated that as the strike had been declared ended, they were desirous of resuming work. Mr. Clark received them affably, and informed them that all the first class positions were filled but five. At Chicago the operators kept applying for work in small squads up to one o'clock, when a stampede occurred, and from that on till a late hour the hallway leading to the office of superintendent Tuttle was crowded. A number of those applying were refused places for reasons best known to the officials. Precisely, the entire working force of the Baltimore & Ohio were taken back intact. About one hundred operators met in Ulrich hall, when the leaders acknowledged the cause was lost and advised the men to seek work. The Chicago office is now fully manned. At Cleveland a large proportion have applied and find that out of forty-five places they left nearly three weeks ago all have been permanently filled except nine, consequently thirty six of the local strikers must seek situations elsewhere. At Cincinnati Supt. Hill her required the strikers to subscribe to a contract abjuring the brotherhood. But one striker signed and went to work. Nearly all the lady operators who struck will lose their situations as their places have been filled.

Notes and News.

Clawson wheat suffered most from wet weather during the last harvest.

Judge Jeremiah S. Black died at his home in York, Pa., last Sunday morning.

Republicans would like to have Tilden nominated as a candidate for the presidency.

The highest estimated yield per acre of wheat in the state is 30 bushels, in Chippewa county.

The apple harvest is estimated for the state at 41 per cent of an average crop; peaches the same.

The name of S. S. Cox, of New York, has been mentioned for speaker of the next U. S. house of representatives.

The secretary of state reports 13,038,570 bushels of wheat marketed in Michigan during the year ending August 1st.

The following appropriations are recommended for the next year for continuance of improvements of the Michigan harbors named: Charlevoix, $30,000; Frankfort, $20,000; Portage Lake harbor of refuge, $40,000; Manistee, $50,000; Ludington, $40,000; Pentwater, $40,000; White River, $50,000; Muskegon, $100,000; Grand Haven, $150,000; Black Lake $20,000; Saugatuck, $112,000; South Haven, $30,000; St. Joseph, $20,000.

In another paragraph it is intimated that immigration increases the home demand for provisions and makes prices higher. But the farmer pays more than the increase wherever he buys a protected article, so in the end he gains nothing.

It is said that President Arthur, during his recent trip, invariably refused to appear on the platform of the car at stations where large crowds were assembled, some of whom had come many miles to get a glimpse of their chief magistrate. He evidently cares little for the "common people."

Some of the protectionist organs that are so fond of standing up for protection as the safeguard of American labor, are now demanding in behalf of the monopolists that congress shall so legislate as to make striking a crime! What do you think of it, laboring men? [Chicksaygan Democrat.

Up to August 1st Gov. Begole had issued nineteen pardons. Gov. Bagley in 1873 issued twenty three pardons, in the same length of time, and in his first term, entire, he issued sixty seven pardons to convicts. Those who find so much fault with the present governor would do well to look back over the record of those who went before him. [Charlotte Leader.

The telegraph operators are leaving the brotherhood one by one and returning to work at the old rate, and the industrious seem to be that the Western Union will eventually gain at all points. This has been an orderly, well conducted strike, free from violence, and places the operator far above the average employe in intelligence, business quality, and even ten per. They gained, and have retained, the sympathy of the masses by their gentlemanly conduct.

Indications are that in Vermont and Indiana the bloody shirt will be the prominent feature in the political campaign of next year. John C. New, assistant savior of Indiana in 1880, is in favor of "injecting the old rebel yell" into the campaign, and up in Vermont the war of the rebellion still rages in the rural towns. In the Green Mountain state the republican sun never sets, while in the Hoosier state it rises cloudgently when four hundred thousand dollars and a rebel yell are injected into a campaign. —Jackson Patriot.

A prominent Ohio republican said to an Enquirer correspondent Thursday: "National issues must be brought into the campaign. It will help us get money. We have poor men on our ticket from top to bottom. There is no one to put up, and the committee need money. Sherman is not putting up, and Foster thinks he has done his share. Besides, the governor had been going into mining schemes, and is hard up. The presidential election of 1881 will be greatly affected by the result next October in Ohio, and that is what we must bring out prominently. When the national plank to this election is fully developed the manufacturing interests of the country will become aroused, and those in terested in preserving the tariff will help the republicans. Then we will be in better shape.

Straws are very numerous now-a-days showing the tendencies of the republican party toward the monopolies of the country. Almost every act of that party for the past fifteen years has been in this direction, until to day scarcely a man can be found who has the hardihood to prise and dispute it. The position of leading republican papers on the recent telegraphers strike, is only further evidence that the party has sold out to the capitalists of the country, the determination evidently being to carry enough of the intelligence of the people along to endorse everything in the interests of the monopolistic few. In referring to the strike of telegraphers in this country, and the position of leading republican papers regarding this class of laboring men, the Evening News says: The New York Tribune is savage in its denunciations; the Sun, York Courier and Advertiser before the day rates with Gould enjoys his undivided affection, and, as she has presented him with a son and heir, the question is imminent whether the marriage is legal and the juvenile Hottentot will be entitled to a seat in the House of Lords.

out pausing them: the New York Post demands a law which shall forbid telegraph and railroad employees to strike; the Chicago Inter Ocean calls them fools and conspirators; the Chicago Tribune declares that if telegraph and railroad companies are under a legal obligation to serve the public their employes should be under a legal obligation to serve them; the Detroit Post and Tribune shouts in the same key, and though it does not demand in express terms that they be deprived of their liberty, it regards their exercise of liberty as immoral. This is a sort of harmony which can do the republican party no good in the approaching death struggle with its old enemy. Unanimity cannot be the result of chances. There must be universal aristocratic tendencies in a party whose organs all instinctively rush to the side of monopoly in its unanswerable contest with labor. [Charlotte Leader.

A little the saddest wail we have have heard from the protection camp comes from the National Republican. It says that "under the protective tariff system the revenues which are needed to pay off our national debt, and furnish the means for the support of government are paid by foreigners. The free trade policy would saddle this burden upon our own people. If the free trade policy should ever prevail, the tax collector will enter every house in the land and demand the taxes on every article of use, necessity and enjoyment, and failing to collect it, will seize and sell the property of the citizen." The foregoing is simply twaddle of course. But if true, it would be decidedly to our interest to have other countries into taxing our debts. Fortunately for foreigners it is not true. It would be as reasonable that we the power in Charlotte to can cast a scheme whereby we could force Eaton Rapids to pay our city expenses, build our first ward school houses, and put down our artesian wells. It is surprising to find a new-paper representing "honest money" and all that goes with it, instructing our people how they may avoid paying their honest debts. Perhaps Mahone owns a controlling interest of this Washington paper. [Charlotte Leader.

All the republican talk about protecting Americans against the so-called pauper labor of other countries would perhaps be reasonable if it was more uniform in its application, and more uniform in its results. But as it is, it only encourages the pauper labor of other countries, while it discourages the labor of the United States. The great problem of American politics today is to restrict the great and growing patronage of the government, which is an engine of tyranny, corruption and intimidation, to become, as it was once essential, mere reward of merit, to those of honor, and which will not apply equally well to the military service, the insurance business, and banking business of the country. The telegraph or railway service in the hands of the government, the employes would soon become the political servants of the party in power, and the civil servants proper of the general public, and the already dangerous power of the government through the patronage it controls would be greatly augmented. The indications are that it may be necessary for congress to pass some positive laws regulating both the telegraphic and the railway service in order to remedy the hitherto perpetrated by some of these gigantic corporations; but if the government become the owner and employer of the telegraph and railway lines, or of either, would be only worse than the old ones. Grand Rapids Democrat.

A resident of a neighboring city went to Pensley about a week ago in the hope that the badly swelled thumb of their rector would enable him to get his shattered health. He was sent home in a coffin last week. "Yes," said the widow to a condoling friend after the funeral, "poor John has left me, but I shall always be thankful that he died in such a healthy place." [Lansing Journal.

The Gold Supply.

The future supply of gold, even for coinage purposes, says a contemporary, is beginning to be one of more than common interest. Ancient history is resplendent with the prodigal display of gold by the barbaric peoples of the Orient. Arabia, Egypt and Africa, according to this same authority, were prolific in their production of this precious metal. Pliny states that Cyrus returned from his conquest with 34,000 pounds of gold (about $10,000,000). Alexander the Great brought $180,000,000 in gold from Persia. But at the same time, these great fields, so renowned in history, are barren, so far as the production of gold is concerned, and it is evident that Europe can no longer be depended upon to perform any appreciable part in furnishing a supply of gold to meet the demands of the future. Even in this country the statistics of production show a constant and marked decline in gold, although the field is largely extended and mining is more thoroughly prosecuted than before.

A Grey Hottentot.

The English papers are discussing the question, Can a glengrum marry himself? There is a title with an estate at stake, which is sufficient excuse for a prolonged contest. The late Earl of Stamford settled £50,000 a year in strict entail upon the holder of the title. The present Earl of Stamford married Hannah Lloyd, when he went as a missionary to Africa as simple Rev. Harry Grey, to a Hottentot lady. She has given unto his undivided affection, and as she has presented him with a son and heir, the question is imminent how they may avoid paying their honest debts. Perhaps Mahone owns a controlling interest of this Washington paper. [Charlotte Leader.

Miss Ella Reynolds, daughter of Lewis Reynolds of the bank, died at their former home in Gratiot county, on the 13th. She has been sick for more than a year, the last five months failing rapidly.

Rev. G. Daniels preaches his last sermon before conference next Sunday evening. The text for the morning service will be "the old, old story," or the blessed atonement, for the evening service, "our mission."

A. B. Turner, editor of the Grand Rapids Eagle, after quite a trip in the upper peninsula, has returned to the Bridge Street house, Charlevoix, and says that the Jordan is the best resort around after all.—[Resorter.

Mr. A. R. Struthers, living about four miles east of Charlevoix, is getting out of the woods; at least we thought so the other day when we saw him taking home that fine new Pequegan, purchased of Friedrich Bros., Grand Rapids, through their agent, F. T. Leut.

Last Sunday afternoon, Aug. 19, a complimentary dinner was given to Miss Carrie Hilton, daughter of O. D. Hilton, of Norwood township, in honor of her twenty-first birthday. About twenty guests were present, and the occasion was one of pleasure, and long to be remembered by all the participants. Miss Hilton is at home on a vacation from school at Pontiac, where she has been in attendance three years. She will return next week Friday.

Council meeting Thursday evening. Business of importance.

Members of the fire company should remember to come out every Thursday evening for drill.

The ladies band will give an excursion Saturday evening to Harbor Springs, returning Sunday.

The Oconto went up to East Jordan last Saturday. We shall probably learn her errand when we see the enterprise.

The Statesman announces an increase of 102 subscribers since last February. We are pleased to note our neighbor's prosperity.

The firm of Cooper & Hutchins has been dissolved. Mr. Henry C. Cooper will continue the furniture business at the old stand.

Dr. Crontor has just received thirty-five thousand envelopes, all sizes and shades, on which he can duplicate Chicago and Grand Rapids prices.

Monday morning, R. Gridley, of Eaton county, caught a speckled trout weighing 1¼ pounds and measuring 16 inches in length. It was caught in Boyne river.—[Statesman.

The Clifton and Cushman houses, of Petoskey, were entered by burglars last Monday night. At the latter place a gold watch and pair of shoes were taken. He was captured.

Last Sunday evening a party of six in a small skiff had a narrow escape from being crushed while trying to dodge between the Lawrence and the bridge as she was hulking at Fox's dock.

The average yield per acre of wheat in Charlevoix county, as estimated in the office of the secretary of state from reports of correspondents, is 17.27 bushels; oats, 35 bushels; barley, 27 bushels.

Mr. H. L. Page, the new hardware merchant, successor to Hodge & Nicholls, of East Jordan, exhibits his faith in printers' ink by taking a full-page advertisement in the last issue of the Enterprise.

Miss Dewey, of Kalamazoo, came here for with consumption, and the climate was too strong for her. She was taken home in a casket, leaving here on the Lawrence, via Petoskey, Sunday evening.

Our citizens should not forget the matter of promoting new enterprises. In this connection it is to be hoped that the fruit canning business will not be overlooked. Those interested can learn of Mr. L. D. Bartholomew what is necessary to success.

E. S. Johnson has growing on his lot in this village a sun flower, the stalk of which measures nine feet long and 8¾ inches in circumference; it has 45 flower buds, and one of the leaves measures 17½ inches across. How is that for a sun flower? [Statesman.

We took a walk in the south part of town last Saturday, and found that Nicholls & Morgan were making extensive improvements in that part of town. They are having cleared 50 lots extending back upon the terrace. They are also draining their lots in that vicinity, and otherwise beautifying their plat.—[Statesman.

Last Friday morning E. A. Easton, whose farm is about 10 miles from town, brought us the finest specimen of oats we have seen this year. It measures six feet and four inches in length. Hugh Miller also brought us a nice specimen raised on the farm of Mr. Cash. Eveline township, measuring 5 feet 7½ inches.—[Statesman.

The lecture of Mrs. Simpson at the opera house Sunday evening was well patronized, and quite satisfactory in originality and force. Coming as they do from a person in her position, her remarks will have more weight, if not greater influence with those who need the support than the same arguments from a lecturer of national reputation.

Nearly a hundred and fifty Charlevoix people came down on the excursion Saturday evening, and a great many more went down to Charlevoix from Harbor Springs and Petoskey, making it the largest excursion of the season. The playing of the Charlevoix ladies band was the occasion of much favorable comment.—[Resorter.

We see it stated that the Chicago & West Michigan railway company will soon extend their road to Baldwin on the Flint & Pere Marquette road; from thence to Traverse City, Elk Rapids, Charlevoix, and Petoskey. If this is not the program it ought to be. It will be, too, if the G. R. & I. R. R. does not hurry up and take the cake.—[Elk Rapids Progress.

N. B. Willis, recently clerk in the Fountain City house, Charlevoix, was at Harbor Springs and Petoskey a few days ago, claiming to be on a fishing trip. His wife arrived in Petoskey yesterday in search of him telling a pitiful story of desertion. They have only been married two years and have no children. The poor woman seems most frantic with grief, and she has the sympathy of all who have heard her story. Willis is a gentlemanly appearing man, and does not seem capable of such meanness.—[Resorter.

James Morrison, for some time a jobber in getting out hemlock bark, skipped last Saturday night, owing different persons in this vicinity about $2,000. W. T. Addis is the largest loser, Morrison being behind about $2,000 in his accounts with Mr. A. The other $2,000 he owed to different business men here, and to poor hard-working men.—[Statesman.

The East Jordan Enterprise comes to us this week again enlarged, and this time improved. It is now a ten-page paper, pasted at the back, with head trimmed like a pamphlet, with advertisements well distributed over the paper. This is a long step forward in the march of improvement, and we congratulate our brethren on their evidence of prosperity.

The Lawrence went up to Boyne last Sunday, and it is said that the natives were so tickled over it that they flocked to the dock from miles around, and fairly besieged the boat when she stopped. An increase in business might get such boats regularly, but it cuts the life out of our own boats which make regular daily trips. Be content with home industry.

We have received a circular announcing the meeting of the western Michigan press association, commencing at Reed City, next Tuesday, and regret that business necessities will not permit us to attend. The program promises a most delightful time, so far as the excursion is concerned, and the papers to be read cannot fail to be of interest and profit to the profession.

Local politicians can expect large industry" by discouraging all attempts to get the large lake steamers to go to Boyne or East Jordan. While these large boats might create a little more activity in the villages named, it takes so much traffic away from our Pine lake boats, whose owners are interested in the growth and development of our village, and whose earnings are expended among our people.

Monday's gale was the most severe of the month. The bay presented a grand appearance, and the surf was watched by hundreds of appreciative visitors. The wind blew down several small trees at Bay View, one of which fell across the track near the depot. The awning of the big "tent on the beach" was laid flat on the ground, the occupants crawling out from under it like field mice from a corn shock.—[Resorter.

The ladies of the Congregational church held a bazar at the opera house on Tuesday and Wednesday of this week, which was quite successful both in attendance and receipts. The ladies have worked hard for this and deserve all they received. The articles for sale embraced the useful as well as ornamental, and sales were good the first day. The refreshments were excellent, but the stock of ice cream was not sufficient on Tuesday. In one corner was an exhibition of fine arts, embracing a great number of subjects, and impressing the visitor with their novelty. The gross receipts of the entertainment were $197.77.

A curious piece of carved work, apparently from some old time ship, was picked up on the beach the other day, by Captain Martin, of this place. It is a timber twelve or fourteen feet long, at one end of which is a rude representation of a fish head, on the gills the word "commerce" carved in gothic letters about three inches long. Crossed in the center, and tied with a bow-knot, are two spears, or perhaps as near that as anything, and at the other end an anchor entwined with two serpents. The ground work was painted red, and the raised portions were apparently gilt, but this last has been pretty much worn off. There is a difference of opinion as to the nationality of the craft, and when she was lost. Very likely her history would be interesting if it was known.

New Boiler Works.

The new boiler works of Mr. Joseph Hyland are so nearly completed that he expects to be able to begin work next week. Workmen are to day putting the shingles on, and by Saturday night the shop will be finished and the tools in position for business. The following from the Manistee Democrat will show with what esteem Mr. Hyland was held in his old home: "Joseph Hyland of Manistee, has located at Charlevoix, Mich., and will leave this city on Monday next. He is considered to be one of the best boiler and sheet iron workers in the country. References: T. J. Ramsdell, R. G. Peters, Tabors & sons, Babcock & Co., Engelmann & Co., Mowatt, Wilson and others. The good citizens of Charlevoix are fortunate, indeed, to have such a superb workman as Joseph Hyland in their midst. He is an old citizen of Manistee and therefore we don't like to part with him, nor let his business may success crown his business efforts. It will pay you to give him your patronage."

FIRST COWBOY.

I'm the feller from the ranches out at the West
If you want to die with brave look at me!
I'm chain-lightning—if I ain't sure I'll be tossed!
I'm the scourge of the Sonora Territory!
Chorus—He's a killer and a tearer,
He's the quest and illebree!
He's the terror of the boundless territories!

SECOND COWBOY.

I'm the snapper from the way-back upper trail!
I'm like powder in a mill—I send in every!
I can beat no Pe'kuan roaches on the trail
That any one ain't as well liked the jolly fellers!
Chorus—He's a snapper and a sneezer!
He's the quest train boss aimer!
He's the man who runs the sleeper on the rail!

THIRD COWBOY.

I'm the double-jawed tarara from the East!
I'm the kicking, bloody alligator by the stream!
I'm the celebrated suzz-z-z! I'm the beast!
I am sent to a man babbled to the settlers!
Chorus—He's a double-jawed tarara!
He's the villain of the scene!
He can snatch a man babbleated while he waits!

CHOOSING A WIFE.

In from the hay-field came John Westlake and went into the second sitting-room, threw himself upon a sofa, picked up a paper, and read as follows:

"A young man having matrimony in view should ascertain before taking this important step what the home-keeping abilities of his intended one are. Many a man has had both fortune and happiness wrecked by overlooking this important point.

"Any man, by a little strategy, can obtain the desired information; he can have some business at her father's house early in the morning, or if she lives by the roadside he can ride by and observe in at the open door or window and thus see which, mother or daughter, cooks the breakfast.

"Or he can take a position behind some tree in the orchard, commanding a view of the barnyard, and find out who does the milking—the knowledge can be obtained, and it should be obtained by some means, and in this case the end justifies the means."

"What paper is this?" said John, looking for the heading. "The Crampton Herald. Yes, and this is good advice for a farmer's son. Now," soliloquized he, "I have about concluded to marry Mary Johnson—that is, if she will have me, and I think she will—but I must confess that I do not know much about her abilities as a housekeeper. I know that everything in their house—that is, so far as I have seen—is in perfect order; but who takes care of the house I don't know—perhaps Mary, perhaps Mrs. Johnson. Mary, I know, has baby, for she comes into company as neatly dressed as any young woman in the neighborhood; but then she has had the advantage of two or three years' sojourning, which fact may account for her knowledge of dress, but it argues some that her knowledge of domestic affairs—but I will find out."

"John, dinner," said his little sister Kate, poking her curly head in at the door.

While eating, John outlined a plan of operation.

"I will," thought he, "get up early to-morrow morning, go across the meadow to Johnson's cornfield, and then through the corn-field to the barnyard, cross the barnyard to the meadow fence, and there get a glimpse of this until I get to the ladies in front of the sunny-kitchen window, where I will lurk, and there, not a miss thing, a rod away, I can see everything that goes on.

"What a splendid General I'd make," said he, chuckling, as he went to the field by himself; and the more he contemplated his plan the more he became convinced of the brilliancy of conception and ease of execution.

"I will tell Mary," said he, "of my strategy after we are married—that is, if she suits me, and I think she will. Love," continued he, "is said to be blind, but I will show Mr. Cupid that if he has pierced my heart he has not affected my vision. And again, getting married is said to be like putting your hand into a bag in which are many live snakes and one eel; but before I put in my hand I intend to see the eel and then just where to reach for it."

Next morning John arose very early, dressed quickly, and went down stairs very quietly.

Going first to the barn he went half way around it to get it between himself and the house and then struck a beeline across the new-mown meadow towards Squire Johnson's cornfield.

He had not gone far before he heard a noise behind him, and looking round he saw his old dog Nero at his heels.

"Go, home, you old scoundrel, go home!" exclaimed John fiercely.

Nero looked up into his master's face with an injured expression, then turned round and trotted slowly homeward.

But he did not go far; stopping on a little hillock, he turned round, sat down and gazed after John.

Concluding that there was some unfathomable reason why he could not accompany him, he resolved to fly again, and in a few minutes was close at John's heels.

"You old villain! Didn't I tell you to go home?" said John, turning round and making a pass at him with his foot.

Nero was now convinced that his company was not desired, and the sticks and stones that followed him as he passed briskly in onward had a tendency to confirm him in his conclusion.

"The confounded old scamp," muttered John, "would have all the Squire's dogs about me in less than a minute, and then good-by to my plan."

Mary Johnson was the daughter, as we have seen, of Squire Johnson, who lived on the farm adjoining Westlake's.

She was a handsome, intelligent girl, and of course a good housekeeper, as most intelligent country girls are, and as all girls ought to be. Mary's several years at school had made some change in her, but John found to his sorrow that she had not lost the habit of early rising.

This morning she arose somewhat earlier than usual and went to the barnyard to do the milking. As she was about to begin she glanced towards the corn-field and saw some one coming.

"Who can that be?" she said. "As sure as the world it's John Westlake! I wonder what he is after! And he's coming right here, and I've nothing on but this thin gown! Oh, dear! what shall I do?"

Her first impulse was to run, but observing that he was coming very cautiously, as if in fear of being seen, and knowing that she was undiscovered, curiosity prompted her to stay; so gliding behind a hay-stack near by, she was in a position to note his actions undiscovered.

Coming to the barn-yard, he ran across it, in a half-stooping posture, to the meadow fence. Getting inside, he began to creep along the fence towards the house, much like a savage trying to steal upon his enemy.

"What does he mean?" said Mary, her blue eyes dilating in wonder.

The summer-kitchen was a short distance from the main building and between it and the meadow fence was the spring.

From the spring issued quite a large stream, flowing under the fence and across the meadow.

Where it flowed under the fence, near the summer-kitchen, was a small but dense thicket of alders, briars and wild grapevines.

This was the point for which John was making.

Arriving within a few rods of the house, he ran, stooping, across the little open space of meadow between the fence and stream; then, behind the alders that lined its bank he ambled along until he reached the thicket, in to which he crawled, and fixed himself so that he could have a view of the window.

Mary's eyes flashed in anger.

"So, John," said she, "you have been reading the Crampton Herald. Well, we'll see how much knowledge you'll obtain for your trouble."

Then, taking a roundabout way, so that he might not see her, Mary entered the house and went up-stairs to her room and sat down near a window that overlooked his ambuscade.

"What a splendid place for observation!" said John to himself, as he fixed himself among the bushes.

Just then up went the window and out came a pail of dirty water, thrown by the strong arms of Mrs. Johnson.

"Look out!" said she, crackling backward, as the dirty shower came dripping down through the leaves, "this is a circumstance for which I made no calculation."

"Belle, where is Mary?" called Mrs. Johnson to one of the girls.

"Upstairs," said Belle.

"Why, what's she doing there? Why doesn't she come down and do the milking?"

"I don't know," was the reply. "She says she's not coming down for some time; you mustn't wait breakfast for her."

"Just as I expected," said John with a sad countenance. "Those boarding-schools will ruin any girl. I suppose they'll carry her breakfast up to her. I guess I'll go now; I've learned as much as I want to know."

But John did not go just then; something again occurred for which he had made no calculation. The Squire had several dogs, and among them was one ferocious old fellow called Bull. Attracted by the smell of victuals, for breakfast was now ready, the dog had gathered about the kitchen door and sitting there with wagging tails were awaiting their morning meal.

At the first rustle of the leaves as John turned round they pricked up their ears. In a moment, after he had moved again, they were all mutually astonished. With a growl and a howl, and a dismal-tune nerve accompaniment, a regular Joshua's day, thought John, as he waited and longed for the ringing of the bell.

Soon it rang, and a few minutes after the Squire and his boys were at the spring washing preparatory to eating.

"Who was that in the field talking to you?" said Mrs. Johnson to the Squire.

"Little Tommy Westlake," was the reply.

"What did he want?"

"Why, he wanted to know if we'd seen John today. He says John got up very early this morning and went away, leaving his dinner pail behind, and they have not seen him since."

"Strange," said Mrs. Johnson.

"Well, Bull! Hurrah, Bull!" shouted one of the boys.

"What?" said Mary, coming to the door.

"John Westlake has found another Bull and ran off with her."

"All right," was the reply, "let him go. I can get another John."

"She has got another one already," muttered John.

There were all now at dinner; every thing was quiet.

"Give me liberty or give me death!" said John, as he crashed out.

Now, Bill, a savage dog from his enemies, he ran, stooping, along the fence and past the barn to the corn-field. As he sprang over the corn-field fence the dogs caught a sight of him and started in pursuit, yelping and howling, while old Bull, from the barn, with loud-mouthed bays, indicated his desire to join in the chase.

"What in the world is the matter?" exclaimed the Squire, as he quit carving to listen to the uproar.

"Burrah!" said the boys, jumping up and running to the door.

"What's there?" said the squire.

"Something in the corn-field," was the reply.

"Jones' cattle again. Go over, Tom, and put them out."

Tom, when he started, saw something twisting about in the middle of the field, but when he got there he saw nothing, though he met the dogs homeward bound and apparently badly frightened—John, when he found them about to overtake him, had stopped by a stone pile and had given them a reception which they could not stand.

Tom went back and reported: "Nothing in the field," but it was a mystery which he could not explain, why the dogs seemed so badly scared.

John when he reached home went round by the barn, through the garden, and into the house the back way.

Going up-stairs quietly to his room, he put on a suit of clean clothes; then going down as quietly as he came up, he reached the barn by the roundabout course he had taken when coming in.

Now from the barn he started and marched boldly up through the yard toward the house.

The family were at dinner. Walking to be hung up his hat, pulled out his handkerchief, wiped his face, and said:

"In time yet, I see."

"We're glad to see you back, John," said his mother; "but we'd like to know where you've been."

"Yes, give an account of yourself," said his sister Julia. "We had about concluded that you and Mary had gone to Gretna Green, or some similar place."

"Well, I'll tell you," said John. "You know I told you a few days ago that some of the academy boys were on an excursion to the city this morning and wished me to go with them. I did not intend to, but thought I would go over this morning and see them off."

"You know the train starts very early, and I expected to be back in time for breakfast; but when I got on they held to me, coaxing me to go with them, until the train was going too fast to jump off, and all of course I was carried to town and had to wait there until the return train, which, you know, does not come out until near noon."

This explanation was satisfactory to all except John—it was a lie which he had been practicing on all the family for this occasion. He felt bad over it, yet it seemed a fitting conclusion for the blunders of the day—how else could he conceal what the world to come would not have any one but himself know?

Shortly afternoon he was in anything but a good humor. In the hay-field he worked by himself as much as possible.

He seemed to have a special ill-feeling toward his dogs; if one of them came up to him, no matter how friendly, he was sure to give it a rap over the back with the hay-fork that sent him away howling. The relationship that existed between Mary and her brother John was a question that now troubled him.

Yesterday he was of the opinion that he could have her for the asking, and now it seemed evident that she already belonged to some one. The loss, or the danger of losing her, made him realize how much he loved her, and how many another man under like circumstances, he was willing to overlook defects.

"Domestic abilities!" said he. "What do I care about her domestic abilities? I will have Mary Johnson if she doesn't know enough to bake a loaf of bread!"

That afternoon he made a resolution.

"Tomorrow evening," said he, "I will go over and tell her that I love her much I love her, and ask her to be mine."

The next evening John drove up to Johnson's door. Mary came out to greet him, and gave him her usual cordial welcome. After talking a little while she said, somewhat mischievously:

"By the way, John, you walked over to see me last evening."

"No, replied he, not comprehending, "don't you remember, I rode old Charley over?"

John could not muster courage to say what he desired until leaving time, and then, as they stood upon the porch, he took his arm about her waist, told his love, and asked her to be his wife.

"John," she said in reply, "let me tell you a story:

"Once upon a time there lived not far from here a gentleman and a lady. The gentleman, who esteemed himself a man of great prudence, was in love with the lady, or at least his attentions led her to believe so.

"But, before making a proposal, he—as a man of prudence should—resolved to satisfy himself in regard to her ability to conduct the affairs of a household; but, instead of trying to obtain this information in an open, manly way, he was foolish enough to try to obtain it in a roundabout way, and so, like the fox who, the like of which you have seen, doubtless, in your father's newspaper."

"Yes," said John, his mind reverting to the Crampton Herald.

"Well, one morning he arose very early, left his father's house, crossed a meadow, came to a cornfield." John's arms flexed, "thou through a barn-yard, then came along by a meadow fence, went into some bushes near a summer kitchen——"

John's arm slid down by his side.

"Don't Mary," said he. "I confess it all. But how did you find out?"

She told him, and gave her answer.

"Now," said she, "I am angry with you, and justly, I think. Though I love you, I fell you plainly that you have fallen in my estimation, and I think you deserve some punishment. In one year from now, if you do nothing to make me esteem you less than I did before yesterday, if you come to me with the same question, I may answer you more satisfactorily."

"A cruel sentence, but one I deserve," said John, as he bade her good night.

John is conducting himself properly and goes to Johnson's often; for he and Mary are the best of friends, and, we say the year expired, this story would end doubtless, as such stories usually do.

HE wanted to be a humorist. He went out into the woods to draw inspiration from nature, was gone three days; at the end of the second day he felt a feeling as if the divine afflatus had descended and crowned him king of humorists, he came back and perpetrated a joke on his mother-in-law. Her funeral took place on the next day. That disposed him all over town, and then he escaped him. He now feels as if he were qualified reclining chair, he might be umpire for a prize-fight.—Carl Pretzel's Weekly.

NOT long ago, as an elderly couple were out walking, a lady on the opposite side of the street tripped and fell down. The old gentleman rushed across the street, raised his hat, and offered to assist her in any possible way. His wife followed him across at a slower pace, and witnessing his devotion to the stranger, she got mad, and slapped her fist at him. "It's all right—it's right," he whispered. "Yes, I know it," she hotly exclaimed; "there ain't a known woman hurts her toe, and I plow across the street to eat her with kindness. The other day when I fell down-stairs you stood and laughed and chuckled, and tickled your ribs and wanted to know if I was practicing for a circus."

TORNADOES.

Scientifically Accounted for, and Some Remote Causes that Produce Painful Results Explained.

The following synopsis of a lecture delivered by Dr. Horace B. Hamilton before the New York Society for the Promotion of Science, contains so much that is timely and important that it can be read with both interest and profit:

There is probably no subject of modern times that has caused and is causing greater attention than the origin of tornadoes. Scientists have studied it for the benefit of humanity; men have investigated it for the welfare of their families. It has been a revived subject lately considered, and through all the lives ignation the cyclone has swept across the land carrying destruction to scientists as well as to the innocent dwellers in its track. One thing, however, is certain; the cause of the cyclone must be sought far away from the whirling body or wind itself. Its results are powerful, its cause must also be powerful. Let us therefore consider a few facts. First, the appearance of a cyclone is invariably preceded by dark clouds upon the face of the earth. These spots, indicating a disturbed condition of the solar region, necessarily affect the atmosphere of our earth. An unusual appearance of heat in one part of the atmosphere is certain to create a partial vacuum in the surrounding air. Air must rush in to fill this vacuum. Hence the disturbance—hence the cyclone. This theory lends additional confirmation in the fact that a cyclone come during the day and not at night. The sun's rays act on the surface of the sun, whatever they may be, seem to cause a rarefaction in the atmosphere of the world and it is a most fitting time for cyclones. The past summer of the present season can be accounted for in this way. Is it reasonable to suppose that the marvelous effects of the sun upon vegetation and life in general shall be less than in the summer just dead through which its rays come? The cause is remote, but the effect is here.

After describing some of the terrible effects of the cyclone, the speaker went on to say:

This rule finds its application in nearly every department of life. An operator in San Francisco—the circle of the mercury manipulated by his fingers, in New York. The President sends a slight stroke of the pen in his study at the White House and the whole nation is aroused by the act. An unconscious and disgust with everything in life, causes many endless misery. In many people, who is the cause? It is to be found in the distant home thousands of miles away. Amusement pain may be felt in the head. It is repeated in other parts of the body. The appetite ceases—and all energy is gone, is the cause necessarily to be found in the head. The seat of the feeling increases. There are added symptoms. Life becomes and becomes more aggravated. The slight pains become more frequent. Amusement is constant chance. The heart grows irregular, and the breathing more difficult. These effect have definite cause and, after years of deep experience and study, I believe I do not hesitate to say that this cause is to be found in the derangement of the kidneys in many cases Dunn Sweet Music, vocal and instrumental. TOWN CLERK FORTY-TWO YEARS.

The following is from Mr. GEORGE GOODE, the well-known and respected Town Clerk of Norwich, England. Mr. GOODE was a subscriber to Hop Bitters, and has held this position at least forty years, and his word is as good as his bond. On May 5, 1881, he writes as follows: "I have taken your Hop Bitters, and find them a most excellent medicine. I have recommended them to my friends, and I believe in consequence the duties of the office of Town Clerk, which has held for forty-two years, have been performed by me with more ease and comfort than they otherwise would have been. I am a member of my acquaintance who has not derived benefit from the use of Hop Bitters. I consider them the best medicine ever introduced to the public, and I shall always be pleased to recommend them to all who are afflicted with any kind of disease arising from impure blood."

TELEGRAPHIC MATTER.

Our latest news up to date. May 16, 1882, brings to us the intelligence that HENRY R. INGHAM, the General Superintendent of the Boston Mercantile Co., of New Haven, Conn., Mr. Ingham says: "For many months I had been severely troubled with a weak and tired feeling across the loins, almost invariably accompanied with a headache. I had noticed also that at stated periods the water became my urine would be highly colored, and leave a heavy brick-dust sediment when allowed to stand in the vessel. I could not work, and I was discouraged to an alarming degree. Nothing helped me. I was prevailed upon by some of the best physicians in New York city, where I was in consultation, that I was afflicted with Bright's disease of the kidneys. Instead of getting relief, I was rapidly growing worse, and my physicians told me they could do no more for me. I was in despair as to recovery, and so told my friends. At last, on the recommendation of a friend, I procured a bottle of Hunt's Remedy. I did so, and hardly nearly one bottle was half used before I noticed a change for the better. I continued its use, and in three weeks' time all the unnatural symptoms had disappeared, and I enjoyed health; this was attained more than a year ago, and I still continue my business again, which is evidence that the most eminent of kidney troubles can be thoroughly cured by Hunt's Remedy. I have no hesitation in recommending it to all who are afflicted with any kidney trouble, for I know it will cure them."

Odds and Ends.

The attorney general of Michigan has become suddenly famous. By delivering an opinion that the governor could not dismiss one of his tried servants, he has in a single day thrown into prominence. [Charlotte Leader.

The millennium has taken a long step in coming this way, when a defaulting public man has received his just deserts. Polk, the Tennessee treasurer, has been sentenced to two to five years imprisonment, and to pay a fine equal to the amount of his stealings, which is some $200,000.

Our protective policy breeds combinations creates monopolies, destroys competition, and makes consumers the victims of arbitrary extortion. Less taxation for the benefit of monopolies seems to be very desirable. Let the people demand a repeal of the tariff in every instance where it supports monopoly. Down with all such taxes. [Jackson Patriot.

Reports from Michigan and Wisconsin iron mines show that to August 1 the sales this year have been little more than half what they were for the same period last year, the shipments being about two thirds as much. So far this month there has been no improvement, and miners are asking a good many questions about the extent to which protection protects them. [Grand Rapids Democrat.

In the order of production Michigan stands first among the states in the growth and manufacture of lumber, first in salt, first in copper, first in charcoal pig iron, certainly second if not first in its fresh water fisheries, fourth in wheat, and fourth in wool. It has the largest iron mine and the largest copper mine in the world. Seven tenths of all the wheat raised in the country is grown in nine states, and only three exceed Michigan in the volume of this crop. In the last census year it produced more wheat to the acre than any state in the union except Colorado, whose total yield was less than a million and a half of bushels. It is also one of the best fruit producing states in the union. All its principal products are staples, for which there must be a constant and growing demand. [Ex.

Some of our industrious girls at the seaside make changes of costume rivaling in rapidity the feat of actresses on the stage. In a single afternoon I saw the same frivolous creature wear four beautiful dresses. One of embroidered pongee, a second of coral batiste, trimmed with white embroidery and Valenciennes lace, a third of white cream silk and lace cambric, profusely ornamented with Medallion lace, and fitting to perfection, and a fourth of blue serge, with flounces of the same half hidden under white lace flounces. She wore each only about an hour. The reason for shifting was that, being about to go away, she wished to complete the exhibition of her wardrobe before departure. Her time table of apparel had been disordered by an unexpected beauty of her stay. [Correspondence Boston Herald.

The Chicago Tribune, commenting upon the great opium smuggling frauds perpetrated in San Francisco through the connivance of the government officers, charges that the outrageous tariff offers a high premium on smuggling and is responsible, almost without exception, for a direct motive to prosperity. It says: "What is needed is a revision of the tariff which will replace the present excessive duties with reasonable rates. Revenue would thereby be increased and immorality be diminished." The Tribune is, however, merely a summer soldier in the free trade army, it is theoretically free trade, but practically protection. It is a republican journal; the republican party is high tariff, and when the battle comes the Tribune either spikes its free trade guns or, loading them with protection shot, turns them upon the advocates of revenue reform. As a free trade organ in the protectionist party the Tribune cut a very curious but not very creditable figure. [Grand Rapids Democrat.

The attack now recently by Dorsey, upon the administration, does not fall as flat as many papers would have us believe. The cry of "fallen that" is possessed of about as much truth as the howl by every country sheet of republican tendencies that democratic papers have dropped the tariff question, yet the tariff is being generally discussed at this time as much as at any previous period. The republican press seems to be babbling about with a sort of natural incapacity for accomplishing anything. The Dorsey letter will have an influence. That influence will tell against the republican party. The labeling of Dorsey as a knave, and Garfield a patriot, will not answer. A knave may tell the truth. A patriot may have damaging weaknesses. The people will sift this matter and retain what they believe to be true. There certainly is no sense in mourning over what is self acquired the guilt of Mr. Garfield. He is beyond the reach of the lobcasm tradducer. But those who still live, and hold high places will be scrutinized very closely and held to a strict account. It seems very evident to us that Dorsey's attack has not fallen flat. [Charlotte Leader.

The financial disturbances in the leather trade which comes with such crash this week, is only another illustration of the effects of a protective policy. In reference to it the Marshall Chronicle well says: "The crash inevitable in every highly protected industry has now come in the leather trade. Stimulated by a tariff so high that it enabled manufacturers to manufacture their own profits, the trade has grown to unnatural proportions. The people, the vast army of consumers, have been obliged to put their hands into their pockets and turn over to a few hundred persons an immense sum every year. This is the unnatural bounty of protectionists. A thousand people give out their hard earned substance that one may be enriched. This is their ideal of national prosperity. The leather producers over did the matter. Awakened to profits, they overstocked the market of which they enjoyed the monopoly, and the crash came. Had they been left to build up their business in the open market in a natural manner, they would not have piled up so many millions, but the people would have saved some of their earnings. Now would this crash have come. A market open to the world without artificial stimulus is seldom troubled with panics." [Charlotte Leader.

The moral of the Boston shoe and leather failures is that they furnish a second and striking illustration, on a great scale, of the effect of too much tariff. If it is not the tariff or overcompetition which has done the mischief, it must be something else easily discerned, at least in outline, and the surviving members of the trade ought to have it at once. The iron trade has been dosed nearly to death with tariff, and is now reduced almost to chronic depression, with occasional intervals of convalescence. The shoe and leather business has at last shared the same fate. The men who start the new factories have their heads so filled with the idea that they need help to suppress and not to foster competition, that they have lost the habit of carefully examining their market, and have no longer the kind of judgment that is needed to do so with efficiency. They always flatter themselves that if sales grow difficult and stocks accumulate on their hands all they have to do is to go to Washington, declaim about the pauper labor of Europe, and get the tariff put up a peg or two. They overlook the fact that even if the tariff were prohibitory, as long as their only market is the home market, nothing but a fall of prices would stimulate consumption, and in articles like shoes even that not very much, because but few people buy shoes for display, and none for accumulation. [New York Post.

Cutting their Own Wires.

The officers of the brotherhood assert that both the Western Union and the Baltimore & Ohio are now engaged in cutting their own wires for the purpose of casting odium on the strikers and having some explanation to the great delays in their service. It is asserted that 90 Mutual Union wires at 10th street and Third avenue were cut Friday night in the interest of the Western Union, and during the night, in the same interest, a majority of the gold and stock ticker wires running from the Western Union building to the Metropolitan elevated railway at Dey street, on which they are hung on the way to the exchanges, were cut, practically stopping the gold and stock company's service in this city. The inconvenience resulting from this would create indignation among business men against strikers if the ones could be thrown upon them. The linemen on strike have organized a patrol for the purpose of protecting the lines against attacks alleged to be in the interest of the companies.

Gov. Stephens' Dogs.

The late Alexander H. Stephens was fond of young animals, and always had several dogs about him, whom he treated as if they were almost human. Mr. Culver, his private secretary, thus speaks of the great Georgian's love for his pet dogs:

He treated them as almost human, and I think he considered them nearly so. He would talk to them and pet them. They slept at night either in his room or on the outside of the door.

At Liberty Hall the doors were never closed at night, and any one might have gone through the house were it not for the dogs.

They slept in the library, and Alexander Stephens always occupied the chamber which opened into this. A step on the porch would raise a terrible bowling, and it would I have been indeed dangerous for any robber to have entered over such a guard.

There is one dog who deserves to be known in history, and that is Mr. Stephens' old poodle, Rio.

He was for years Mr. Stephens' constant companion. He loved him as an intimate friend, and when he died he shed tears over his grave.

Rio was a remarkable dog. He could reason more than any animal I have ever known. I remember at Liberty Hall we would be talking about something going wrong on the place, and Rio would rise and go to the spot spoken of by us.

He seemed to understand language, and his face was very much like that of a human. He was a big, fat poodle, with wool as white as snow, as heavy as that of a sheep, and as soft as silk.

He had a high forehead, and bright, black eyes. He grew blind several years before he died, and Mr. Stephens took much care of him as he would had he been his own flesh and blood.

When he died, he put him in a wooden coffin and buried him in the garden. He had intended to have erected a marble slab over his grave, but this was put off and finally neglected.

He never cast off any of his dogs in their old age, and Tromp, Pluck, Frank and half-a-dozen others of his pets were cared for through their declining years of senility and decrepitude.

Insufficient Markets and Failures.

In view of the statements that have been made from time to time by persons largely engaged in the manufacture of leather and boots and shoes, as to the inability of the home market to consume all the goods they make at tariff-inflated prices, the recent heavy failures in this line of trade, involving millions of dollars, ought not to create a particle of surprise. If intelligent manufacturers tell the truth, the business is vastly overdone. It is suffering from insufficient markets. It is choked to death by the tariff. Not long ago Mr. Newhall, a manufacturer at Lynn, Mass., stated that by working eight months our manufacturers were able to supply the home market for a year. Other manufacturers have since put in running our factories up to their full capacity for six months they could supply a year's demand. If these statements approximate the truth, it is evident that our tariff laws, which practically shut our manufacturers out of foreign markets, have had a great influence in producing the present disastrous condition of the trade.

As confirmatory of this position we recall the fact that at the annual banquet of the boot and shoe and leather association, held in Chicago last November, there was a strong expression of hostility to tariff because it excluded our manufacturers from unobstructed foreign markets. A member of the firm of M. D. Wells & Co. declared, as reported, that "the tariff question was one in which they all had a deep interest." This firm, he said, sold goods in New Mexico and Texas, and they ought to be able to cross the line into Mexico. They ought also to be able to sell to Maxitolua. But they were barred out of these countries by tariffs. To get this trade they must either change their goods or they must unite in demanding reciprocity treaties. At present tariffs are a curse.

Mr. Macfarland, represented to be the manager of a large business, said that fifteen or twenty years ago we had a good export trade in boots and shoes, but that of late it had dwindled almost to nothing. We are selling goods in towns on this side of the Rio Grande, and there was no business reason why we should not cross the river; there was only a tariff reason. He had recently visited England, and after carefully examining the boot and shoe manufacturing processes there he was satisfied that they could not beat us on anything like equal terms, but that, in fact, we could "beat them to death." They did not use as much machinery, and the workmen were not as expert in handling the machinery they did use. The wages were not much less there than here, say $12 a week against $15. In view of all the facts, he believed we could build up a large export trade if we were not handicapped by the tariff.

In response to a statement that the trouble he complained of was foreign tariffs, Mr. M. declared that we had set the bad example, and other countries had naturally imitated us. We had excluded their products by high duties, and they had retaliated with high duties on our goods. The way to obtain concessions was to make concessions.

Mr. J. W. Oakley, vice president of the association, and member of the firm of Walker, Oakley & Co., was in favor of something more than reciprocity treaties. He believed that for a healthy trade we must get down to a free trade basis. There was no fear, he said, of foreign competition in leather. What we wanted, in his opinion, was cut-and-out free trade in boots, shoes, and leather.

Mr. Edward Eagle, of the firm of Grey, Clark & Eagle, indorsed Mr. Oakley's remarks; and Mr. Clark, of the firm of Short, Clark & Co., approved of all that had been said in favor of free trade in boots, shoes, and leather. He could see no benefit to be derived from continuing the duties. We were exporting sole leather, and European governments had tried to shut it out by tariffs, and had not succeeded. The leather trade of this country was above all competition from abroad, and abundantly able to stand alone.

It was remarked at the time that there was great unanimity of sentiment at this meeting of the representatives of a great industry in favor of free trade. Their hostility to protection arose from the fact that it prevented their finding markets for their goods. Not one of the speakers advocated protection. Mr. Macfarland did not think our workmen were as well off with higher wages for six months and idleness the rest of the year as the English workmen with work the year round. When the workman has the world for an employer, he is more likely to have steady work than when he has only a small section of the world for an employer.

It is hopeful indication of the progress that the principles of commercial freedom are making when those persons engaged in a great manufacturing industry, which they realize is oppressed by tariff laws, speak out boldly against the pernicious policy of protection. The present heavy failures, entailing the stoppage of great factories and throwing thousands of workmen out of employment, for no other reason than an insufficient market for goods, cannot fail to open the eyes of intelligent men to the crushing evils of our tariff system. Probably it will not be long before the entire boot, shoe, and leather interest, which is third in rank, being surpassed in value only by agriculture and railroads, will be a unit for the emancipation of commerce from the degrading tariff slavery.

The cause of revenue reform finds greater encouragement at the present time from the attitude of manufacturers in many industries than from any other source; and especially is this the case when so great an interest as that of boots, shoes, and leather is pressed to surrender protection, for it self, and array itself on the side of commercial freedom in the impending struggle with the upholders of the system of licensed spoliation. The log rolling more tariff beggars are not likely to get any more help from this quarter. Now if the Democrats, who more than any other portion of our people are made the beasts of burden to carry the protection load, would awaken to a sense of their true interests, the prospects for commercial emancipation would be bright indeed.

Wool and Tariff.

[Chicago Times.]

Our republican contemporaries are still harping on the effect on the farmers through the recent reduction in the tariff on wool. They certainly must have a poor opinion of the intelligence of their subscribers. The tariff as it now is prohibitory. Not a pound of foreign wool can be brought to this country except at a loss of of from 7 to 10 cents. Not a pound of it comes into competition with our wools. These same papers know that the woolen manufacturers of the eastern states alone are using nearly 7,000,000 lbs. less per month this year than last, and if they can avoid at all they have learned one thing that the woolen market is glutted. The price of wool in this market this year ranged from 28 to 29 cents. The same wool costs in Canada 17 to 20. The duty added would make it cost delivered across the river 37 to 40. Does the reduction in the tariff absorb the 10 cents difference? A republican can guess reduced this tariff which the republican papers are talking about so earnestly, and at the same time raised the tariff on certain woolen goods. If their reasoning is good they cheapened the farmers' wool and enhanced the price of clothing. But they say nothing when the farmer is being levied upon to help the manufacturer out. That is kept from print. On several lines of woolen goods the cost was increased 60 per cent. Why do they forget to whine about that? The average farmer in Michigan does not get back, and never got back, 3 per cent on wool of what the rest of the tariff list costs him. He pays all the losses, and never comes in for a share of the profits. His name is kept to the grindstone, and the republican press seeks to exalt the glamour of "protection" over their eyes and make them believe that an increase of 10 cents per pound on wool pays them for the increased price they have to pay for clothing, iron of every kind, tools, groceries, medicines, leather, everything they buy.

After the trade dollars have all been bought up by the brokers and speculators, congress will probably look to them into legal tenders. Such is usually the case after the poor have been fleeced, laws are enacted to make the rich richer. [Ex.

The report, describing the mountain scenery, is a rhapsody. "The course pass is in a cheery direction, as far then as Idaho of the Geo-Argentine." The trail was beset with several of those dilemmas which the fortunate tenants in the wilderness has made so famous. The last one climbed to the summit of a long hill about five miles from Camp Arthur, there suddenly burst upon the view a scene so grand and majestic as was never witnessed before, the valley of Jackson's Hole, which threaded the river on whose banks the party were encamped. The valley is a whole western edge of the range, with no intervening foot hills to obscure the view, toward the magnificent Teton mountains, the snowy summits piercing the air 9,000 feet above the valley and range like a giant in representation and 14,000 feet above the level of the sea. Notes and News.

Our democratic friends who want a reliable weekly paper from the state capital, should subscribe for the Lansing Journal.

Those of our citizens who can afford a democratic daily should not forget the Grand Rapids Democrat, one of the best in the state, and the nearest to Charlevoix.

During the sojourn of the legislators at Mackinac Island, one of their citizens approached a man standing in front of a saloon, and inquired of him what county he represented? "I'm not a member of this republican legislative party," was the reply; "I'm only a private citizen on a drunk."—[Trade Journal.

The mistake made by hastily locating the new dock without consulting any competent man was fully demonstrated on Wednesday of this week, by the ineffectual attempt to land the City of Grand Rapids, also by the refusal of the Idaho to make the attempt the following day. Neither of those steamers would have missed landing at the old dock in no greater sea than that of that day.—[Petoskey Democrat.

The match tax, now abolished, small as it was apparently, being only one cent on a box, constituted nearly two-thirds of the price for which matches were sold. The tax amounted to $1.44 a gross, while the matches are sold for $2. This instance of nearly all tax and but little property has had no notch in our internal revenue system since whisky worth 14 cents a gallon paid a tax of $2. Matches now wholesale at 85 cents a gross, showing that the dealers have not thrown off all the tax which they do not pay.—[Ex.

A few of our republican friends have thrown aside all prejudices and lent a hand to help this paper avoid the snares and traps which surely await every infant journal, and place it on a solid business foundation.—Charlevoix Journal. "Score one" for the Charlevoix republicans. The Journal is a good paper and deserves big support. Whenever any business man or citizen who cares a nickle for the prosperity of the town in which he lives, allows his political censored news" to measure his support of home papers, he should be soundly kicked by a mule, and the Cheboygan Tribune editor should be allowed to do the kicking.—[Chippewa Democrat.

The telegraph strike has ended by the unconditional surrender of the strikers. And now the great monopoly with fifteen or twenty millions of property cash valuation and the balance of the eighty millions wind or water or bonfi makes terms with the vanquished. In substance these are the terms. That the W. U. compels every member of the brotherhood that re-enters its service to subscribe to: "You solemnly pledge yourself that you will withdraw from the brotherhood and never again join a similar organization." Will they submit to the indignity? Some of them are already doing it. We do not believe in strikes because in nine times out of ten they do more harm than good. We do not believe in labor unions for they fail to secure the purposes for which they are organized. But were we a member of the brotherhood we would see the Western Union or any other union further in Tophet than a pigeon could fly in a century before we would sink our manhood in subscribing to such a tyrannical compact.—[Progress.

Protectionist journals insist that high tariffs enable manufacturers to get higher prices for goods and thus enable them to pay higher prices to their workmen, entirely blinding the fact that the workmen have to pay greatly enhanced rates for nearly all the necessaries of life. But when these same workmen strike for higher wages these same protection journals go into a labored argument to show that increased wages are no advantage to the workmen of the country for the reason that such increased wages adds to the cost of articles manufactured and so the workmen is compelled to pay out his extra wages in extra price for the goods he needs. The demonstration of trades-unions by protection journals generally is exceedingly inconsistent, for trades-unionism is simply a very mild form of protection. The purpose of both the protectionist and the trades-unionist is precisely the same, to cause an artificial scarcity in the article he has to sell; but in devising efficient methods of cause this scarcity the protectionist have far surpassed the labor unions. The unions confine their attempts to create an artificial scarcity in labor by combining and refusing to work except upon certain terms; while the protected manufacturers not only make combinations of a similar kind to keep prices of goods up and prices for labor down, but through the high tariff laws they shut out the cheap foreign goods and are thus enabled to enforce their demands for high prices. It is here the protection trades unions have the advantage over the labor unions, for the latter make no attempt to exclude by high tariffs the "cheap pauper labor of Europe," concerning which the protectionist manufacturers talk so much—and which they are also so quick to import free of duty whenever their own workmen strike for those "higher wages" which are so freely promised as the result of the high tariff policy.—[Grand Rapids Democrat.

Everybody recognizes the fact that Dorsey was the boss of the "soap" campaign of 1880 and that "soap" won. Now that Dorsey is telling the world how it was done his republican man-trappers, who are not often caught napping, have already caught the drift of things political and are divulging further details about the great soap campaign. One prominent republican office holder explains with minute detail in an affidavit in the possession of the New York Sun the work of New, Gorham, Filley, Swain and others under Dorsey in carrying Indiana, and of his own work says: "My particular and immediate functions were the organization and control of the parties of strikers and repeaters and roughs brought to Indianapolis from the east, and distributed in small gangs to different points in the state. The trick of impersation and colonization had been tried on a much larger scale, but without success, in 1876."

He also says that of his personal knowledge the cashier of the republican corruption fund had $250,000 in hand at one time, and that just before the election Don Cameron brought him $70,000 more.—[Grand Rapids Democrat.

The Tax on Woolen Goods.

The manufacturer of woolen goods is protected by a tax of about 50 per cent on their value. The tax is a sort of double-handle arrangement. The goods are taxed on their weight and on their value. It is compound tax ation. On cheap goods, valued at not to exceed 80 cents per pound the present tax is 35 cents a pound, and in addition 35 per cent on the value. Under this method course and heavy goods are taxed more by the yard than are fine and light goods. Consumers do not buy woolen goods by weight, but by the yard, and yet the tax is levied on their weight and value. To find out what the tax amounts to, put a piece of heavy woolen goods, such as our laboring people use for winter wear, on the scales and ascertain its weight. For every pound add 35 cents; for every extra ounce add 2¼ cents; then to the actual commercial value add 35 per cent and you have the tax on woolen goods of this grade. It is not a simple method of taxation; these tariff makers who levy taxes for what is falsely called "protection" always connect a complicated system so as to hide in part of its rascalities; but the tax is not far from 50 per cent on the value of woolen goods. What is the object of this tax? Protectionists say it is mostly for the benefit of the workers in the woolen mills. Let us see what per centage of the cost of making woolen goods is paid for labor. To find out we must turn to the census of 1880. There we meet train that the total value of finished woolen fabric produced in the United States during the census year was in round numbers, $265,861,000. The total wages paid to produce this large amount of goods was found to amount to $47,723,931. A very simple calculation shows that for every $100 worth of finished goods the cost of labor was about $22. Let us repeat: for making one hundred dollars worth of woolen goods in the United States the manufacturing capitalists paid on an average twenty-two dollars for labor. This, of course, is 22 per cent on the value of the goods produced, and yet a protective tax of about 90 per cent, on the comercial value is levied to sustain the woolen industry.

Let us look into this matter of wages a little deeper. Suppose the wages of the workers in our woolen mills are double what the are in England; we know they are not, as the average wages paid in this country in 1880 was but $5.60 a week; but, calling them double, the cost in labor for producing woolen goods was but 11 per cent higher, on the basis of production in this country, than in Great Britain. For whose benefit, then, is the 50 per cent tax on the value of woolen goods levied? Surely it cannot be made to appear that it is for the benefit of the workers, as 22 per cent of their total value covered the entire sum paid for the labor employed in producing them. Surely it is not for the benefit of the consumers, as to the extent that the manufacture is benefited by tax, the cost of the goods is increased over and above what it would be if there was no tax, and any increase of cost takes exactly so much money out of consumers. Clearly this large protective tax of 50 per cent on the value of woolen goods—nearly 2½ per cent more than the entire cost of the labor employed in their production—was levied chiefly to benefit the manufacturing capitalists, the men who infest the lobbies of congress for the sake of the plunder to be derived from protective taxation, by giving them a monopoly of the home market. As the figures prove beyond all cavil that the cry of high wages, and that the tax is mainly for the benefit of the wage-earners, is merely a plausible and convenient pretext for catching votes to sustain a burdensome, unjust and unequal system of taxation for the benefit of capital and for the sake of plunder.

New Parties.

Saginawian.

The Washington Post asks: "What has become of the new party that rushed into the breathing world at Chicago on the 4th instant? Perhaps its fledgling bosses are taking time to study political options."

Whatever may be the ambition of those who, to take advantage of a "balance of power" organization, hope to deceive the people into the belief that a third party organization, of any sort of significence or force, is possible in the coming presidential contest, it is plain to practical members of both the democratic and republican parties that there will be less of new party nonsense in 1884, than in any campaign that has been fought since 1860. The feeling among democrats being the same as that among the republicans, that the issue be tried fairly as between these two organizations without the intervention of ephemeral factions, there is no question as to who will be parties to the contest whatever may be the disagreements as to the platform on either side. It is not too soon, even now, to give the word "fall in," for a failure to take sides with one or the other of the two great contending parties will in effect be a determination to forego any participation in the election.

Blaine is not a resident of this state, but resides in the state of New York, on the 3rd floor of the building known as No. 3 Cortlandt street, in the city of New York, in the county of New York, in said state, and that the defendant Sarah C. Blaine is not appearing to be entered herein, within four months from the date of this order, and in case of her appearance that she cause her answer to the complainant's bill of complaint to be filed, and a copy thereof to be served on said complainant's solicitors, within twenty days after service on her of a copy of said bill, and notice of this order; and that in default thereof, said bill be taken as confessed by the said non-resident defendant. And it is further ordered, that within twenty days the said complainant cause a notice of this order to be published in the Charlevoix Journal, a newspaper printed, published, and circulating in said county, and that such publication be continued in each week for six weeks in succession, or that he cause a copy of this order to be personally served on said non-resident defendant, at least twenty days before the time above prescribed for her appearance.

Palmiter, of the Enterprise, made a brief call at the JOURNAL office on Tuesday.

Barlow, of the Statesman, accompanied the band excursion to Petoskey Saturday.

J. B. Bushnell, with the Chicago newspaper union, made the JOURNAL a brief call last Thursday.

The editor and family visited friends in Petoskey last Saturday evening. It was our first visit to that village.

Mr. C. C. Sexton, traveling agent and correspondent of the Grand Rapids Democrat, gave the JOURNAL a call yesterday.

Judge Dryden, of St. Louis, Mo., came back to Charlevoix this week for his family, and they returned to their home yesterday.

Rev. Jas. Davis, of Banks, started on Tuesday for Topeka, Kansas. He goes on account of poor health, taking his family with him.

News Brevities.

Norwood young ladies have formed a cooking club.

E. P. Houghton painted his new house this week.

The Sentinel came out last week pasted and trimmed.

L. D. Bartholomew has a new stock of Garland stoves this week.

C. R. Bellinger's new house progresses; also his neighbor's, next door east.

L. L. Carr has a fine assortment of fresh fruit, and makes additions daily.

If the business men here are not watchful East Jordan will get a grist mill before we do.

Petoskey is a fine place in some respects, but cannot equal Charlevoix as a site for a city.

Mr. Inwood is building a stone sustaining wall on the west side of his lot next to Bridge street.

New furniture at H. C. Cooper's. Read his new advertisement, then go and look over his stock.

H. S. Harsha has put his real estate sign up on stout posts near the bridge where everybody can see it.

Geo. W. Miller will occupy the new Buttars block with a stock of clothing and gents' furnishing goods in a few days.

The good templars will have an ice cream social at Bradley's dining hall Friday evening. A good time is expected.

Advertisers who have an idea that the JOURNAL is not read outside of Charlevoix will please consult our county exchanges.

Don't fail to go on the Beaver Island excursion next Sunday. You will never have a better chance to see that famous place.

If we could obtain a rail connection with Detroit, Charlevoix would at once become a distributing point for this whole Pine lake region.

The burglar who went through the Cushman and Clifton houses, Petoskey, and was captured, got five years, but escaped from the officer on the way to prison.

A good many of our state exchanges are issuing supplements. The JOURNAL will too, when it gets age, and its advertising patronage outgrows its present space.

The advertisement of Mr. Joseph Hyland, boiler maker, may be found in this paper. He is now ready for business, and so far as we can learn is giving the best of satisfaction.

The steamer T. S. Faxton will give an excursion to the famous Beaver island next Sunday, leaving Charlevoix at 7:30 a. m. The ladies' band will furnish music. Tickets, $1.00.

Mr. Harrison Berdan is finishing a new residence on the terrace overlooking Round lake. It commands as fine a view of the town and its surroundings as any location in Charlevoix.

Wanted—fifty new tenement houses. We have no doubt there are fifty mechanics who would settle their families in Charlevoix, and spend the earnings here which they now send to their families outside.

See E. M. Clark's new advertisement this week. He offers bargains in dry goods, clothing, boots, shoes, etc. It will do your eyes good to look over his stock, and his prices guarantee a benefit to your purse.

Campbell Bros. are building a pile driver for L. E. Allen. The wood work will be entirely new, but the machinery of the old driver will be put in, and repaired wherever necessary to make it good as new.

It has been suggested that hides can be shipped to some point on Pine lake as cheaply as the bark can be shipped away. If such is the fact, the quicker a large tannery is erected here the better for the county.

Mr. Byron Sos advertises with business notices in this issue of the JOURNAL. He keeps a full line of dress goods, boots, shoes, groceries, etc., and advertises low prices. Give him a call, in the brick store opposite the postoffice.

The Charlevoix planing mill is running to its fullest capacity, and with the increase of business likely to come next year, it is possible another mill will be located in the county. If there is, we must try and get it established in our village.

The young farmer looking for a home may not buy so many acres here for his money as he can in Dakota, but he will be sure of a home sooner, and with no fear of freezing to death for lack of fuel, as they sometimes do out west.

While at Petoskey last Saturday evening, by the kindness of Mr. Geo. V. Mills, we were shown through the Arlington house. We confess surprise at the size of the house and quality of furnishings, considering the size of the town in which it is located.

The following placard hangs up in a Tennessee store window:

Peppermint Elixir for

In Charlevoix county it is also used as a deodorizer.

Land on Round lake is too valuable to give away, but something ought to be done, and soon, too, to establish a grist mill here, either on Round lake, or near the line of railroad to be established sometime. The lake we have; the road we have not. The mill would better be established on the lake.

One of our citizens of Norwood gave a dancing party one evening last week, which was patronized by a number of Charlevoix gents. It has been intimated that one young man was afraid no refreshments would be furnished, so he took something along in his pocket. By an accident it was crushed, and he purchased two bottles of peppermint to renovate the pocket.

Pine lake and south arm have a coast line of 75 to 100 miles, and the land abutting thereon is as good for agricultural purposes and fruit growing as any in the state. The farmer can tie his schooner to the bank, with very little or no dockage, and load his grain or fruit for the Chicago or east ern markets, with little handling, and no loading of produce into wagons to drive miles and miles over rough roads.

Andrew J. Blackbird is advertised to give an historical lecture at the opera house Sept. 8. Mr. B. is son of the Ottawa chief, and was formerly interpreter for Mackinac Indian agency. He will give a history of the Ottawas, and at the close will recite the Indian's lament, in soliloquy, in full Indian costume.

Mr. E. S. Bartholomew, formerly of Westfield, New York, is about to establish a canning factory, at Charlevoix, for the purpose of putting up fruits and vegetables. This is a good thing not only for that town but for this whole section, as it will make a good market for all kinds of small fruits as well as large quantities of vegetables. He will unite contracts this fall and winter for corn, tomatoes, peas, etc., to be grown by the acre next year for him.—[Petoskey Democrat.

Prof. McAfferty's readings at the opera house Tuesday evening was a fine entertainment. His personations are faultless, and draw from the listener a sympathy with the character delineated. In "an order for a picture" one could follow the professor and see the picture as it grew. In "Betsey and I are out" the personation of the old farmer could not be surpassed. By request of the audience "Darius Green" was read after concluding the printed program. Our citizens are enthusiastic in praise of the professor, and can recommend him to all who desire an evening of pleasure and profit.

The intent of two items in the last JOURNAL seems to have been misunderstood. While they were apparently in favor of protecting our home industries, they stated distinctly that the large boats would make an increase of trade in the upper lake towns. The aim was to show the fallacy of protection as a principle of trade. The JOURNAL will go as far as any one in promoting the industries of the whole county, and believes in making trade as free as possible. We took a local subject for an illustration, and there is every appearance of having targed a hornet's nest, but we have nothing to retract so far as the principle is concerned. We have located in Charlevoix to stay, and shall labor for her welfare to the best of our ability.

Prof. E. H. Crane, the well known archæologist, of Petoskey, has been digging in the bluffs on the lake Michigan beach, one half mile north of the channel, with interesting scientific results. On Wednesday last as he was walking along the north beach he found pieces of chert and flint bearing evidence of the workmanship of pre-historic man. Ascending the bluff he soon found the burial place of one of our first citizens, who came here during the mound builder's age. The soil where the body had rested was darkened, while at the right were found three pieces of pottery of the capacity of a pint, each; decorated, in a handful of worked flints, and the stones used in working them, one being a fine silicified coral. The professor has explored 300 mounds and attaches much importance to his discovery here. He believes there are a great many mounds and relics of this kind to be found near by.—[Sentinel.

HUNTING OWLS IN MISSOURI.

BY J. C. SCHOENBERGER.

You, who are skilled in hunting fowls,
Know you how they capture owls?
No? Then wait a bit and see
How 'tis done in Missouri.

Well, they start out for the woods,
Having no explosive goods,
Nothing of the kind, you know,
Nothing but the plan below.

Now they spy one on a tree,
Very wise owl looks it to be;
When they see he starts with fear
Round his tree their course they steer.

Ah! the owl jeers, as is right,
Onward still the hunter's bound—
The owl his head twists round and round!

Well, the outcome one knows—
So, at least, the story goes—
Keeping the owl upon the string
Till his head quite off they wring!

IN SPITE OF HERSELF.

BY BILDA.

"Uncle Morton, I do wish you would drop the subject of Randall Whitney, now and forever. If you are tired of me, just say so, and I will pack my trunk yet to-night, and go to Aunt Barbara's." And the glow deepened on Ethel Dean's face; her brown eyes grew almost black, with little smoldering gleams of fire shining in their depths. She had been given into Uncle Morton's care at the early age of 3 years, and, in all the eighteen years that she had lived with him, he had never beheld her in such a passion. The good old man was frightened, both at the girl's anger and at her threat of leaving the old homestead.

"Well! well! Ethel, child, don't get so angry. Of course you needn't marry Randall Whitney unless you choose, for there is no compulsion about the matter, at all; I only mentioned that he expected to pay us a visit this summer, and that I should like to have you treat him civilly. I am sorry if I said any thing to hurt your feelings, Ethel, said Mr. Morton, walking nervously up and down the broad piazza of the Morton farm-house.

"I am not angry with you, uncle, but I have grown tired of hearing Randall Whitney's name; and if he is coming here this summer, you can hire Dorathy Mason, and I will go to Aunt Barbara's while he is here. I have been wanting to visit her for some time, and this will be a good chance."

Uncle Morton paused in his walk, and looked down at the young girl as she sat on the steps pulling a rose to pieces, leaf by leaf, and a very pretty picture she made. The clambering rose-bush, with its wealth of foliage and its buds just bursting into bloom, formed a pleasing background for the fresh, sweet face, with the frank brown eyes and waving masses of lustrous brown hair.

"Why, Ethel, how can I spare you just now? cried her uncle, in real distress, "with the harvest just coming on, the summer's fruit to look after, and the dairy to be taken care of? Not now, Ethel, not now. I will write to him not to come until fall; will that do?"

Ethel laughed outright.

"You dear old uncle! It is a shame that you cannot invite who you please to your own house; but I do so much want to have the house without visitors this summer."

"Well, girlie, have it as you please, I will write to Randall this very evening not to come until fall. Bless me! we can't have you going off to Aunt Barbara's now. No, indeed!" And bustling into the house, Uncle Morton called for a lamp, and immediately set about writing a letter to Randall Whitney. A glimpse of the old gentleman's letter to the son of his old college friend will explain the situation of affairs as well, or perhaps better than anything we could say.

MY DEAR RANDALL: I had anticipated a great deal of pleasure from the visit you promised to make us this summer. Though your father and I were such warm friends, I have not seen you since you were quite a small boy, and I am very sorry, but I shall have to ask you to defer your visit until fall. My niece, Ethel Dean, who has also been my housekeeper since the death of my wife, refuses to have any visitors at the farm-house this summer. You see, my dear boy, I do not fear about the lack, but tell you the plain truth of the matter. The fact is, she is going away on a visit, then I shall certainly look for you. By the way, do you know of any likely young fellow who would come out here to work? I keep about twenty cows, and sell the milk at a cheese factory, some three miles distant, and I have some one to ditch here and fetch cows occasion. If you know of a steady, trusty young man who would like such a place, send him out, and be sure to come yourself at least the 1st of September.

Hoping you may not feel offended, I remain your friend, JAY MORTON.

"There, Ethel, do you think that it is plain enough?" and he bent the letter to Ethel, who came in from the moonlight, her dark hair damp with dew, and curling about her forehead in tiny rings.

"Oh! smelt, he will think I am a cross-grained old maid, and that I rule you and your home with a rod of iron," cried the girl. "But what need I care, on Uncle's behalf some one is to visit his proud old ways; yes, that is all right, and I—He said not he, and for his darling's sake, especially as she can be here," and with a merry laugh she gave her uncle a good-night kiss, and went off to bed and to dream.

John Morton and Richard Whitney had been schoolmates, and "chums" in their early years, and warm friendship, despite the dormant dignity of manhood, had time, by, were both married, and while Dick, as he was usually called, went to a distant city, and engaged in the mercantile business, Jack took up the occupation of a farmer. The young men were often spoken of as twins, though there was no tie of blood between them.

But if we are ever blessed with children," they said "we will have the families united by marriage," No children ever came to John Morton's home, except Ethel, the daughter of his only sister, who, in dying, left her orphan child to his care. When Ethel was 12 years old, Mrs. Morton died, and on the shoulders of the young girl fell the care of her uncle's home.

Servants were employed as in her Aunt's time to do the heavy work, but Ethel, despite her tender years, had personal supervision of the household department, and soon proved herself to be a capital manager of affairs belonging to that domain. Ten years previous to the opening of our story Richard Whitney died, leaving an only son, Randall. The young man was not aware of the existence of Ethel Dean, much less of the plan talked over by his father and John Morton, to have him marry the young lady some time in the future. Randall had succeeded his father in business, and one summer, weary of the ceaseless round of care, tired of the heat and confusion of the city, he remembered the promise he had made to visit Uncle Morton, and he determined to spend a few weeks at the farm-house. All needful preparations were completed, and he was on the eve of starting, when Mr. Morton's letter was received.

"Heigh-ho!" said he, when he had read the characteristic epistle through twice, "The poor old man seems to have a very pleasant home, I'll wager. From the sum of his letter, I imagine Miss Ethel Dean to be a crabbed old maid, who, to use a slang phrase, "runs the ranche."

So he sent an immediate reply to Mr. Morton's letter, stating that it would suit him just as well to make the proposed visit later in the season, and he had found a young man that he hoped would suit Mr. Morton. He would recommend the young fellow as being trusty and of respectable family, and he would be on hand some time during the next week.

Randall Whitney's letter was received at the Morton farm-house on Tuesday, and on Thursday of the next week, as Ethel was busy in the front-yard tying up a refractory rose-bush, the click of the gate warned her of the approach of some one. "Well, I wonder what he has got to sell, for of course he is agent for something or another," was the girl's thought as a young man dressed in a serviceable suit of dark-gray and carrying a valise came up the flower-bordered path.

"Is this where Mr. Morton lives?" asked the stranger, lifting his broad-rimmed straw hat, and bowing with the graceful ease that comes only with true politeness.

"Yes, sir," answered Ethel, stepping down from the elevated position on the three-legged stool; "you will find Mr. Morton sitting on the piazza."

"Thanks," said the young man, with a look of evident admiration of the of the sweet face hal hidden in the depths of a capacious sun-bonnet, on his way in the direction of Uncle Morton.

Busy with her work Ethel had almost forgotten the presence of a stranger at the house, when she heard her uncle calling to her, "Now, what's wanting," said she to herself, as half petulantly she dropped her pruning shears and ball of twine. "My opinion on some wonderful fiber-saving invention, I expect." But no sample in miniature of a washing machine, or automatic barrel churn, no self-operating, or double-reversible-back-action-folding-ironing-board met her gaze. Only the gentlemanly-appearing young man, quietly talking to her Uncle Morton.

"Ethel, this is the young man Mr. Whitney spoke of in his letter, my niece, Ethel Dean, Mr. Fields. A surprised, incredulous look flashed, for a moment, across the stranger's handsome face, then his polite, deferential bow was returned by one equally polite from Ethel. "Now, girlie," this was Uncle Morton's pet name for Ethel, "since Harry Saw my Whitney is in the room, as I know he must be tired with two days of steady travel on the cars, after supper Ned will drive over to the station, and fetch your trunk." When the young man had gone to his room Ethel joined her uncle on the piazza. "Why, uncle, Mr. Fields is gentleman! what possessed him to hire out as a common farm hand?"

"Well, his health is not very good, and he was advised to spend the summer in the country, taking plenty of exercise. When Whitney's letter came, I was in need of a man to drive to and from the cheese-factory, the thought struck him that here I could enjoy country air, have an abundance of healthy exercise, and turn an honest penny in the bargain."

"But what can he do, uncle, if he is in such poor health?"

"That remains to be seen, for now that he is here I am quite willing to receive him a fair trial. I like his appearance very well; he seems so thoroughly frank and manly."

And so thought Ethel when the young man came down to supper. Sidney Fields was not what one would call a really handsome man, yet there was something that suggested mental energy and wide and varied knowledge of life. His eyes, of a dark open face, though with proud, firm lines; a face that once seen was not easily forgotten. A look of pleased surprise flitted across his expressive countenance when he entered the cool, wide kitchen where the evening meal was served. The table was spread with a snowy cloth, on which was placed a most inviting repast. Sweet yellow butter and fresh cells, strawberries, and a pitcher of richest cream, a crystal dish of amber-colored jelly, potatoes, eggs, doughnuts, fragrant tea, and a large pitcher of water for any who wish it. A pretty set of plain white china, silver knives and forks, and the whitest of white napkins.

When about 17 Ethel had attended an excellent boarding-school for two years, and the duty of cleanly and beautiful living had been strongly impressed on her mind. She herself was pleasant to look at as she sat at the head of the table, and dispensed the honors with gentle grace and dignity. Uncle Morton, Mr. Fields, Ethel, Susan and Katy, two rosy-cheeked damsels, shy, but not awkward, and Ned Brown, the hired man, formed a very pleasant group about the farmer's table. "Surely," thought Sidney Fields, as he went to his large, airy chamber that night, "my lines have fallen in pleasant places."

Next morning the young man entered upon the duties assigned to him; and as Uncle Morton expressed it, "he proved to be the right man in the right place." Every morning he was up with the sun, and down to the milking-lot where Ned and Susan, and Katy were filling the pails with rich milk, then back to the cool stone milk-house, with a brimming bucket in either hand, where Ethel, her round arms bared to the elbow, her lovely face flushed with the early exercise, was straining the foamy fluid into the bright tins, scurrying about with the clear, cold water ripplied with a soft, murmuring sound. There had been a wonderful change in the "new hand" since his arrival in the farm. His face was bronzed by exposure to the sun and wind, and glowed with the rich color of health and strength. The tired, jaded look in his brown eyes had given place to the brightness and buoyancy of renewed life. His musical voice, or clear, ringing whistle, as he went about his work, awoke the echoes through the meadow and woodland.

"Miss Ethel" said he, coming into the milk-room one morning, "do you know this summer's work will make me almost hate the city? I do not know how I can ever endure its noise and confusion again," and leaning against the open door he watched her deft hands flying swiftly about their work. "I have been here nearly three months, and my vacation is almost over," said he, musingly.

Ethel glanced up quickly.

"I think the summer has been a great benefit to you. You have gained almost perfect health, and, a good brown color," she added, laughingly.

"Yes," she answered, with downcast eyes and deepening face.

"I want you, Ethel, to go with me to my home in the city, as my wife. Will you? for I love you dearly."

"But Uncle Morton has other plans for my future," said Ethel, archly "expects me to spend a few weeks at the city."

"Ha! ha!" what a merry laugh broke the morning stillness. "Ha! ha! marry Randall Whitney, well! that is news indeed. Have you ever met him, Ethel?"

"No; and uncle has not seen him since he was a little boy; but it was planned between his father and Uncle Morton that the two families should be united by our marriage."

"And you are willing the plan should be carried into effect?" he asked, his eyes twinkling merrily.

"No! I hate him by very name," cried the girl, stamping her little foot vehemently, "and I have told uncle so."

"Never mind, Ethel, I will have a talk with your uncle this morning, and I think Mr. Whitney may "hang his harp on the willow."

"But I have not given you permission to speak to uncle yet; you are too rapid in taking things for granted," said Ethel saucily, as Ned drove up, the rattle of the wheels drowning the sound of her voice. "But it is true," it not, Ethel?" and she could not say to him "nay," neither did she wish to.

"Yes," was the answer, as she danced merrily away toward the house, while Sidney Fields drove away through the dancing sunlight, his heart bounding lightly, and a knowing smile lurking on the proudly-curved lips.

"Ethel," said her uncle that evening after the duties of the farm and household were completed, "When do you want to go on your visit to Aunt Barbara's?"

The two were in the sitting-room that apartment was just lighting the evening lamps.

"I don't see how I can go this fall, uncle. The grain will soon be ripe and the peaches will have to be attended to. It seems too bad to think of visiting now."

"I know there is work; to be done that the girls cannot do," said Uncle Morton, "but you know next month Randall Whitney will be here on his long-promised visit, and I thought maybe you would want to go away. You remember what you said last spring," and the old man rocked softly back and forth in the big arm-chair.

"Well, him come, uncle, I cannot afford to let all the fruit go to waste on his account."

"Better say, Miss Ethel, you cannot afford to leave the new happiness that has come into your young life. Well, girlie, I am glad you are not going. I would hardly know how to entertain him alone."

Just then Sidney Fields sauntered in from the piazza, where he had been sitting, hidden by the vines and the early twilight.

"Mr. Morton," said he, as he drew a chair close to the old gentleman, "I have a confession to make. I have been living in your house almost three months under an assumed name, and as an impostor."

"What?" cried Mr. Morton, as he sprang to his feet, "you're a rascal; a scoundrel!"

"No, Mr. Morton, not quite a rascal, only Randall Whitney, the son of your old friend, Richard."

Uncle Morton stood spell-bound. Ethel leaned against the mantle, her face flushing and paling by turns.

"Randall Whitney!" ejaculated the old man; "and you have been my hired man for three months!"

"Yes; Miss Ethel here would not receive me as a visitor, and as I was determined to spend my vacation here, I borrowed another name and came as a hired hand." Crossing over to where Ethel stood, white and still, he led her to Uncle Morton. "Uncle Morton, Ethel has vowed she will never marry Randall Whitney, but I love her so sincerely that I am willing to take the name of Sidney Fields henceforth, if with your consent, she will be my wife."

Uncle Morton sank down in the arm chair. "The girlie must do as she pleases, he."

Ethel stood blushing, but no word left her red lips.

"Forgive me, Ethel, for my deception," said Randall Whitney drew her out into the silver moonlight. "You must say 'yes,' for I am a visitor now, and it will never do to be rude to company."

Now her laugh rang out merrily. And I dreaded your coming so much. I thought you proud and overbearing, and would be ready to make sport of our plain, country ways."

"And I," said her companion, "dread to meet Mr. Morton's old-maid house-keeper, who would not have any visitors at Morton farm."

When the Christmas bells rang out their glad chimes, Ethel left the old home as the wife of Randall Whitney, and Uncle Morton went with them. Ned Brown and cherry-cheeked Susan were married and took charge of the farm, where every year they are "fetha from the city are greeted as welcome visitors, and from where, Ethel dearest, she won "in spite of herself."—Chicago Ledger.

A Vocation to Keep Out Of.

"I would advise every young man who is thinking upon the question of adopting a profession to avoid the law," said a Philadelphia judge of twenty-five years' experience on the bench. "Yet, that is only a general statement. There must be lawyers and there always will be, afford a certain number of splendid prizes for sustained and well-directed endeavor. If it is the knowledge of this fact that forces so many young men into competition for these rewards but the contestants are to the prizes ten to one. The law is full of the large cities of this country is hopelessly overcrowded. Not more than half the lawyers make a comfortable living."

"Law!" said another Judge. "It's a good thing to keep out of at the rate the publicity young men are coming to the bar. I infer that few who have a desire to achieve distinction in it will be long me. Though there are half a dozen members of the bar in this city whose annual income is from $50,000 to $75,000 a year, there are 600, I am quite sure who do not make $10 a week. One can hardly say at the outset who will and who will not succeed. Of two men of apparently equal abilities and opportunities one will somehow reach the front in a few years while the other will always remain in the rear.

"There is Richard C. Dale, for example, a young man, earning $10,000 or $15,000 a year. District Attorney Graham made $50,000 during his third year at the bar. There are, of course, a large number of people who have made luck. But bless my soul, there are men of ability and energy, who have been at the bar for ten years and do not seem as much as they would at a tolerably-good trade. It is no wonder that so many who enter upon the legal arena fall of confidence in their ability to achieve great things. Become disheartened in a year or two and enter upon other pursuits. The overcrowding of the profession is largely attributed to the working of the same principle that turns out scores of clerks and book-keepers when skilled mechanics are really required. It is the idea that manual labor is degrading and that it is somehow better to be a lawyer on the threshold of poverty than a machinist or printer with comfort and an assuring future. This idea is grown in the general atmosphere of the public schools, and by the time a boy gets into the upper classes he is incapable of calmly thinking of entering any vocation in which his hands might become soiled."—Philadelphia Times.

He Did Not Hear It.

Johnny Fizzletop had been over to the house of a neighbor, Col. Percy Verger.

"Well, Johnny," asked Maj. Fizzletop, "did you have a nice time over at Col. Verger's?"

"Oh, yes, I had a nice time, and, pa, they are going to have cabbage for dinner."

"Haven't I told you forty times that you must never repeat what you have heard at people's houses."

"But, pa, I didn't hear anything about the cabbage, I smelled it with my nose."—Texas Siftings.

WHAT has Random done that so many people shoot at him.

WHEN a man is sentenced for twenty days in jail his days are numbered.

DISSOLVING views—Looking through the bottom of a glass containing gin and sugar.

SOME men return home from "The Lodge" as a hunted criminal does when passing a jail.

THEY say that bald heads and gray hairs are defects in nature's works. The defects are more noticeable when a ballet troupe is in town.

"I SAY Pat how do you like America?" "Purty well, but I am thinking about going back to Ireland." "What's the matter with this country?" asked his friend. "Faith and there's nothing, but, I am going back to be ex-patriated."

A WOMAN applied for a divorce, and in giving her evidence in the case averred that she had passed "many sleepless nights in tears." The Judge granted divorce, of the cause Hane expressed his sympathy for the man who had a wife that would tear around so much.

STRANGE STORY.

Simon Suggs' Singular Story Seriously Scandalizing Susan Sykes.

Sometime since Simon Suggs started South, sight-seeing. Suffering slight sun-stroke, Simon sought some shady retreat. Spying Susan Sykes, symmetrical seraph, sweet sixteen, sitting side some sparkling streamlet, singing sweetly siren songs, Simon stopped.

Strolling silently, saluting Susan, Simon said: "Susan Sykes, sensible seclusive, selection, studying stereography, seismology, seismography, seismography?"

Susan seemed surprised. Starting suddenly, she said: "Simon Suggs!"

Simon said: "Sure!"

She said: "Susan's studying stegnography, Simon."

Standing side Susan, Simon said: "Sweet seraph, sing some sweetnet, suggestive sonnet stylishly."

Simon said something sentimental.

Susan, smiling, said: "Stop such stuff, Simon."

Simon said: "Susan, swains seldom speak such sentiments sportively."

Susan seemed serious; stammering, she said: Si-Simon. Simon, speak sensibly, shoulder, something steals set-strangely." She swooned.

Such scenes scared Simon. Supplying some specific she soon seemed spry. Sitting supinely, Susan, soliloquizingly, said: "Silly, silly."

Simon, still solicitous, suggested: "Stop such speculative sophistry, Susan. Swallow some sweetmeats, something strengthening, substantial—ham, sandwiches, sausage, sour, strawberries, sillabub."

Susan smiled. "Shaune, Simon shaune; suppose sensitive stomachs stand such stuff?" Say simpleton.

Simon seemed so sanguine sitting side Susan. She, somewhat self-willed, startled Simon.

Simon said: "Sweetheart, strictly speaking, suppose some sycophant should seek Susan?"

Susan said: "Should say, stop, sir; Simon Suggs, seniority, seals—"

Simon stopped Susan, saying, "Splendid, splendid. Susan, say, splendid."

Susan said: "Simon, see Sykes, Sr., shortly."

Simon saw Sykes, Sr., said: "Seeking spouse, sir?"

Sykes, Sr., said: "Susan."

Simon said: "Sir?"

Sykes, Sr., said: "Spose, so, Simon."

Simon said: "Susan, sire says, spose so."

Susan smiled.

Simon said: "September second."

Susan said: "So."

Simon sought Squire Solomon Smith's services.

September second several Smiths, Suggs, Sykes, selected specially, sought Susan and Sykes, senior's, spacious stone structure.

Squire Smith, standing, said: Simon Suggs, Susan Sykes solemnly splice!

Susan sobbed Susan.

Saluting Susan Simon said: "Splendid."

Squire Smith said: "Spondulicks, Simon."

Simon said: "So."

Squire Smith suggested: "Seventy shillings silver."

Simon said: "Squire Smith, species good. Sorry Simon's suspended."

Squire Smith said: "Specting specimen?"

Samuel Sykes, Sr., said socially: "Squire—"

He proceeds to the patient's bedside, assailed by his admiring class.

"Well, my good fellow, you spit blood, don't you?

"Yes, doctor, I"

"Hard! do; we know all about it, and you have cold sweats at night, too."

"Yes, sir, and"—

"I fancy now that by occupation you are a musician?"

"Yes, I play—"

"Oh! I see. You belong to a brass band, and you have over-exerted your lungs; have fairly blown your lungs away pulling into your instrument, and—mum, you perceive that darkness has no secrets from science. What instrument do you play upon, my good man?"

"The cymbals, sir."

A Description of the Person of Jesus Christ.

The following was found in an ancient manuscript, which was sent by Publius Lentulus, President of Judea, to the Senate of Rome:

There lives at this time, in Judea, a man of singular character whose name is Jesus Christ. The barbarians esteem him a prophet, but his followers adore him as the intermediate offspring of the immortal God. He is endowed with such unparalleled virtue as to call back the dead from their graves, and to heal every kind of disease with a word or a touch.

His form is tall and elegantly shaped, his aspect amiable and reverend; his hair flows in beautiful shades, which no united color can match, falling into graceful curls below his ears, agreeably couching on his shoulders, and parting on the crown of his head, like the headdress of the sect of the Nazarites. His forehead is smooth, and his cheeks without a wrinkle, and of a lovely red; his nose and mouth are formed with exquisite symmetry; his beard is thick, and suitable to the hair of his head, reaching a little below his chin, and parted in the middle like a fork; his eyes are bright, clear and serene.

He rebukes with majesty, counsels with mildness and invites with the most tender and persuasive language. His whole address, whether word or deed, being elegant, brave, and strictly characteristic of so exalted a being. No man has ever seen him laugh, but the whole world has frequently beheld him weep; and so persuasive are his tears that the multitude cannot withhold theirs from joining in sympathy with him. He is very modest, temperate and wise.

"In short, whatever this phenomenon may be in the end, he seems at present a man of excellent beauty and divine perfections, every way surpassing the children of men."

PRIVATE RANKANFILE.

Why It Is That He Feels Lonesome—The Officers in the Offices of a Grateful Government.

[B. J. Burdette in Philadelphia Times.]

Somehow Private Rankanfile always wore the expression of a lonesome man three years in four. There is a wandering roll of his eyes, a searching glance, as of a man seeking for something he hasn't exactly lost, and never expects to find.

But when I met him the other day there was a glad look in his eye, and he grasped my hal eagerly.

"You must be here on the 20th," he said, gayly; "the old One Hundred and Eighty-seventh is going to have a reunion. I'll see all the old boys; gallant old fellows I haven't met since '65."

There was nothing lonesome about Rankanfile now. Civilian as I was, I rejoiced at the prospect of his meeting his old friends.

"It was a splendid regiment," I remarked. "The old One Hundred and Eighty-seventh made a gallant record. Where's Gen. De Rosparoid now?"

"Oh, he's Collector of Internal Revenue."

"So he is; I had forgotten. And Col. Echelon?"

"He's Postmaster."

"Sure enough. And Maj. Kampstuhl?"

"He's Sheriff."

"And Capt. Tompion?"

"United States Consul to—Gutta Percha, I believe it is."

"And Lieut. Col. Roundstep?"

"United States Marshal."

"And Capt. Turnbull?"

"He is a Judge of the United States Court."

"Oh, yes; and Quartermaster Saltberge?"

"He was in the Treasury Department until last week."

"And where is he now?"

"They don't know," said Private Rankanfile, evasively. "They think he is in Canada, but they haven't found him yet."

"Ah, yes; and where are the other officers of your regiment?"

"In the Legislature; all except Surgeon Greensash—he is in Congress—and Adjutant Tenshun, who is in the Pension Bureau."

"What are you doing?" I asked.

"I am shipping-clerk down here at Hicks, Tallow's, and"—with a sheepish look—"they won't want me after the 1st of June; they have to make a place for old Tallow's nephew. But I'll find something. Everybody I've ever met has a place very long. Come in and see us when we get together on the 20th, won't you?" and all the trouble died out of his face at the thought of meeting the old boys again.

I looked at him as he limped away. His gait is ungraceful, because he has a stiff knee—stiff as a bone. It was shattered at Antietam. The bullet went crashing into it when he ran back to pick up and save the regimental flag that had fallen from the dead hands of the Color Sergeant.

But I wondered no longer that Private Rankanfile seemed lonely. He was thinking, perhaps, of his comrades, the other privates in his regiment. There were several private soldiers in the regiment, I remember, whom I knew by name. The name of the other one has escaped me. Nor do I know where he is. He may be dead. Perhaps he is married. Something has happened to him, certainly. I looked for him in the Legislature, but his Captain tells me he is not there. I seek him in Congress, but his Colonel tells me he has not seen him nor heard of him since last election. I miss him at the Cabinet. He doesn't appear to be Consul to any place.

And yet, if he would only come forward and show himself, a grateful country has remembered him. He can get a berth at $40 per week in the West, after the railroad has secured all the best sections, twenty miles from the nearest postoffice, twice so far from water and wood as the settlers have to run in a day from a coal bank or forest, on precisely the same terms as are accorded to a man who has been in the land fifteen minutes. It is a great boon, and the private soldier should appreciate it. And undoubtedly he does—in a quiet way. He does not make much ado about it. And really there isn't very much for him to grow enthusiastic about.

But the private soldier, though indeed he is exceedingly rare and marvelously scarce at intervals, is not entirely lost. It will rejoice the hearts of his anxious friends to learn that his absence has been noted. People are inquiring for him. Eminent statesmen are looking him up. Distinguished Congressmen, who are not morally certain of "going back," are after him. Great men who have positively "gone out of politics" for good, unless the voice of the people should imperatively call them back to public life, are seeking the lost soldier in his retirement. The time of the quadrennial reunion draweth nigh. Also, the year of the national convention. In the days gone by, when the private soldier was more numerous than to-day, very nearly a thousand of him were required to make one Colonel. More than many times so many are sometimes requisite to the election of a member of Congress and to make a President.

Therefore he will be found. He will be dragged from his lurking place. If he has not been seen at the polls by 4 p. m. the General's own carriage will come after him. It will not come after him again for another four years. But it will come for him then.

And we rejoice, too, in the thought that the time is come. One day the private soldier will shine resplendent as a blazing planet against the nebulous background of half-forgotten field and line officers. It has been ever the fate of the private soldier. Napoleon is dead and all his marshals are dead. But the private soldier who fought under the "Little Corporal" at Waterloo, is he not found in every State? The "Iron Duke" is dead, but does not the last surviving soldier of the "Guards" die some place nearly every month? Washington is dead, but his body-servant, is not his name Legion, of Legion county? And so some day the last General who fought in the War of the Rebellion will pass away, the final Colonel, much against his will, must die. Majors and Captains will join the innumerable caravan; but the last surviving private soldier of every regiment that fought anywhere will never leave us but will live enshrined in the perennial paragraph: "Till taps shall rise and set no more."

The Organ Baby.

There is another kind of little creature that is carried out with barrel organs in London; its lot is thoughtlessly made far worse than that of the monkey, yet we know its nigntly rest is not in the shed, but in the kitchen where the mournful hangs, where the man smoke by the hearth, where the women gossip in Italian, taking off their flat linen head-dresses, and hugging their babes against short skirts and bodices as bright as a rainbow. One subject of our anxiety is the organ baby. Who that walks through London streets has not seen it lying like an inanimate bundle on the top of the organ, or a little older, crowing from the basket on the handrail at the end of the frontlinged pleasure-car? Where are its brains? Will it grow up deaf, or will it shout, haunted all life long by an atmosphere of noise? Has custom become second nature to those tiny little organs all day? Has the baby, strapped on the organ-top, an inherited knack of not caring? Will it grow up to hear and understand, and sleep like other children? Or will it grow up an ape? We can conceive the monkey going mad, and tearing the organ, and scattering the crowd, if he were condemned to lie with his head against it all day. But what can the baby do?—Chambers' Journal.

A Democratic Opinion of Free Passes.

In the Lansing Journal of Aug. 23 is a letter from Mr. Geo. P. Sanford (for more than ten years editor of that paper, and a thorough and effective political manager) concerning the pledge of the democratic and greenback parties to oppose free passes, and to reduce expenses of state government. Mr. Sanford's position in state politics, and his thorough knowledge of political history, gives his utterances a force and value not expected by any other writer. We print the letter in full, as follows:

To the Editor of the Lansing Journal:

In a recent number of the Detroit Evening News I noticed an editorial article in which it was stated that the democrats and greenbackers in their combination campaign in this state last year were outspoken in their denunciation of the practice of public officials accepting free railroad passes and of the illegal ten-cent mileage charges, and that a sharp demand was made by the parties named for a reduction of useless offices, and for a general and sweeping reduction of expenditures, appropriations, and taxation in this state. Please grant me a brief space in your columns to unequivocally endorse this statement of the News as historically correct. There can be no honest or intelligent dispute about it. The platform of the greenback state convention, held at Grand Rapids on the 23d of August last year, at which a state ticket was nominated, states explicitly that that party will support no man for any office who is not pledged against the free railroad pass abuse. The democratic state convention, held on the same day at Jackson, voiced the demand of the democratic party that stricter economy should be practiced in the administration of state affairs, by using up the large balance left in the treasury for many years by the republicans, to be loaned to favorite banks at a low rate of interest. In the congressional district, the democratic convention which nominated Judge Winans for congress, declared that any member of congress who would accept a free railroad pass was unfit to be a congressman. The democratic state convention held in the city last March declared against free passes. This doctrine of opposition to free passes has been proclaimed again and again by the democratic and greenback parties of this state, and must be regarded as a cardinal principle of their political creed.

The unheard ten cent mileage charge was denounced by every newspaper and from every platform in the state where the combination campaign found support. The Detroit Free Press notably did splendid work of that sort. The demand for a sweeping reduction of appropriations and taxation was, as the News says, a leading feature of the combination campaign last fall. It was voiced by every newspaper and political speaker whom it was my fortune to meet or hear of in that somewhat memorable campaign. From the stumps and in the columns of the Journal I myself repeatedly assured the people that if we were successful it would result in a reduction of taxation amounting to $1,000,000 in the two years to come.

These facts are too well known to be denied even if anybody wanted to deny them. And I hope nobody wants to deny them. The democratic position is well known upon this whole matter. The greenback position is not less clearly defined nor less known. The two parties declared themselves unequivocally upon these matters last year, and I venture to predict that they will do so next year. Free railroad passes to public officials, unlawful charges upon the state treasury, an extravagant expenditure of money by public officials, and consequent unnecessary taxation, are evils that the democratic and greenback parties will, in my opinion, reprobate next year as they did last. Nothing has happened to mitigate their abomination of those abuses, and I think nothing is likely to happen to diminish their abhorrence of them. A republican majority in both houses of the legislature relieved the combination party of the responsibility for the failure to secure the desired reforms at their hands during the late legislative session. The reforms desired cannot be expected of a republican legislature. But if a legislature can be elected with a majority of democrats and greenbackers in both houses, and if then a sweeping reduction of useless offices, high salaries, and extravagant appropriations is not obtained, then will the people be indeed betrayed. No well-informed person can doubt for a moment that the rank and file of the opposition parties in this state are honest and in earnest in their demand for the reforms mentioned. And I have not the slightest doubt that they will reiterate their demand for them in the next state canvass in terms not to be misunderstood. It will be time enough to charge the democratic and greenback parties with infidelity to these demands for reform when they have endorsed, condoned, or defended any official disregard of them. Waste of the public money, and the rapacious extortion of monopoly are two evils which the people of this state are determined to oppose until they are overcome. GEO. P. SANFORD.

A Monarch's Prerogative.

New York Sun.

The fact that the government of Spanish Honduras has been employed of late as a pleasure yacht by the ladies of President Arthur's family, has not been much commented upon by the press, but we think it has none the less been considered with serious attention by the people.

The Dispatch belongs to the navy, and has frequently been used as a pleasure yacht by President Arthur. Such use is improper and unjustifiable. The vessel was paid for out of the public treasury, and is maintained for the necessities of the navy. She ought at once to be laid up, so that the expense of running her may be saved. There is no law which allows the President to employ boats at his own, and there is none to which can justify such an act.

But when in the absence of the President, the ladies of his family take possession of a government ship with its officers and crew and running expenses all paid out of the treasury, and when they convert it into pleasing vessels for their convenience and amusement, they take for themselves that which is not theirs, that which they ought most scrupulously to avoid taking, and that which the President ought, if necessary, to command them not to take.

In England and other monarchical countries, where the monarch is supposed to be the whole government, and where everything belongs to him and not to the people, it is thought proper to make such use of public vessels; but in this country a different system has prevailed. By law the President receives a fixed salary, and there are certain perquisites provided for him, such as a house, a garden, and servants, and these are also for the use of his family; but when he goes beyond the limits of the law and sets up a sort of royal prerogative on titling him to take the public vessels of the country, and to appropriate them for his own personal entertainment and gratification, he commits a wrong which injures him and discredits his exalted station.

While the republican papers explain the business outlook and find one over-production, another some other cause, and each a different cause for business troubles, it is manifest that strikes and bankruptcies, whether due to one cause or another, whether the grounds for striking are just or unjust, are not wholesome in directions. What if it be over-production? Here are valuable markets all around us, waiting for reciprocity treaties and mutual concessions looking to that mutual exchange which is commerce. For one reason or another the party which has administered the government for twenty-two years will make no effort in this direction, or only abortive efforts. We do not insist that individual democrats are more honest than individual republicans. Republicans always make the most of individual cases of democratic dishonesty; but the republican party is a party of organized corruption, jobbery and illegitimate interests. Doubtless in many years of democratic rule the rings broken up by the defeat of the republican party would relieve their lines and acquire new connections, or new interests arise, especially if aided by any great social or political convulsion or foreign war. But, defeat the republican party, and the rings and bosses would be crushed out so that the country could enjoy a long season of freedom from jobbery. The democratic party would enter power unhampered by such influences. It would be freed from the extreme protection school which bitterly resists every effort at a wise foreign policy. It would find every step impeded by some such job as swearing unjust claims from Venezuela and Mexico, and demanded money of rogues as the price of acting as protector in South America. At home and abroad, in every good work, the republican party can take no step without being arrested by the outcropping of some mighty job. At the best the state of business in this country demands at least a market for staples articles, the result of overproductions. These will never be obtained through a party so hampered by its own corruption, and by the public enemies and bankers and brokers which are its masters, that its foreign policy has descended to a point where it would disgrace the Fuegian Islanders. Free Press.

A republican paper at the nation at republic is speaking of the Hill investigation, says that unless the president and cabinet see in a more earnest determination to bring official thieves and defaulters to justice, the people will shortly begin the old rail-way agency for reconstruction and reform, and a political tidal wave, akin to the one that swamped Grantism in 1874, will roll over the country next year. By watching the course of events a few months more, the author of the appeal will be thoroughly prepared to sympathize with the mistaken proprietor of a hand organ who spent twelve hours in grinding out music before a deaf and dumb asylum. Evening Journal.

THE JAVA HORROR.

The Greatest Disaster of Modern Times—75,000 People Perish in Roaring Waves, Seething Fire, or Sulphurous Ashes.

The great volcanic eruption in Java and the subsequent tidal-wave in horror all the other calamities of this calamitous year, and in greatness is unquestionably one of the most appalling as well as terrible manifestations of Nature known in modern times. London dispatches of the 30th ult. give the following additional details of this awful horror: Further particulars of the great volcanic eruption in Java which have just reached here from Batavia show that the disaster was even more widespread and disastrous than was at first feared. At noon Sunday the engines and clocks were suppposed to have reached their height, but late in the afternoon and in the evening the shocks ceased the Batavia side and both increased, and the Island seemed to be about to be completely buried in the sea and sulphurous ashes. At the same time enormous waves began to dash with great force upon the shores, coming in some places far up into the interior, and great chasms opened in the earth and threatened to engulf a large proportion of the people and buildings. About midnight the most frightful scene of all took place. Suddenly enormous heavens clouds formed over the Krakatau range of mountains, which skirt the southern part of the Island. This cloud gradually increased in size until it formed a range of black cloud, which began to carry over a wide extent of territory. During the time the eruptions increased, and streams of lava poured incessantly down the sides of the mountains into the valleys, sweeping everything before them. Here and there a stream of lava would enter an arm of the sea or come in contact with the water of a river. Then the most terrific explosions would seriously produce boiling heat and rapid evaporation, but the superficial consolidation the almost instantly caused would prevent any further contact with the water. The steam that ensued in this, the case, as it subsided at the commencement of Monday, carried with it enormous beds in the air and in some instances overwhelming showers of boiling water, and in a moment or two were simultaneously letting out steam.

One of the most appalling freaks of the eruption was the carrying in the midst of the molten lava of a bed of solid coral of enormous size, which had been raised from one of the reefs. It was carried along for many miles and landed on the extremity of point St. Nicholas, at the northwest corner of the Island. The bed of coral was surrounded by a thick envelop of sand and rock, which appear to be conductors of heat. It is supposed that the bed formed the crust of some submarine mountain.

About 2 o'clock on Monday morning the great coral suddenly took fire and commenced and vanished. At the same time beautiful phosphoric were lured, and a column of steam and smoke over the southeast corner of the Island ascended to an altitude of 20,000 feet. In other parts of Java seemed to open their fiery mouths, and the shocks were sup

Annual School Meeting.

The annual school meeting at the school house was called to order by Mr. E. Carpenter, moderator, at 8 o'clock Monday evening, about 80 tax payers being present. Minutes of last meeting, and reports of receipts and expenditures were read by Mr. Eaton.

The receipts and expenditures for the year were as follows:

RECEIPTS.

Money on hand Sept. 3, 1887	$411 25
Received from one mill tax	192 79
Received from primary school interest fund	268 94
Received from tuition of non-resident pupils	31 25
Received from district taxes for all purposes	1,709 00
Received from all other sources	71 56
Total	$2,801 79

EXPENDITURES.

Paid male teachers	$675 00
Paid female teachers	855 00
Paid for building or repairing school-houses	231 79
Paid for all other purposes	252 71
Amount on hand Sept. 3, 1888	255 29
Total	$2,801 79

Estimates of the needs of the coming year were also read, after which a motion was made to raise $1,100 for teachers' wages. A substitute was offered to raise but $600, which, with the balance on hand and the mill tax and primary school money to come from the state, would be sufficient to meet all the expenses of the present school year. After considerable discussion the smaller amount was voted. The following sums were also voted: For wood, $85; for incidental expenses, $45; for janitor, $65.

The total amount voted is more than $800 less than was voted last year for all the purposes named, showing a disposition on the part of our citizens to reduce taxation whenever possible.

J. Milo Eaton was elected director for the coming three years, receiving 59 votes on the first formal ballot. During the term just closed he has given general satisfaction so far as we can learn.

New Clothing House.

It is perhaps pretty well known that Geo. W. Miller, late chief clerk for Amos Fox, is about to open in Buttars' new block one of the largest and finest stocks of clothing and gents' furnishing goods ever brought into Charlevoix county. George is an old resident here, in a business way, having been with Mr. Fox over fifteen years steady, and is doubtless as well acquainted with the necessities of this region as any man here. Knowing the demand, he will spare no effort necessary to supply it.

An item in his favor will be the large, light, and handsome salesroom in which to display his goods. Mr. Buttars has given this room a handsome finish inside, plate glass front, and all the conveniences of a modern salesroom. The counters, shelves, office furniture, and fixtures alone will prove an attraction to the customer, and add a richness to the display of goods not found in any other business house in the county.

With all these advantages added to Mr. Miller's thorough knowledge of the clothing business, and his appreciation of the needs of this community, it is safe to predict a successful and prosperous future for the venture. George's old friends will stick by him, and his attractive surroundings will surely make him many new ones.

Michigan's Best Advertisement.

Michigan's best advertisement lies in the truthful statement that if the states of our Union were set apart from each other, and so placed that each must depend upon her own native resources for support and development, Michigan would lead them all. We have no immense wheat fields, nor gold mines, nor mountains of iron, nor is our land extravagantly fertile. Cotton is not king, nor is corn queen. In truth we acknowledge no regality in any one product. But we have a nicely adjusted diversity of products leading to a great variety of industries, which renders us capable of maintaining a large population. We supply our own needs to a very large extent by patronizing the producers and manufacturers within our own limits, and while doing this we need not be without the luxuries of life produced at our very doors. Michigan is emphatically a state in which to build home. Independent attractive homes, in which is engendered a spirit of rest and satisfaction, that gives permanence to population and continuous prosperity to the inhabitants, and it behooves us in doing what we can for the development of the resources of our state to use such arguments as will induce people who enjoy the kind of life thus outlined to come to us and remain with us. Bonanza farming would add nothing to our prosperity. Small farms and are easily converted into delightful homes, with a view to independent life will be the foundation of Michigan's future prosperity.

Michigan has outlived the story of agne swales, barren hills and sandy plains. She shows by her products, people, and her standing among the states, that she needs no forced advertising to add to her progress. Let us frown down all attempts to deceive the people, and make them think that here we have a country where money and hard work are not necessary accompaniments to success, but rather show by statistics that a judicious expenditure of labor and capital will here lead to the acquirements of possessions that can be so arranged as to secure to the owners the greatest satisfaction of living. Chas. W. Garfield in G. R. Democrat.

The first issue of the Detroit Evening Journal, the new two cent paper, is a bright, newsy, well edited seven column folio, in some respects superior to the Evening News which will find it no mean rival for popularity. If the publishers of the Journal can incorporate as they seem likely to do the good features of the Evening News, and omit its notorious faults they will achieve a financial success.

Two years or more ago, traces of oil were discovered on Jno. Trask's place. Efforts were made to start a company to develop whether or not it was in paying quantities. On Wednesday evening Martin Weldon who has a contract for widening Beaver Dam creek, while digging discovered unmistakable traces of an oil deposit, and on gathering a quantity it was found to give a good light. That there can be no question, and it is to be hoped that a company will be formed for the development of what there is in the lands. Will some one take hold of the matter and organize a company? Roscommon Pioneer.

Commissioner Evans is making war on some of the so-called stomach bitters that are vended under the name of medicines, but which really contain a large amount of whiskey. Mr. Evans states that one brand of bitters in particular contains seventy-five per cent of good whiskey. This is certainly entitled to rank as a discovery. It is an open secret that many patent medicines sold as tonics contain whiskey, but few people ever suspected that it was good whisky, or that an assay would show it to be present in anything like paying quantities. Mr. Evans is silent as to the name of this brand of bitters, and for obvious reasons: He doesn't care to advertise the "medicine" and make it popular.

John G. Whittier, the Quaker poet, deplores, in a recent poem, the disposition of the daily press to dwell upon crimes and all unnatural occurrences. The journals publish whatever appeals to a morbid appetite, and scarcely a paper that comes into our homes but contains items of news such as no parent would care to show his children. Unfortunately, it is unusual occurrences which the public taste craves. Hence the prominence given to murders, thefts' scandals, and reports of evil deeds. Still it must be admitted that the newspapers might be much worse than they are. The proprietors and editors are generally heads of families, and much of the more reprehensible reports of vicious occurrences are modified or suppressed outright. Then the newspaper is beginning to add to its departments and furnish more serious matter. There ought to be a public sentiment which would strongly condemn such journals as make a specialty of evil news.

It would be well for us if we would heed in our domestic life the adage, "As the old cock crows, so crows the young," or according to the version of the German, "the young rooster crows so petter as the old rooster." There is very little use in trying to wipe out of our children's characters the sins which are bestowed upon them in their birth. "If you want to cure the boy of his disease," said Dr. Holmes, "you must begin with the fourth generation before the boy came into the world." "Make yourself a good man," growled Carlyle to his prime, "and you will be sure there is one rascal less in the world," and in that case, it is very easy to add, you will save the axe of the birch on your offspring. If bad children could only turn around and give their great grandfathers a good thrashing for transmitting evil qualities of character the right nail would be hit on the head.

What tells so readily the standard of a town or city, truthfully says the Chicago Tribune, as the appearance of its paper? And its youth or its age can as well be told us by a personal paragraph. The enterprise of its citizens is depicted by its advertisements, their liberality by the looks of the paper. Some papers show a good, solid, healthy foundation, plethoric purses, a well to do generally. Oth ers show a striving to contend with the grasping thousands around them, trying to wrench out an existence from the close fisted community about them. Occasional meteoric display in its columns of locals or of editorials, shows what it can do if it had the means, but it cannot continue its excessive work until support comes, which ought to readily be granted. A newspaper is like a church; it wants fostering, then it can reflect on its location. Take your home paper. It gives you more news of immediate interest than other papers. It talks for you when other localities belie you. It stands up for your rights. You always have a champion in your home paper, and those who stand up for you should certainly be well sustained. Your interests are kindred and equal and you must either rise or fall together. Therefore it is to your interest to support your home paper. Not grudgingly, but in a liberal spirit, as a pleasure. Not as a disagreeable duty, but as an investment that will amply pay the expenditure. Cheboygan Democrat.

ORIGIN OF POPULAR PHRASES.

"Pull up a Punkin and Help us Skin a Tater."—The roasted yam is intimately connected with the history of Georgian hospitality as genial and as patient as the Virginia variety. There is a legend to the effect that a stranger, wandering over the roads of Middle Georgia on a winter's night, saw a light gleaming ahead and soon heard the welcome barking of dogs. A comfortable looking cabin stood by the roadside, and this the wayfarer saluted with a "Hello," at once peremptory and plaintive. The stranger's horse was turned loose in the yard and a piggin full of corn placed at his disposal. The stranger himself was pulled into the house and implored to make himself at home. Huge logs blazed on the hearth, and upon one side, underneath a massive bow-legged andiron, was a pyramid of embers. An appetizing fragrance filled the air. Around the fire a number of rosy-cheeked, bright-eyed children were squatting. Mother, fat and contented, smoking her pipe in the corner, and an enormous cat sat by her, lazily watching the sparks as they disappeared in the black cavern of the chimney. There was not a chair to be seen, but the genial host was equal to the emergency. "Pull up a punkin, stranger, and help us skin a tater." With that she rolled a pumpkin from under the bed, the stranger seated himself as gracefully as possible, the smoking yams were drawn forth, and just such another delightful meal as that—where hospitality shared on the appetite that yearned for the savory sweets of the roasted yams—has never been chronicled. This legend has given Georgia hospitality its watchword and motto, "Come right in, stranger! Pull up a punkin an' help us skin a tater!" And it may be said here that hospitality could not more completely justify itself than by making the roasted yam the basis of its offering.

Drunk as Blazes.—This vulgar expression is a corruption of "drunk as Blaizers." Bishop Blaize is the patron saint of English woolcombers, who, at Leicester and elsewhere, celebrate his festival with marchings and great convivialities. In Sir Thomas Wyse's "Impressions of Greece," he mentions this custom and says: "Those who took part in the procession were called Blaizers, and the phrase 'as drunk as Blaizers' resulted in the convivialities common on those occasions."

Ducks and Drakes.—To make "ducks and drakes" with one's money is an allusion to a game played by boys, who take oyster shells, or flat stones, and throw them horizontally along the surface of a piece of water, in such a manner that the missiles skim along the surface, touching it many times and again emerging. The first time the stone emerges it is a duck, the second a drake; and so on, according to the old doggerel:

A duck and a drake,
And a halfpenny cake,
And a penny to pay the baker, etc.

The meaning in the case of money, is that the spendthrift metaphorically uses coin as boys use stones, to make "ducks and drakes."

"God Save the Mark."—These words are connected with an old Irish superstition. If a person, on telling the story of some hurt or injury which another has received, should illustrate his narration by touching the correspondingly part of his own or hearer's body, he averts the omen of similar injury by saying as a sort of charm the words, "God save the mark."

"One Step from the Sublime to the Ridiculous."—This saying is generally attributed to Napoleon. It is, however, to be found in the works of Thomas Paine, before Napoleon's time. Paine says: "The sublime and the ridiculous are often so nearly related that it is difficult to class them separately. One step above the sublime makes the ridiculous, and one step above the ridiculous makes the sublime again."

"Blunderbuss."—An old English name for an empty-pated fool. Woolstein, in his "Sixth Discourse on Miracles," page 50, says: "No wise man ever reprehends a blunderbuss in any other way than by laughing at him." Pope speaks of a "Blunderbuss of Law." The name seems to have been applied to the gun so called from its similarity in sound to the Dutch name for the fire-arm, donderbuss, literally, thundertube.

When Not to Build Your House.

A house was built in the early part of winter, or, rather, the walls were then put up, and the finishing done during the spring. The house was not occupied until May 1, but within a week the inmates began to sicken. The—to them—mysterious influences operating against good health prompted an inquiry at the Health Department. The inspectors found the interior wall dripping with moisture everywhere, the accumulations of which were so great at the base that it ran out upon the ground in streams. Even the floors were damp and the carpets beginning to mildew. Clothing and shoes could not be kept in closets, as they soon became coated with mold. The families at first attributed it to the "natural dampness" of a new house—as though a new house need necessarily be damp—and kept fires burning freely; but could not get relief. The owner had to bow to the inexorable demands of the law and lost his tenants. If the walls can be dried out with salmanaders, he will be permitted to fill the rooms again. In spite of all he can do, however, except to tear the walls down and build anew in warm weather, it will be absolutely impossible to make them dry and the building fit to live in for years. The sun may dry out the south walls, but those on the other sides of the building will not readily be penetrated by heat from within.—Chicago Sanitary News.

News Brevities.

School begins Sept. 17.

The work on the harbor is now completed so far as ordered.

A Petoskey man recently addressed a letter to "Charleyvoyx."

An addition of 150 volumes is soon to be made to the Charlevoix township library.

Remember the lecture of A. J. Blackford at the opera house Saturday evening.

T. D. Smith received a lot of water melons last Saturday, but they did not last long.

The keel of a new schooner for Capt. Tullock has been laid at Winsch-man's shipyard.

Dr. Graves' big Newfoundland dog died Monday, to all appearances having been poisoned.

The Pine Lake Iron Co. have changed the name of the steam barge purchased to the "John Otis."

We add another correspondent to our "aromad the county" this week, from Bay Springs. We have been promised letters from Boyne and East Jordan but so far they fail to come.

Last Monday we received some fine samples of apples from the orchard of W. Watson, of Evangeline township.

One of the best advertisements ever circulated for Charlevoix is a set of those fine photographic views on sale at Dr. Crouters.

Postal notes for any amount up to $4.99 at a cost of three cents, may now be purchased at any money order postoffice.

The first work of L. E. Allen's new pile driver will be to drive a forty foot dock for Joseph Hyland for the new boiler works.

Our neighbors have added a new job press and thirty fonts of type to their jobbing material, and now claim the best printing outfit north of Traverse City.

The terms of court for Charlevoix county are appointed by Judge Ramsdell as follows: On the third Tuesday of November, and the fourth Tuesdays of February and May.

An old-fashioned tea-meeting will be held at the M. E. church next Tuesday evening, at which time the "quilt," with contributors' names on it, will be on exhibition and disposed of. All are cordially invited to be present.

The sixth annual fair of the Grand Traverse county agricultural society will be held at Traverse City, Sept. 18 to 21. Copies of the premium list, or any information desired, may be obtained by addressing H. E. Steward, secretary, Traverse City, Mich.

We have received the annual report of the secretary of the Michigan state board of health for 1882. It is a volume of over 600 pages, and contains many papers on health subjects, as well as statistics relative to the prevalence of disease in Michigan.

Our neighbor, the Sentinel, came out last week enlarged to seven columns to the page, and with various other improvements. With the senior editor's resources, and acquaintance in this region, the paper will be what it deserves to be.—the largest and best newspaper in the county.

Detroit is to have a new two-cent evening daily to be called the Evening Journal. Lloyd Breeze, late of the Free Press, to be editor, and C. C. F. Van Anden is doing earnest and thorough work, and the society's success is his reward. They show their appreciation of his work by unanimously voting to invite him to remain as their pastor.

Mr. Albert Jennings, formerly an attorney of Grand Rapids, later a resident of Grand Forks, Dak., but now a land broker at Traverse City says: "Dakota is a good place to make money if one has capital. Farming is the best business to engage in with limited capital. The winters are very long, cold and snowy. But I don't think Dakota will compare with northern Michigan as a desirable place of residence. The land here is generally of a light cast and admirable for fruit culture and general farming. The climate is delightful and healthy. A great deal of money is being made in speculation and the transfer of lands is common. There is a tendency to buy up and hold hardwood lands, but mills for cutting hardwood timber are multiplying. The northern part of this state is fast being settled up, principally from Ohio and Indiana. The latter state furnishes, by far, the most of the immigration, which is probably due to the influence of the G. R. & I. railroad."

The schooner Yankee Blade, which delivered a cargo of brick at Ironton last week, went from there to St. Ignace and loaded with ore for Dexter & Noble, Elk Rapids. It is reported that she sprung aleak eight miles south of Skillagalee light house while the crew were at breakfast about eight o'clock Saturday morning, and went down in fifteen minutes with five hundred and sixty tons of iron ore. The crew had barely time to save their clothes and spring into the yawl, being only four or five rods away when she gave a sudden lurch and went down head first. As she sank a singular phenomenon occured. The stern rose up as the bow descended, and suddenly blew up with a report like the discharge of a cannon, scattering fragments in every direction. It is supposed that the explosion was caused by the sudden expression of air in the cabin and hold as the schooner sank. The crew made Cross Village with considerable difficulty and came to Harbor Springs on the Grand Rapids, when they took the Champlain for Chicago. It has been stated that while she was here two seamen deserted her, alleging that she was unseaworthy, and with heavy freight was likely to sink at any time. The report of the sinking would seem to confirm the story of the seamen.

Shipments.

The following are the clearances from the port of Charlevoix as reported from the custom house for the week ending Tuesday, September 4th:

26—Schr. Charlotte Rath, 180,000 hardwood lumber, Sheboygan Mfg. Co. to Sheboygan, Wis.

31—Schr. City of Cheboygan, 8,000 cedar posts, W. T. Addis to Chicago.

1—Schr. Bertha Marshall, 70 cords wood, 130 cords bark, Empey & Co. to Chicago.

1—Schr. John Ilsley, 170,000 hardwood lumber, E. J. Meech to Chicago.

CHENOA, Dec. 26, 1882.

To whom it may concern: Among the many colored troupes of singers who have sung in this place, there are none of them can compare with the Original Nashville Students, who sang here last night. They far excel Dauvain's troupe in many points, and and should they return again to us, we bespeak them a hearty welcome. We commend them to a generous public. Very respectfully,

E. M. PIKE,
Red Ribbon Club.

Real Estate Transfers.

Reported for the Journal by Upright Emrey, real estate dealers.

The following is a list of transfers of real estate in Charlevoix county, where the consideration is $100 or over, for the week ending Tuesday evening, Sept. 4, 1883, as recorded in the office of register of deeds:

Ellen A. Eaton to Elisha S. Hawks, lot 8, blk 17, Charlevoix, $ 80.

John Derr to Lucena Green, lot 113, blk F, South Bayne, $100.

James E. Bell and wife to Edward C. Green, n e ¼ of s e ¼, 3-32-7, $300.

Hannah L. Bell to Lucena Green, lot 112, blk F, South Bayne, $100.

Andrew A. Newland to Lucius M. Newland, s w ¼ of s w ¼, 1-32-5, $200.

Chloe Hodge to Leroy Babcock, s w ¼ of s e ¼, 5-33-5, $200.

Geo. R. Palmer and wife to Wm. H. Comben, 17 acres, 32-33-6, $1,200.

Isaac Stouffer and wife to Lee Kelley, e ½ of s w ¼, 30-34-6, $1,200.

Henry H. Higgins and wife to A. E. Smith, 16 acres, sec. 9, Melrose, $200.

John Fritz and wife to Otis Megullan, e ½ of s w ¼, 23-33-7, $400.

C. D. Watterson and wife to J. Milo Eaton, lot 19, blk 14, Charlevoix, $200.

J. A. Bennett and wife to Carl Schaunk & Grier, 10 6 ¼ of s e ¼, 19-33-7, $100.

R. S. Hubbard and wife to Mrs. M. Paxton, s e ¼ of s e ¼ and s ½ of s w ¼, 32-33-7, $1,200.

The above list shows renewed activity in real estate, and largely increased sales with higher average prices per transaction than reported last week. It must be understood that this list covers the whole county, and is intended as an official report of the entire business of the county above the limit of $100, as recorded in the register's office. It is a fair index of the value of property in this county, and where there is the most activity in transfers.

MY NEIGHBORS' DOGS.

BY EUGENE J. HALL.

I have a fine suburban home,
A handsome house and lot,
With splendid shrubbery and lawn,
With thrifty garden-plot,
That those who pass oft cause to see,
And tell me to my face
How very much they envy me
In having such a place.

It has no beauty to my sight,
No charms or power I ween;
I find no pleasure, day or night,
No scenery, rest, or ease.
I view with joy at early morn,
Like one who quits a jail,
Unanswered walk with soul forlorn,
And mind oppressed with gloom.

I hear no music in the air,
No sound that makes me glad;
I find no recreation there,
My heart is always sad.
I live in turmoil all the time,
My neighbors' dogs defying
To bark, to growl, to yelp and howl
The livelong day and night.

My sweet young wife has fretful grown;
To sleep, in vain she tries;
She moans, she turns from side to side;
The baby wakes and cries.
There's no 1 blanket or a sonte
I find the place to lay;
For every loose thing I have thrown
To drive the curs away.

They chose my costly chicken-down—
They kill them one by one;
They loudly howl about the town—
The dogs—a fiendish crew.
They snap and snarl and quarrel, too;
They send our peace a sad regret;
My little cushion cannot wait
With satety on the street.

They mostly crowl beneath my fence;
They come in my premises, say;
They have a right as well as sense
To drive the cows away.
Say, it a neighbor I regret
To keep his dog confined;
He calls me unfeeling names,
In manner most unkind.

Ah, well! the end is from all this so
But one escape I'll try—
To sell my place in haste and go—
I may soon well buy.
Dear land, I think I see gratefully
That, worse luck, not the city.
My neighbors pass the county gates,
Their dogs at last—adieu!

BUDELL'S PROPOSAL.

This time two years ago our Square Club was flourishing, now I am sole member. Budell, Marby, Smithers and myself had formed ourselves into a private bachelors' club, for the purpose of which and other intellectual occupations, and a very good time we contrived to have together. We hadn't many rules and bye-laws for our club. We were sworn bachelors and each of us had to allege a reason why he did not intend to wed; but we had so far recognized the possibility of a change in our sentiments as to solemnly bind ourselves to inform the club at once if we should ever see in it a "unifying our pleasures and dooming our expenses." Smithers said he had a chance to marry; I was too poor, and Marby, who was regarded as our romantic member, gave us indefinite to understand that "blighted affections" existed between him and Fa Lem. Jones. Budell at first laughed at the idea of assigning a reason, and he used to allege that he hadn't met Miss Perfection yet. He was unanimously voted off by the rest of the club, when in a moment of vision our necessities as an "ornamental bachelor" dawned upon him. Smithers and I were afraid of ladies. We were willing to stretch a point in favor of Budell, who was one of the pollest possible fellows at a bachelor dinner, and so we received this secret season. For the rest we mildly resolved not to fly, but to withstand temptation. We intended it was that every lady is charming so is to as one is not married to her, and we were all ready to contemplate society, and even sustain the position of "one of the dancing men." We used to relate to each other over our cobbler pipes some dreiful stories (I suppose many of them guilteful women every season; but it those were all as object, not upon the narrator's fancy for fiction support at details as my contribution to the conversation, the evenings were somewhat more than hackneyedly. Budell was especially fond of society; he was one of those rare phenomena, young barristers without practice, and he had to make very considerable allowance in our kitties. Like the rest of the club, I had taken as a joke his assertion that he was afraid of ladies; but I gradually came to think there was some truth in it. So long as Budell was in a large company—on a ball-room or any place like that—he was quite at his ease and as bold as a lion; but if by any chance he happened to fall a temporary captive to a solitary damsel's bow and spear he was almost overwhelmed with nervousness, and his usual powers of conversation completely deserted him. I escorted him to the Royal Academy, escorting a very pretty young lady, and looking as uneasy as if he had a worse conscience than King Herod; and I have seen his trouble on a mere passing mention of the conservatory by his partner at a dance. However, in the Square Club he was our most enthusiastic member, and I, more and indignation filled our souls when we realized the direful fact that Budell was in love and dying to get married. That we knew anyone might pollad by have seen symptoms of the calamity made out of our own only oblique and shadowed hints. Now as I look back over those months I recall incidents that were a loud warning. The gradual decay of Budell's lolarity at the club and the gradual increase of his evenings in the society could hardly, indeed, have two portents, for Budell always did go into society more than the rest of us. The first allusion that he made to me about the lady who was afterward to play Beatrice to his Benedict was at a concert—or rather in a choir—seen after a concert. "That's what I call a pretty girl," he whispered to me, "that dark-eyed girl over there in the warm, deep brown shawl—none of your flimsy white opera cloaks." The girl was pretty in a fresh, pagnant sort of way; and even a sworn bachelor might have been excused for being pleased at receiving such a frank smile as she greeted Budell with. Again, not many days after he remarked to me apropos des ladies: "Met rather an interesting girl last night; quite agrees with me on the subject of names." I may be excused for neglecting this hint; Budell I think would have found a mollusc "interesting" if it had only agreed with him that there was nothing more objectionable than to have one's name murdered. He was nervously anxious that his name should be pronounced with the accent on the second syllable; and I afterward found that he had been introduced for the second time, to this "interesting girl" as "Bosdlle." "Just as though I rhymed to noodle"—as he indignantly expressed it. But the most important hint was given the night after Mrs. Burton's ball, at which we had all been present. We were lounging in Budell's rooms, and Smithers was giving us a highly-colored and graphic illustration of the frivolity that passes for conversation between young men and maidens. "That's all nonsense," broke in Budell; "it's your own fault at any rate. Why, last night I had quite a serious and interesting conversation about woman's education, with a woman." I even quoted Scripture to her."

"Bet you'n that you mis-potted," said the irreverent Smithers, who thought every one was as ignorant as himself.

"No, I'm not joking; it's a fact, and I got an idea or two, let me tell you." Had he only told us that he had ventured into the conversation in order to carry on his conversation without interruption, I am convinced that I, at least, would have surmised that the acquisition of an idea or two was not the only result. However, I was not long in my state of ignorance. One day, a month or so after, Budell hunted me up to confide to me that the bachelor's club was all lonely; he was over head and ears in love, and did I think he ought to tell the other men? Then there followed a shower of apologetics in which "soft brown eyes" and gentleness knows what other personal attributes were prominent. When I recovered breath I assured him that I thought it was quite incumbent upon him to inform the club. I was rigid and cold with him, for I felt indignant; it was almost an insult to confide to me his confidant, as though my celibate principles were less fixed than Marby's or Smithers'.

His announcement that evening was received in silence by the Square Club; even Smithers had at first nothing to say. At last Marby asked:

"Is it permitted to inquire the lady's name, and when the marriage is to take place?" Budell looked immensely relieved.

"Well, the fact is, he said, "I thought I ought to tell the club at once; but I haven't—that is, I don't quite know how to set about asking the lady."

Budell looked so comically distressed in his confusion that a roar went round the club hailed it with a shout of laughter. The notion of the bold and confident Budell finding himself muzzled by the tender passion was too suggestive for our risibility. Budell was seriously annoyed. "I don't think," he said, "that I deserve to be laughed at because I am in love." Then we all became grave with courtesy." He glared at me as if I especially had been guilty of revealing his confidence. We apologized humbly, and at last pacified him. He really was puzzled as to how to accomplish his proposal. Marby suggested the old-fashioned plan of plumping down on his knees, like a swain in a valentine; but Budell jibed visibly. It was such a real-blooded way, from a practical point of view, but it appeared he had almost adopted it on two occasions. The first time a little bottle of a brother had inopportunely appeared, and the second a police girl that hadn't a brute of a brother," exclaimed Budell, hastily ejaculating, and not for the second time in society; he was out of these rare phenomena, young barristers without practice, and he had to make very considerable allowance in our kitties. opinions as to the preference between blondes and brunettes, large mantes and small cars, etc. "Whether do you prefer Christian names for your ladies?" he once asked me. I answered at random that I liked them both equally. "No, but really," he persisted. "I mean modern names derived from these languages." "Well," I replied at a venture, "I like Saxon names." "Do you," he exclaimed; "why, so do I. For example, I don't think you could find a prettier name than Edith anywhere." "Oho!" I cried, "her name is Edith, is it?" Budell blushed, but couldn't deny it, and I dare say he would have revealed her surname also had I pressed him.

August brought me an invitation from Will Carlton to spend a fortnight at his father's place in Scotland, and knee a shot at the grouse. I've asked Marby, Smithers and Budell," he wrote, "and I expect them all. I know you four lucky frightful chains-and-slavery notions about matrimony; but there are lots of nice girls staying here with Fanny, and if you don't all go home with the full intention of getting betrothed to coming Benefices I shall be surprised. Anyhow, we have plenty of birds."

When I arrived I found the house full of pleasant men and agreeable girls; while the grouse gave very fair sport. The club was there in full force, Budell was in tolerable spirits, and came out in grand style as master of the ceremonies, and as the originator of all sorts of amusements. He was too busy to indict any more confidences, but I had no reason to suppose that he had yet accomplished his purpose.

One afternoon a heavy rain-storm had driven the sportsmen in sooner than usual; I was examining my breech-loader in the gun-room when Smithers mysteriously requested me to come to the smoking-room at once. There I found Budell and Marby. Smithers had convened the club, and we had the room to ourselves. He briefly explained his object. "I have an announcement to make," he said, "similar to one made by Budell not long since. I'm going to follow his example, and I hereby invite you all to be the wedding. Like Budell, I haven't yet put the final question, but I am not afraid of the answer. I have no objection to tell you that the young lady is at present in the house, and that her name is Miss Maxwell."

"Good heavens!" ejaculated Budell. "Well," said Marby, "I may as well take this opportunity of informing the club that I, too, am going to follow suit. Only I've taken the precaution to speak to the lady first, and Fanny Carlton is shortly going to become Mrs. Marby."

I was thunderstruck. "In that case," I said, with dignity, as I strode from the room, "I am the only member of the Square Club."

But as I was tying my necktie a few minutes before dinner, and reflecting that, through nervousness, want of leisure and other causes, the bachelors might be got over, I, at least, had a reason that would preserve me from matrimony. Budell turned pale when I told him, and was positively horrified when I told Marby, Smithers and Budell,

THE JOURNAL.

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

Around the County.

Bay Springs.

The six months term of school has just closed.

The harvest, which is splendid, is nearly finished. Everybody busy as nuts.

James P. Biggs, the popular milkman, is erecting a new house, with a stone foundation and cellar.

William Hayward and Louis Jeffords have purchased the new threshing machine lately owned Thos. Weir, and are ready for any amount of "straw whistling."

The three mills of this place are turning out a great quantity of hard and soft-wood lumber, besides a large amount in shape for the manufacture of furniture of various kinds, the supply of logs being received over Mr. Addis' narrow-gauge railway.

Mr. Chapman's new hotel is growing rapidly, workmen being now engaged on the roof. Its dimensions exceed any other build ng at the head of Pine lake.

In addition to the improvements about the hotel, Mr. Chapman has cleared nearly 160 acres in this vicinity. FRANK.

Springvale.

Harvest still lingers. It is two weeks later than last year.

"Wood chucks and raccoons, or some other varmints," are making it lively for the farmers in their cornfields, destroying the crops as completely as a drove of hogs.

E. M. D. Homan, from southern Michigan, has arrived, expecting to locate somewhere in this vicinity. His wife has been here several months.

The teacher in district No. 2 is liable to get "chew-ed." Somebody had better not undertake to bite, for if they should they would get a most bitter chew.

Mr. S. Bright, from near Sydney, Ohio, is stopping with S. B. Thatcher. He is a hay fever patient, and visits this country every year for relief.

Now that the school meetings are over, it behooves the director to keep the eye "peeled" for a "school-marm" for the winter term of school.

A number of our farmers are clearing ground for fall crops. Most of them intend putting out winter wheat in good season this year.

There was a young folks' party at the residence of James Miller, Sept. 3d, in honor of their daughter's birthday.

Mr. Fuller, a resident of Charlevoix, has been through this township the past week selling fanning mills.

Mr. Wm. Adams now holds the "ribbons" over as nice a team of horses as ever traveled.

S. B. Thatcher and Wm. Adams go out with their threshing machine this week.

The way the sheriff took a man out of this locality a few days ago gives an impression that the laws are to be enforced. We did not learn the cause of his arrest. JACQUES.

Business at East Jordan.

From the last Enterprise we clip the following items of interest:

The Pine Lake Mill Co. will soon erect another mill at Dwight's landing....Stoepel, Martin & Co. shipped 500,000 lath last week, on the propeller Oconto.....P. Lewenberg's store has been enlarged recently, an account of his rapidly growing trade.....The frame for the Presbyterian church is up, and work is being pushed forward by Messrs. Greenwood & Rogers.....Dan Munro has charge of the pile driver, and is at present driving piles for the enlargement of Munro's dock, at South Arm.....The humane on Munro's pile driver struck a pile and drove it down so far that the hammer went into the lake and had to be fished out of eighteen feet of water and mud.....On Tuesday last we crossed the river and called on S. G. Isaman, and while there we were shown a limb on a pine tree, eighteen inches in length and less than half an inch in diameter, upon which were over one hundred pimus.....Messrs. O. A. Fraser, G. A. Starkweather, and M. Connor, of Plymouth, Wayne county, Mich., were in town several days, accompanied by their ladies, looking up a location for a bank. They were well pleased with our town and surrounding country, and think there is a probability of their return ing and locating with us.....The ground has been broken for the new machine shop, foundry, and sash, door, and blind factory at this place. Two of the firm, Messrs. Malpass and D. T. Mause, are getting material on the ground for the new building. They inform us that everything will be ready to run in sixty days. Late advices from Mr. H. Mitchell, machinist, say that he will ship the machinery from Port Huron by September 1st.

The editor of the Vermontville (Eaton county) Hawk has been rusticating in northern Michigan this summer, and among other things writes the following concerning one of the large manufacturing establishments of Charlevoix county. Stoepel, Martin & Co.'s mill, at East Jordan:

This is one of the fastest-cutting mills in the state, and it takes about thirty-five men to keep it moving. As we have heard so much about "steam feed," we will try and convey to our readers some idea of it. It doesn't mean that horse feed is here made by steam. It doesn't mean that people eat by steam. Nor does it mean that the carriage is manipulated by belts and friction pulleys. It means that the saw carriage is literally moved back and forth by steam. The mill stands east and west, the saw cutting toward the east. To the west of the carriage, on the floor, and extending under the carriage, is a steam cylinder 48 feet long, with a piston inside of the same length, protruding from the east end of the cylinder. This end of the piston is fastened to the carriage. The head sawyer's position is to the south and west; he manipulates the lever, which is no more nor less than the lever of a throttle in the hands of an engineer. If it be a small log he moves it fast accordingly; if a large one he is more cautious, but it moves back and forth, never ceasing. Three men are on the carriage, — one to set, one to dog; it takes them exactly two seconds to put on a log and dog it. It took them just two and one third minutes to saw a 450 foot pine log into inch boards. The exhaust from the steam feed corresponds to the speed of a walking beam to a common side-wheel steamer. The average day's work of the mill is fifty thousand feet one saw. The saw-dust is carried to the arch by buckets on an endless chain, and about all the fireman does is to watch. Four double flue boilers furnish the steam, and they drive a hundred horse power engine. There is no change in the motion, and the engine rolls an eleven hours each day, Sundays excepted, stopping only for dinner and to change saws four times a day. This mill is built twenty rods north of the mouth of South Arm, a half mile from the mouth of Jordan river, and stands on piles over twelve feet of water. Two or three acres of made dock suffices for all the practical purposes, and this connects with the hard land by a splendid sawdust road.

Advantages of Charlevoix.

A late number of the Kalamazoo Telegraph has the following concerning the beauties and advantages of Charlevoix:

Charlevoix has the superb advantage of lake breezes from both ways and with the winds which commonly prevail in a Michigan summer has the advantage of them all. Its landscape surroundings are those of an inland lake, one of the prettiest sheets in the west, and in this respect it could scarcely be improved.

With these advantages understood, it is still a matter of wonder that so large a business of this kind should have been built up in the short period since the offering of inducements was first commenced. The railroad company have pursued a liberal and far-sighted policy in helping the several associations to get on their feet. It has come to be an enormous item for the passenger department of the line. It is already the most valuable specialty of the Grand Rapids & Indiana road, although the business is still in its infancy.

It is worthily a subject of pride that the chance of location was so happily made. The Charlevoix resort gets waterborness both ways. It has the inside and outside lakes. It fronts one way on the busy harbor, a beautiful sporting ground for small boats; and the other, up Pine lake, extending away 16 miles in an ever changing landscape of hill and valley and woods and clearing. It resembles the lakes of central New York.

The place is not so conveniently accessible as some, but will naturally have railroad connections of its own not long hence. It is reached by four ways now, and one of them, the bay trip from Traverse City will always be a favorite, however much more direct a railroad line may do. The boating privileges of the Charlevoix resort could not be surpassed. There are two long lines of boat houses, many of them having elegant boat.

$100 REWARD

Is offered for any case of Catarrh that can't be cured with Hall's Catarrh Cure. Taken internally. Price 75 cents. Sold by Dr. Crouter.

It has been said that "straws tell which way the wind blows." It is a positive fact that to-day there are more democratic papers starting in the state of Michigan, than has been thought of in the past twenty years, and they are being liberally supported too. This is no bad omen for the future success of the democratic party in the state. It shows conclusively that the masses are getting awake, and beginning to realize a sense of their situation, that they want a change of administration, and are bound to have it. Our republican exchanges are now offering premiums to increase their circulation, such as the "Texas Siftings," "Peck's Sun," etc., in fact, anything to bolster up their decaying carcasses. The party is on the downward road, and they no longer put their hands into their pockets and draw forth rolls of greenbacks, in order to keep their party organs ageing, and many of the papers are getting very thin, and ere long they must succumb, and new live democratic papers will be taking their places. Hundreds of these little republican sheets throughout the state, who have heretofore lived out of the state printing will soon be singing that good old song: "We would not live always; we ask not to stay."—St Ignace Free Press.

Now is the time your horses and cattle need attention. To prevent disease and tone up the system you will find Parmelee's Vegetable Pain Destroyer unexcelled. Full pound 25 cents. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co. 9

"I'm glad Billy had the sense to marry a settled old maid," said grandma Winkum at the wedding. "Stats is hity-ility, and widders is kinder ovvervilin' an' upsettin'. Old maids is kinder thankful an' willin' to please.

The Bay City Press says there is a place in that valley where ten per cent a month is the rate of interest adopted, and others where they feel that they have done well by humanity if they take the principal and interest and let the party off with his life.

Almost Marvelous.

The way Parmelee's Blood Purifier works upon the human system. It is such a thorough purifier, it strikes at the root of the disease and by its perfect workings effects a cure almost before the patient is aware. It seizes upon every particle of poisonous matter in the system, expels it and instills new health and vigor through the entire body. $1.00 per bottle. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co. 9

H. W. Slagg, besides making a present to West Bay City of a library building which will cost $20,000 when completed, has purchased for the library 8,000 books at a cost of $12,000. He also proposes to invest in the city the block on which the library stands, which is worth $12,000 to $15,000. His whole gift will aggregate from $30,000 to $40,000.

Quick Relief.

Hamilton's Jamaica Ginger Tonic and Pain Cure is not only a valuable internal remedy for all stomach and bowel difficulties, such as Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Heartburn, Flatulence, Diarrhea, Dysentery, Cramps, and Colic, but cannot be excelled for an outward application in Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Sciatica, Sprains, Side and backache, and Strains in any part of the body. Used freely with warmth and rubbing it gives quick relief. Price 25 and 50 cents per bottle. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co. 9

The South Carolina moonshiners have struck a new lead. A reward of $50 is paid by the government for the destruction of illicit stills, and it has become a profitable industry among the "crooks" to erect a cheap distillery in some remote locality and afterward make a raid upon and destroy the same, receiving the government reward. Verily, there are many ways of turning an honest penny.

Medicine for Children

Must not only be effective but so compounded that no harm will result from the use. Such a preparation for worms (to which almost every child is subject) is Parmelee's Vermifuge or Worm Candies, which are made from the best drugs, particularly adapted to this use. They work quickly, surely, and harmlessly, passing off the worms after they are dissolved. Do not neglect the children, even though they do not complain. Worms are almost always present. Price 25 cents per box. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co. 9

The recent volcanic disturbances at Java and adjacent islands constitute one of the most serious disasters of this year of horrors. The full extent of the calamity is not yet known, but in the nature of things the loss of life must be heavy, as the region devastated was for the most part thickly populated. Some estimates place the loss of life as high as 75,000. New islands have arisen where the sea rolled before, and other islands have disappeared here all the way from the Straits of Sunda to Anjer, which could thus change the topography of the entire region last indeed have been remarkable.

One of the Many Prevailed.

E. M. PARMELEE; Dear Sir,—I have been taking your dyspepsia, diabetes, kidney and liver cure for some time past, and have received great benefit from it. I am now on my fifth bottle and feel as well as ever I did in my life. I have used worth of doctor's medicines that I have used in the last few years. Before taking the cure I was weak and tired all the time, but now I can work all day without fatigue. Would not be without it in the house. Believe it is one of the best medicines in the world. Yours,

ROBERT A. LOUDERSLAGE, Jr.

John W. Mackey, the California millionaire, has taken the presidency of the postal telegraph company, and announces that the work of extending the lines will be pushed forward as rapidly as possible. He says that the program heretofore announced will be adhered to, and that telegraph rates will be put down to hard-pan. It is possible that these promises mean something, and that an era of cheap telegraphy is near at hand; but the public will do well to await developments, and not place too much reliance on pledges in advance of their fulfillment. With the Western Union making $7,500,000 net annually on a capital invested of about $30,000,000, it is high time for competition and a reduction of rates.

He put his arm around my waist
And oh, and looked sly, very slyly;
And yet, at being thus embraced,
I did not frown—the air was chilly.

He rubs the hand and bent his chin
Most reverently low to kiss it;
One little kiss—it was no sin—
To tell the truth, I did not miss it.

Then, as I turned my face toward his,
One kiss were near—none to forbid it—
Somebody kissed! The trouble is,
I don't exactly know who did it.

Pear Growing.

Northwest Farmer.

Col. D. S. Curtess, in the National Farmer, says: The veteran pomologist, Col. M. P. Wilder, once remarked that "Pear-growers can scarcely go amiss or too far in the use of ashes, charcoal, lime and salt about the roots of their trees to produce healthy trees and sound fruit."

At a discussion on this topic some time ago, by the Pennsylvania pomological society, it was maintained that if cultivation was given at all to pear trees, it was bad policy to do it by plowing near the trees, but that the ground should be dug or stirred by pronged hoes or spades. It was also urged in the same discussion that no stimulating growth should be made which produced soft, unripe wood late in the season, too late to become hard and mature before frost comes, as such wood was subject to speedy injury from frost, and thereby likely to bring on blight or other disease to the unripe wood.

Low branch pruning was also earnestly recommended as beneficial, tending to healthy trees and better fruit. That is, in pruning, limbs should be cut low down to the body of the tree, to shade both the trunk and the ground from cold winds and hot sun rays, which injure the roots.

And to unite this shading more perfect, mulching the earth for several feet around the trees is found to serve a very good purpose, preserving both moisture and coolness to the roots during the heat of summer, which is highly beneficial to the health of fruit trees, as the heat and drouth of summer tend to kill trees and fruit, tending to blight and other disease.

Wm. Saunders, S. Mahan and Peaslee Morris, all good authority in this matter, concurred in the above views of the society.

As to the distance which pear trees should stand from each other, so much depends upon several circumstances that no specific rule or distance can be recommended. It is enough to say that standard trees require and occupy more room than dwarfs. One thing is certain, that trees are more frequently confined to too small space rather than too much; it is well to give liberal room, where land is plenty, that the air and light may freely circulate among them. No doubt you have noticed that very generally the outside trees of an orchard are more healthy and vigorous, producing fairer, larger specimens of fruit than the trees of the same variety in the middle of the orchard. It is believed that an orchard of fewer trees, at ample distances, will excel four, and afford more profit, one year with another, than a larger number of trees in smaller space, at shorter distances from each other.

Then let the pruning be low down, with short or chipped heads, so that the fruit can be more easily and safely gathered than from taller trees with higher heads.

It is conceded by most growers that the best aspects for pear trees are northern slopes, where they will be less liable to the direct hot rays of the sun at any time of the year, especially in winter and early spring, as it is well known that the direct rays of the sun on the frozen trees are a most frequent source of destruction or injury to the trees; sudden change from extreme cold, or frosty state, to that of hot sun, is far more severe upon trees than hardest freezing in mid-winter, or the hottest sun of midsummer.

Another consideration of decided importance is, protection against early sprouting of the fruit buds in spring; often during warm, mild weather in the latter part of March and early April, the fruit buds will begin to put forth and get forward enough so that the cold, rough blasts, later in the month, destroy the buds and prevent fruiting. Now trees occupying northern slopes get less direct sun heat; and the buds are slower putting forth, and consequently are less liable to be destroyed by the April blasts of cold winds. Shelter from severe prevailing wind is also desirable.

Taxation.

In discussing the tariff question it should be borne in mind that the tariff is merely a system of taxation. A tariff like our own, is a tax levied upon thousands of articles in common and constant use by the people. Necessarily it increases the cost of living. Furthermore, it is taxation for two purposes. One purpose is to obtain money to support the government; to obtain money for star-route thieves, and to pay the unnecessary costs of their prosecution; and the other purpose is to benefit private interests. Taxation is of two kinds—direct and indirect—or internal taxation and tariff taxation. All internal taxes, less the cost of collection, go into the treasury. This is taxation for revenue entirely. Of tariff taxes not over one third go to the government. The object sought to be gained is to give a few persons engaged in certain kinds of business. The one third is for revenue, the two-thirds is for protection. Now all taxes are a burden to the productive labor of a country. Taxes to support government are a necessary burden, while taxes to benefit private business interests are an unnecessary burden. And tariff taxes are a heavier burden than internal taxes, for the reason that the former are levied in part for the benefit of private interests, while the latter are levied solely for the benefit of the government. Tariff taxes by a treble burden upon the people.—Detroit.

Jay Gould has been, it is said, for two years trying to work up a sentiment in this country in favor of a government telegraph. His plan is said to be to give the government the Western Union system upon a basis of annual payments to stock-holders of the surplus earnings for a period of 20 years. It was on a plan of this kind that the British government purchased its telegraph lines. The net earnings of the Western Union telegraph company are said to be about $7,500,000, so if Gould should secure his lobby and carry the scheme through, the W. U. stockholders would get $150,000,000 for a telegraph system which has been constructed for about $20,000,000.

This is the kind of a horn protectionists and protection journals tout. Protection enables manufacturers to get higher prices for their goods and consequently enables them to pay higher wages. But when employees ask for an advance in wages on account of this protection they are coolly told if wages are advanced the increase will be absorbed by the increased price of products. And yet we are told, and laboring men are made to believe it, that protection is the laboring man's bonanza.—Elk Rapids Progress.

Airing Rooms.

Northwest Farmer.

Airing rooms is sometimes carried to excess. We have been sent to sleep in a room destitute of stove or fireplace, and found the windows open, with the mercury at the freezing point. It was as cold in the rooms as "all out doors." We might just as well have undressed out in the yard, as far as comfort was concerned. The good housewife, in her zeal to benefit our health with an abundance of fresh air, had taken effectual means to spoil our temper.

Most people are more or less afflicted with a predilection for hobbies. The writer remembers an amusing instance, that fell under his observation, in which the hobby of a well informed and intelligent young man was ventilation. A woman taken suddenly sick at the wash tub, had fallen down in a helpless and apparently unconscious condition. We advised that she be immediately taken home. A sleigh was procured, for it was winter, and the young man lent his assistance. The sick woman's house was an unfinished, cheap structure, with numerous cracks and crevices in the wall, through which the wind found easy entrance. The difficulty was to make the rooms close enough for comfort and safety to health. As we were about to retire, after we had seen the woman made comfortable and had given directions for treatment, the young man astonished us with the question confidentially asked, "Doctor, did you tell them about ventilation?" The question was not ironical, in view of the open condition of the house, but was asked in grave earnestness. The young man had got his head so full of the notion of fresh air as the one indispensable good that he could see no good in anything else. Had he been a woman and a housekeeper, the inmates of his home would probably have been aired till they would have been led to regard a warm sleeping room as a type of heaven.

Ventilation is necessary, but ventilation without judgment is not an unmixed good. Such is the faulty construction of most of our dwellings that the best thing a woman can do is to open the windows of the sleeping rooms every day, even in winter, and let the fresh air blow in, but she should not forget to close them again. She should not forget that warmth is as necessary to health as fresh air. Sleeping in an atmosphere very much colder than that in which we live during the day, is not conducive to health. Going from a warm, cozy sitting room, where the mercury stands at sixty or seventy degrees, to a bedroom where the temperature is at the freezing point, undressing in the chill atmosphere, and tumbling into a frozen bed draws heavily on the vitality of the system and shortens life.

The Ontonagon Miner says: It is a shame the way the bird's eye maple is being destroyed in this country; and because we have no mills that make a business of manufacturing that kind of lumber. This timber if put into market in the shapes of plank, would sell at from $80 to $160 per thousand feet. We confidently believe that there is more to be made in manufacturing hard wood lumber, than there is in pine.

An exchange sarcastically remarks: "Only a few more weeks of toil and the farmer will hang his hoe in a sapling and throw his plow in a fence corner. The crop will be worked and the tools will not be touched until the next season. Then a new mortgage can be given to buy tools to take the place of those rotted through neglect."

THE JOURNAL.

The Frost.

Last Sunday and Monday mornings a severe frost did much damage to crops throughout the northwestern states. The following paragraphs from the Detroit Evening Journal of last Monday will show something of the extent and severity of the damage:

At the Chamber of Commerce New York, Monday, baskets of telegrams were received concerning the effects of the frost in the northwest on Saturday and Sunday nights. The reports caused the greatest excitement among the traders. The latest advices may thus be summarized: Minnesota and Michigan corn crops ruined; Wisconsin tobacco and cranberry crops ruined; Kentucky and Tennessee, heavy frosts, much damage. Corn is rising on the strength of these reports, but the loss to farmers will be immense.

In many places near St. Joseph, Mich., the corn was killed, and tomatoes largely cut. One man lost $700 worth of melons. The ground was frozen solid at Ewin Springs. The grapes are slightly injured.

At Orion were heavy frosts Saturday and Sunday nights, doing very much damage to the corn, cloverseed, buckwheat and garden vegetables. The corn was just in roasting ears, and will be almost a total failure.

Gillet & Hall, of Detroit, have received advices from Jackson, Lansing, and Charlotte, and northern Indiana, which indicate that corn and cloverseed are badly injured. Corn has advanced 4@5c since fears of frost were first felt, and went up 12c Monday.

P. T. D. Dewy, of Owosso, and C. Young, of Concord, say the frost was very severe, and materially injured crops at their places Saturday night, and at Owosso the farmers are cutting their corn and setting it up in shocks, as it will mature better that way.

John. H. Wendell of Detroit, says the corn crop of Michigan is a small factor in the corn crop of the country. His advices from Illinois are not positive, but in Michigan advices say there is fear of injury to clover, and and there is great injury to corn. The frost has caused a marked advance in the price of corn and oats.

J. W. Flynn, of Detroit, says only meagre advices have been received, but they indicate considerable damage to corn and all vegetation by frost. There are fears for the clover crop.

The tomato and cucumber crops are reported almost entirely ruined. Tomatoes have advanced from 50 cents to $1.50 per bushel.

At Rochester, Mich., there was a heavy frost Saturday night, and a still heavier one Sunday night. At day break Sunday morning the thermometer stood at 32 degrees, and on Monday morning at 28. All the late vegetables are destroyed. Ice froze Sunday night a quarter of an inch thick.

A Chicago Tribune editorial says that reports indicate that two thirds of the corn crop is damaged by frost in the northwest and north half of the corn belt.

Notes and News.

Shoe and leather dealers claim that their trade will stand alone against the competition of the world. Then what is the necessity of a protective tariff?

Ex. Gov. Hubbard, who, it will be remembered, went back on his daughter because she had married a poor man, has now lost his entire fortune by speculation in Wall street.

Among the names mentioned for a democratic gubernatorial candidate for 1884 are ex state senator A. B. Morse, of Ionia; Don M. Dickinson, of Detroit; and state senator M. Shoemaker, of Jackson.

The Detroit Free Press reproduces a paragraph from the Boston Globe giving the methods adopted by a bashful young man to cure himself of bashfulness and acquire "cheek." Heavens! what a deal of trouble that young man would have saved himself, if he had only joined the republican party and got an office.

If the high tariff woolen men get one more opportunity to tinker with the revenue laws, poor people will have to warm themselves with natural plasters instead of overcoats. —Lansing Journal.

The various street car lines in Grand Rapids have been consolidated under one management. It is possible some faster motor than horses will be placed on the fair grounds line, for the benefit of races, fairs, etc.

A Newark, N. J., man has invented an artificial egg which can not be distinguished from genuine hen fruit. The machinery will turn out a thousand an hour. This would be an excellent place to set up in business, and bring down the price of eggs.

Anyone wanting state news combined with orthodox republicanism can get it in cheap, convenient, and handsome form by buying the Lansing Weekly Republican. It is the best exchange we receive on that side of the political line.

The shoe and leather trade is reported by large manufacturers to be abundantly able to stand alone against all free trade competition that can be brought against them, and with lower prices on some articles of raw material they can beat the world.

The amalgamated Irish and Catholic societies of Fall River, Mass., have resolved to "boycott" the daily Herald because the latter refused to print an appeal for aid in behalf of the families of the men who were executed for complicity in the Phœnix park murders.

A manager of a large boot and shoe manufacturing house says that he found journeymen shoemakers in London getting wages on the basis of $12 a week for the same grade of work for which $15 is paid Boston. This difference of wages is more than over balanced by the difference of cost of living.

An exchange observes that the greediest man after a newspaper is the one who is too mean to subscribe. He is always in waiting for the latest paper, and it is not two minutes on the owner's premises when the non subscriber pounces upon it, and never lets up till the last line is read, and then perhaps cuts it inside with the remark that he could make a better paper himself.

The New York Tribune says the "Dog Star" is the cause of all our great disasters to human life this year, as well as the unusual state of the weather. While Father Saturn has cracked his whip, and the Bull has been tossing his horns and kicking out its hoofs, this terrestrial ball has been so well shaken up that even Wall street is out of joint. Glad to hear some satisfactory solution of all this trouble.

"The government has decided that the nostrums made of poor whiskey, flavored with various harmless drugs, and sold under the thin disguise of bitters, must pay an internal revenue tax. The trade to them is snubbed by men who assume too much respectability to buy a quart of whiskey, and by those so far gone in intemperance that few runsellers would supply their demands," says the Chicago News.

A new idea in temperence reform is offered by one Jonathan Mann, of a small town in the little state of Massachusetts. He says the way it is now managed makes drinking more attractive than ever, and he believes that if intoxicating liquors were sold by all grocers in good repute there would not be one tenth as much drunkenness as at present. But his great idea is to offer rewards to men and women to abstain from the use of intoxicating liquors.

Harper's Weekly is recognized as good republican authority. Read what it says about its own party: "The republican party is smirched with the whiskey ring swindles, and the star route swindles, and the Belknap swindles, and the salary grab, and the third term plot, and a myriad other similar jobs and thefts, and crimes. The argument will be that no reform is possible until such a party is turned out, and that it can be turned out only by putting in the democratic party. That such a plan is shrewd and promising is malcontin ble."

A long needed reform, it seems, is soon to be attempted by us revising the Roman alphabet that the English language will be simplified and made much easier to learn. A Chicago lawyer has been spending a number of years in arranging a spelling book which he claims will accomplish the great work. Should the new system be adopted, nineteen twentieths of the present labor and expense of learning the English language will be saved.

It has been claimed by some that the republican party may always be found upon the right side of all moral questions and in accord with the best sentiments of the people. We would like to ask how the republicans of Michigan can favor a license, and the republicans of Iowa favor prohibition, and both be upon the right side. And if one state is wrong, which is it? The republicans brag too much about their morality. It sounds suspicious. —Charlotte Leader.

The campaign in Iowa at this time furnishes many illustrations of the wavering of the republicans upon vital issues. One of the most prominent is that of Hon. John A. Kasson. Fearing that his party was suffering by being loudly identified with the temperence movement, he said in a speech at Jefferson: "I am no total abstainer. I cannot be called a fanatic on this question, for in truth I would not object to a beer garden on every square." And yet Mr. Kasson is a republican member of congress.—Charlotte Leader.

When such industries as nail making are compelled to lie idle one-fourth of the time to keep stocks down, and the firms are still able to make handsome profits, is it not time to reduce tariffs, make prices lower, and thus extend markets so as to give employment to help the whole year instead of a portion. The same wages for a year, with steady employment, is far better than a high rate with enforced idleness a large portion of the time, for idleness leads to dissipation, and dissipation to pauperism, regardless of rate of wages.

"Any system of political economy that bears heavily on the working masses is radically defective. Free trade as a system is unfair to laborers because it subjects them to unfair competition. A protective tariff, because it saves them from such competition, is directly to their advantage. Therefore a protective tariff is the true policy for the country." —Breeze. A protective tariff does not prevent unfair competition in labor. There is no duty on imported labor. The price of labor is regulated by the laws of demand and supply, while the articles of consumption necessary to life are produced by the wages to labor. And suppose the wages are a trifle lower, which we doubt. Lower wages and steady employment is far better to any class of laborers than a high rate and enforced idleness one fourth of the time or more. Idleness begets dissipation, and dissipation leads to pauperism.

Mr. Fowler's grave clothes are nearly completed.

The national capital will soon be located at Washington again.

When the "tariff talk" writer of the Post and Tribune dies people will refer to him as "the late democrat."

A lump of alum dissolved in the water in which you wash your light blue stockings will prevent their fading.

There's nothing made in vain. Arthur isn't much of a President but he would undoubtedly make an excellent judge for a baby show.

Spend your money where you make it; buy your goods where you wear them, patronize home trade, and thereby help to build up your town.

People may make injury worse by unreasonable conduct, by giving way to anger and subduing that for the moment, instead of thinking what will be the effect in the future.

The old gentleman who got tripped up while trying to cross the ball room, remarked as he slowly crawled to a perpendicular, that it was always pleasant to be thrown in the company of young people.

An exchange, in alluding to Mahone's desperate effort to retain the political control of Virginia, says that that individual is "putting his best foot forward." Long eared animals like the one referred to usually put their "best foot" backwards.

The Sun says that "the republican party must go." Over at Flint they won't go, and in battle they would not go down at Washington. It does begin to look as if there is but one power that can make a republican "go" and that is the republican party.

Turkey and Chicken Wings.

Turkey and chicken wings should never be thrown away. Many people use them to brush off the stove or range. That is right. But there is nothing better than a clean wing to wash windows. Chamois or buck-skin is very good, but wings are far better for wiping. The chemists is better to polish after washing. The wings cost nothing, so their use is good economy, unlike that which would otherwise be thrown away. Keep some of the wings to dust furniture, others to clean stoves and ranges, if possible, but if not able to secure enough for the various things where they can be made useful, do not fail to keep some to wash and clean windows, because nothing so thoroughly cleans the corners as a wing, and it leaves no lint behind as cloth will do. Nothing is better than a wing to spread on powdered whiting when papering walls, and a clean dry one to smooth the cut paper after putting it on. Nothing could have ever tried does that kind of work so thoroughly and neatly. —Mrs. H. L. Boecher, in the Housekeeper.

Political and Government Township

A full township, according to the United States Government land survey, is six miles square and contains thirty-six sections. This is often called a "Congressional township," sometimes a "Government township." Along the border of large lakes and navigable rivers, and particularly next to State boundaries, fractional Congressional townships are common. For purposes of township government, fractional townships are in many cases united with adjoining townships, or two such townships may be joined under one town organization. In other cases three or more Congressional townships organize under one or two political or town governments, according to the convenience and wishes of a majority of the inhabitants.

J. MILO EATON

Dress in a Hot Country.

It is, of course, superfluous to say that the better classes of Europeans are always decently or even elegantly dressed from boyhood, yet the children of the most wealthy are sometimes induced by visitors without any shirts, or having but a string of beads around the neck, or a pair of elegant slippers on their tiny feet, while in the photographic galleries one can find few pictures of any kind but nude children. Among the lower classes boys are frequently never dressed till they are 12 years old. Girls commonly wear clothing sooner, though the first few years of their lives pass with only a pair of ear-rings, which find their way into the ears of every female child before she is 1 year old. With servants' wages the costume consists of a long, trailing skirt, whose waist is cut very low around the shoulders, from which it is constantly slipping. This short-sleeved waist is often the only under-garment of white; but, as a rule, they are extremely fond of the gayest colors and delight to make their dresses from the kind of print designed to imitate patchwork. When their children are dressed at all they wear a single, long-sleeved loose garment, which covers the knee and which sometimes almost touches the ground. For those shameless little dresses black is one of the favorite colors, and the effect is the climax of singularity. — Para Correspondence San Francisco Chronicle.

Affairs About Home.

Frost Sept. 9th.

School next Monday.

Late crops got bit bad last Sunday.

Rev. G. Daniels returned from conference yesterday.

Original Nashville Students at the opera house to night.

Geo. Miller commenced business last Monday morning.

Jos. Beauvais is finishing a new house on the north side.

Mrs. Ruth Bedford returned home from Eaton county last week.

Geo. Budd, of the Sentinel office, went to Cross Village yesterday.

Washburn & Ackert will begin cutting before the close of the month.

Plasterers are at work on Rev. C. D. Van Ankeu's new house this week.

John Nicholls has built a new tram road along his dock south of the mill.

Tickets for the Nashville Students are on sale at Weed's drug store.

Mr. John Burns has sold to Mrs. Clifford a house and lot on Mason street.

A boulevard around the bay from Petoskey to Harbor Springs is being agitated.

Rev. Mr. Iddings has been appointed to the Charlevoix M. E. church for the coming year.

Greening & Geiken are putting up a nice house adjoining their fish house, to be ready for winter.

The tug American Eagle did not remain with us long, having departed for Buffalo last Sunday.

The citizens of Boyne are circulating a petition for a daily mail from Charlevoix to Boyne Falls.

Miss Emma Severance arrived last Sunday. She is to teach the first primary department of our schools.

New sidewalks have recently been completed in front of Messrs. Upright and Clark's property on State street.

We'd like to bet someone a pair of our old shoes that Boyne City will have a railroad before another year. —Statesman.

Mrs. Bradley has purchased the Miles furnishing goods business of Fisher & Boswell, to take possession in a couple of weeks.

The new brick school house at Boyne nears completion, and adds materially to the appearance of that already beautiful village.

Messrs. Puppin and son, black smiths, near the bridge, are building two new houses for their respective families on the north side.

Geo. C. Boise, of the firm of Boise Bros., of Bay Springs, arrived with his family last Thursday. They will make Bay Springs their home.

Washburn's new ship-yard has turned out one of the strongest and best scows ever launched on Pine lake, for Allen's new pile driver.

Miss Ella Barry returned home today from a visit to Romeo and vicinity. She is to teach the second primary department of our schools.

W. H. Wheary, who has a farm about a mile south of town, brought in a fine specimen of oats yesterday; six feet and four inches tall. —Statesman.

Mr. L. A. Clark, of the Harbor Springs Republican, gave the Journal a call yesterday. He was on the way to Iowa for a visit and recreation.

Our ready-print did not arrive this week until the two outside pages were printed for half-sheets. During the coming months the uncertainty of transportation will make it necessary to put up with considerable inconvenience, but we shall aim to avoid both delays and half-sheets as much as possible.

The Misses Woodbridge, and Mrs. Frost and two children, of Chicago, who have been stopping at A. R. Upright's for three weeks, returned home yesterday.

Mr. Horace Batt, of Petoskey, gave us a brief call Saturday evening. With a party of friends, he has been cruising on Pine lake and South Arm, in the yacht Coral.

Look sharp for next week's Journal. We have planned for, and expect to print an article you will all want your friends to see. Be sure and buy an extra copy.

Upright, Emrey & Co. advertise a closing out sale of clothing, intending to go out of that business, and devote their space and energies to other branches of their trade.

The doors for B. See's new house arrived on the Lawrence Tuesday morning. This house, when finished, will come nearer our ideal in style of finish than any other we have seen in a long time.

Canning establishments are not an experiment. We notice by our exchanges that they are being established in various portions of the state. Charlevoix should not miss her chance to get one.

Mr. Blackbird's historical lecture at the opera house was interesting and profitable to those present. He discussed the history of the Ottawas for two centuries back, and concluded by reciting the "Indian's lament."

J. G. Peterson, of Ironton, is one of the five men of that burg. We shall look for his advertisement in the Journal some time in the near future. Last Friday was altogether too "blue" a day to "convince" anyone.

The Independent is agitating a citizens improvement association for Harbor Springs, to furnish information regarding its advantages and possibilities. Would not some such scheme be a good thing for Charlevoix?

The Daily Reporter has closed its brief life, and while it may not have made its editor a millionaire it has done a good work advertising the resources and pleasures of this region. It was a live paper and deserved financial success.

Rev. Mr. Daniels goes to Cadillac the coming year. Mr. D. has been here two years, and so far as we can learn there has been a steady growth in membership and attendance, in his charge. We have no doubt he will be as successful in his new field.

The business card of Mr. J. M. Clark, will be found in this paper. Next week it will appear in its proper place in the directory. Mr. C. also has a stock of groceries in his building on the corner of State and Antrim streets, to which he will add from time to time until it is equal to the needs of that end of town.

Evan's express is making good time these days. Mr. Evans is the most accommodating man ever on this route, and we sincerely hope he will continue.—Enterprise. We are assured by Mr. Evans that he has teams at his disposal to meet the wants of the traveling public, whatever direction they choose to go.

Last Tuesday evening an old fash ioned tea meeting was held at the M. E. church, which was also a farewell social to the pastor's family. One of the events of the evening was the presentation to Mrs. Daniels of a quilt on which was written in indelible ink over five hundred names of our citizens. The entertainment was a most enjoyable one, and will be long remembered by all the participants.

The following is a dispatch to the Grand Rapids Democrat, from Ionia. Mr. Van Vleck owns a cottage on the resort, and has been a regular visitor to Charlevoix for a number of years. "Word was brought here this evening that Virgil Van Vleck, cashier of the second national bank of this city, had been found dead with his brains blown out, near Pride. Van Vleck's parents reside in that place, and he went there a few days since to visit them. It is said that he went out hunting this morning alone and was not seen afterward until found dead. No further particulars have yet been received, but there are rumors of suicide. Van Vleck has a wife and two children, was a prominent member of the Baptist church and apparently happy in his domestic and business relations. His connection with the bank is supposed to be straight, but an investigation will be made to-morrow."

O. D. Mason is building a pleasure boat 13 feet long somewhat different from the usual style of building boats, being made of pine strips 9 10ths by one inch, hollowed one side and rounded the other and beveled sufficient to give form, without inside ribs, and nailing one piece to the other. It is expected to make a much lighter boat than can be made in any other way with same strength, and it can be kept cleaner inside.

The Redpath Lyceum Magazine is a handsome quarto volume of 62 pages, devoted to the interests of the Redpath Lyceum Bureau. This bureau is agent for the best lecturers, readers, and musical talent in the country, and the magazine gives briefly the specialties of each person, with a few press notices and testimonials. Local societies desiring high class entertainments should send for a copy, to the Redpath Lyceum Bureau, Tribune building, Chicago.

Mr. W. J. Stevenson is building a new shop 45x28 feet, two stories high, on the corner of State and Antrim streets, the first floor of which is to be occupied as a blacksmith and woodworking shop and the second floor as a paint shop. Mr. Stevenson came here two years ago with but small capital, and has not only built up a good trade, but invested his surplus in real estate, and become fully identified with the growth and best interests of the town.

"The natural laws of business say that the farms and work shops should be near each other." We have the finest and best hardwood timber skirting Pine lake and South Arm; we have excellent facilities for shipping; we should have the mills and factories to convert this timber, as near as possible, into articles ready for use. The men who work in these factories and he fed, which will give a home market and better prices for every article of produce the farmer has to sell. The farmer is consequently directly interested in promoting manufactures.

The Original Nashville students, the celebrated plantation singers, are coming to Charlevoix and will be at the opera house Sept. 13th. Already the event is becoming "town talk." The Port Huron Times contains the following: "There was a good attendance at the concert given by the Nashville Students, at the social rooms of the Congregational church, last Saturday evening, and the programme, with a few changes was carried out in fine style. The company is an excellent one, and the songs of the colored people of the South are rendered by them with spirit and feeling. A quartet, 'Come Where the Lilies Bloom,' the singing of the male quartette, and variations of 'Home sweet Home,' as a piano solo, by G. F. McPherson, were the most pleasing features of the entertainment." Tickets on sale at Weeds' drug store.

Last Friday evening a meeting of gentlemen prominently identified with the business and growth of Charlevoix was held at the office of Upright Bros. for the purpose of organization of a gentlemen who desired to erect a grist mill here, if a suitable location could be furnished. It was stated at the meeting that two lots could be secured on the south side of Round lake, and a paper was presented for subscriptions. One third of the necessary amount was pledged then and there. Since that time the paper has been circulated, and more than half the necessary amount has been subscribed. It is to be hoped that there will be no hitch in the proceedings, and that the mill will be built at once. We are authorized to state here that the site is to be secured, and if the gentleman above referred to does not build a mill, the site will be offered to some other man who does mean business.

Mr. Avery and Mr. Hicks visited Luther last week and while there fell in company with a business man from Baldwin who said that the extension of the C. & W. M. railroad would reach their place by the middle of November and would push on to Traverse City next year. —Traverse Bay Eagle.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

Crop Items.

The following items from the Grand Traverse Herald show the capacity of the soil in those portions of this northern region. Will our farmer friends in Charlevoix county bring us similar items, so we can show what can be done here in agriculture:

F. J. Stover, of Garfield, has left at the Herald office magnificent specimens of Early Rose potatoes weighing a plump eight pounds to the dozen.

George A. Blood, of Fife Lake, the other day picked a bushel of white huckleberries, which far surpasses the ordinary kind, both in size and sweetness.

J. T. Crum, of Blair, brings to the Herald office early dent and white flint corn 10 feet, and 10 feet 5 inches high, respectively. This is not much of a year for corn, you know.

This isn't much of a year for wheat, but Judge Ransdell showed us the other day the yield of one kernel's planting, and we counted thirty heads and many of the heads contained twenty "houses," and many of these three kernels each. Now figure it up yourself.

F. J. Stover, of Garfield, reports stalks of corn, of dent varieties, 11 feet 8 inches in height, from ground to top, and still growing. It is plump 6 feet to some of the ears. A favorable September will mature the crop. The seed was brought by Mr. Stover from Indiana, and is of varieties that mature early in that state.

Giles Mills, of Wilson, Kalkaska county, called at the Herald office a few days ago and left samples of wheat and potatoes grown on his farm. This farm is upon the plateau and the success Mr. Mills has had with is another proof that the plateau plains of northern Michigan can be made into good farms. Mr. Mills went on his place about nine years ago, and reports increasing prosperity ever since. The wheat shown us is the White Russian, and is as large an one and well headed as any we have seen this season. The potatoes are large and fine and have of a variety grown some two weeks earlier than the Early Rose. Mr. Mills has helped to solve the vexed question of what shall be done with our plains lands.

The Influence of the Moon.

Northwest Farmer.

A Cadillac, Mich., correspondent of the Country Gentleman asks these questions: Does the moon have my effect on pigs or any other crops, or in other words, does it make any difference when planting or sowing, whether the moon is old or new?

To which the editor responds as follows: "The moon has no influence on the growth of plants, the entire light of the moon for one whole season not being equal to that of the sun for five minutes. Where full records have been kept for years they show no average influence; but for short periods sometimes bearing one way and sometimes another. Superficial observers will remember coincidences with these rules, forget the failures, and become confirmed in error.

This, doubtless, is sound doctrine, and the quicker all farmers come to believe it the better for them. Then, instead of waiting for the proper time in the moon to sow their crops, they will put them in the ground when the soil is in order and the weather favorable. It is the earth not the moon, that has to do with the success or failure of crops.

The Smithsonian Institute.

The Smithsonian institution is the greatest literary and scientific clearing house in the world. Its scope in this field is universal. Any person can send here any number of copies of a scientific publication, addressed as described, and the institution sees that they are delivered without cost to the sender. An American author can thus distribute an edition of a learned treatise through all foreign countries, near and remote, as well as his own, while foreign writers can in turn reach every learned society and student in this country or in other foreign countries. Practically the exchanges are made in most cases between societies rather than individuals, and some idea can be gained of the proportions of the work from the fact that the institution now has 3,451 societies or agents with which it is in regular correspondence. The report for 1881, just published, gives 2,048 foreign correspondents in that year distributed as follows: Africa 23, American (outside of the United States) 135, Asia 68, Australia 82, Europe 2,578, Polynesia 2, miscellaneous 7. Ten years ago there were only 1,765, while in 1850 the institution was in communication with only 153.

One of the witnesses before the senatorial committee on labor, last week, told an important truth in an eloquent manner when he said that the workingman was the beautifier of the nation. Let those who live in elegant houses, wear purple and fine linen, and fare sumptuously every day, ponder upon this expression of the witness and realize, if they can, how much they are indebted to the working man and woman for their beautiful homes, beautiful garments, shady lawns, exquisite pictures, fine jewelry, elegant carriages and the ten thousand things that money can purchase, but which no one but the workingman and woman can supply. —Elk Rapids Progress.

During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, nearly four hundred million dollars for the support of the government, and not less than six hundred million dollars for the benefit of private interests were taken from the people in the way of taxes and bounties to a few manufacturing interests. Of this enormous sum a portion runs the wheels of government, and a portion goes as a sinking fund to some capitalist who has conceived the idea that it would be a fine thing to run an industry to which the government would act the part of wet nurse. No farmer was ever protected thus; no laborer or mechanic ever felt this influence. It is only the class who desire to make goods and sell them to the laborer for twice what our British cousin asks, and if the laborer kicks on the price the manufacturer cries out that if his bounties are reduced he won't survive. When the laborer complains he is told that a whole ship load will take his place. —Dowagiac Times.

Since Dorsey's very damaging disclosures of republican rottenness, many other even more wicked and enormous acts committed by the leaders of the party of purity" are speedily coming to light. The Morey letter episode will not down, but is fast developing into one real leak; the letter written by Stevenson to Amberson and which Wilson in good hand in Washington the 25th New York Truth is sending to the front again, and this makes the fourth letter, exhibit, published "to date" in this case. Still the republican papers will regale the reader with reports that Blaine is not to be mentioned in connection with the Garfield to go with him as cattle justice of the Cattell Stevens supreme court; and taken altogether the republican party is now in such a demoralized plight that the approach of the national campaign is a matter which its leaders contemplate with anything but gladness. —Chippewa Democrat.

Mr. C. Case, formerly of Eagle, Clinton county, last spring moved his sawmill to Gratiot county, and cut a large amount of lumber during the season, one and one half miles south of here, sometime in May last. The growing of bees heretofore has been a matter of speculation, and the looked over the country and became satisfied that no better place in Michigan could be found for the successful culture of them, and he brought with him sixty swarms. His success has been good thus far, having now 120 swarms and about 2,000 pounds of beautiful white honey, judging by the sample left on our table. He has also 1,100 pounds of clear extracted honey, which is as clear as water and very thick. The time has gone by when there is any doubt as to raising anything in this part of the state that can be raised in any part. —Petoskey Democrat.

Gov. Begole has already passed the crisis of his administration, with a general approval so decided as to be strong, that it is sure to secure for him a popular endorsement next election, should he consent to enter for another race. His undisputed honesty, his kindness of heart and simplicity of manners, combined with that native sagacity that has made him one of the foremost business men of the state, have won for him the love of the masses and the admiration of all unprejudiced thinkers. The allied press of the greenback and democratic parties should be on the alert ready to receive the misemplons attacks of the republican press with that strong defense the subject affords and deserves. —Grand Rapids Leader.

The fact is shown by a congressional investigating committee that the government has undelicately collected from the people and paid over to the bond holders $100,000,000 (in coin) more than the bonds cost them, with interest on such sum up to the present time. —Chicago Sentinel.

"Death's shining mark, the grim warrior scorns a bullseye in the person of an honest, I'll never be weary, Abigail Smith he only takes the shoulder, seized quarter, he's a regular target on paper." —Boston Tribune Heading.

We don't take in all this bosh about protection advancing wages or free trade as relief cutting them down. Labor like any other commodity finds its remuneration in a free market. Increasing the supply and demand it the supply is abundant, wages be low; with decrease. On the other hand if the demand is sharp and the supply is limited wages will increase tariff or no tariff. Why we remember when the iron company were building the furnace here, it being late in the season, there was a sharp demand for masons and a short supply, and the company were forced to pay $4 to $4.50 a day to some parties who scarcely knew a trowel from a pudding-stick. —Elk Rapids Progress.

When making soup in which roots or herbs are used, a good way to peel the meat is to let it stand in the kettle and plash the roots or herbs with it, have, after it is nearly done, over warm cold water, and then put a plate over the top of the pan and a clean cloth over the plate, and when the waters almost exhausted put in the desired quantity for the soup.

Almost Marvelous.

The way Parmelee's Blood Purifier acts upon the human system, it is not a theory but a fact, it strikes at the root of the disease easily its perfect working is seen at once almost to see the patient is aware. Prosperity unmanly ruins nearly as many men as strong drink. The sudden coming into the unencumbered use of money, admission to a style of living never dreamed of before, the acquaintances of men and women who have known the fashion for world all their lives, upset the common sense, the clear vanity, and plunge them into the dissipation to feel of that beyond their financially, bankrupt and personally wrecked. It requires a level head to withstand the enticements of prosperity.

"Yes," said the farmer to the keeper of the store in the village, as he came down to count the eggs of which a new purchase had been made, "I have a new patent incubator which had been recommended to me confidently, and you ought to have seen all sorts of wonderful things about it. Why, I had a hen-coop that could contain the eggs. Then I had the patent lamp and superb wires, and more than a hundred other pieces." "Indeed," said the shop-keeper, "and what, pray, did you get?" "Not exactly," said the farmer, "but I did get every cent of your money in the shop, and then the boys got it in marbles and I got it out of them by trading with them. Did you ever see a patent incubator that could do that? Now I'll tell you what I'll do with you, I'll trade you even for your whole shop, and throw in my entire farm to boot." "Sold," said the shop-keeper, "and I'll throw in my wife and family to boot." "Sold again," said the farmer, "and I'll throw in my mother-in-law to boot." And then the two got into a fight and the whole village turned out to see it.

TO THE COLONEL.

A riddle you have told, for sure;
And to prove to you I'm not a dunce,
This wondrous mystery I will unfold:
Eighth wonder it may be, it shall be told.

What but the year has twelve months rolling by?
A month has thirty days forever dwelling nigh—
One part as black as Egypt's darkest night;
One part with splendor eclipses other light.

But let me hint: a slight mistake was made!
Sad thirty leaves on every branch is laid;
Some trimmers have more, and one has less,
As the Colonel himself will have to confess.

Changes in Protectionist Opinion

Bradstreet's, a conservative commercial journal, says in its issue of August 11:

We have heretofore, as occasion seemed to suggest, endeavored to make clear to our protectionist friends that the true commercial policy of the United States for the future must lie in the direction of greater freedom of exchange, and that the true and wise solution of the tariff controversy will be found in the adoption of a plan looking to the gradual reduction of duties on a sliding scale extending over a period of years. While admitting that the vested interests which have grown up and have been fostered under the tariff policy of past years, are entitled to large and generous consideration and should not be arbitrarily and suddenly interfered with, we have been equally free to remind those in favor of maintaining the existing system that by resisting moderate forms they are likely to provoke the enactment of radical and unconsidered measures in the not very distant future. Our position in regard to the tariff difficulty, while such as to commend itself to temperate and judicious men of all shades of opinion, naturally did not fall in with the extravagant views of the more extreme adherents of the protective system. This was not to be expected, nor did it occasion surprise that the utterances of journals published in centers of protectionist effort and dependent upon protectionist support should continue to advocate the maintenance of protection as a permanent policy.

Of late, however, there have been some signs of a change in this respect. Some weeks ago the Philadelphia American, disclaiming the idea that it was in favor of the tariff as a permanent institution, declared that it could conceive of circumstances in which the tariff would cease to be required as a means to the industrial independence of the nation, and that in such a case it would favor the reduction of duties to the revenue basis. This, however, while in some sense a concession, considering the quarter from which it came, was still hypothetical and only dealt with the matter in the abstract. A much more significant declaration perhaps the most significant that has been put forth upon the tariff question of late is contained in a recent article in the Pittsburg Leader. That journal, commenting upon Mr. Wharton Barker's scheme for distributing the surplus revenue among the states in order to save the war tariff, says "We may as well look the matter in the face, gentlemen of Philadelphia; by no such artificial scheme as this can the inevitable be shunned, and the inevitable is just this: unless there is another war of such a prodigal expenditure of public money on rivers and harbors and public works, and Mexican and Confederate pensions, and workingmen's homesteads, etc., such as the world has never yet seen, the tariff must go, not suddenly we hope, nor disastrously if we properly prepare ourselves for it; but as certain as this country is to grow in population and wealth, good sense dictates that we Pennsylvanians should not fight this result with wild projects and fanciful dreams like the Barker scheme, but should give our best thoughts and patient endeavor to found our industries while we have yet time on such a solid basis that they can undergo the coming change without shock, and blossom out into new prosperity when they stand no longer on government props but on their own merits."

The interest of the paragraph quoted is, as will be seen, by no means of an abstract nature. Its significance lies in the fact that it discusses the tariff controversy in the light of actual present circumstances and of the inevitable future. The conclusion reached by the Leader is but a recognition of a fact long since apparent to most persons whose opinions have not been unduly warped by their interests. The publication of the article in the city of Pittsburg, where unanimity of sentiment upon the tariff question has hitherto been understood to prevail, is indeed a matter of more than passing interest. It goes to show that the change which has been gradually coming over public opinion throughout the country has at length begun to affect the strongholds of protection itself. Sooner or later this was certain to happen. The protected industries could not forever blind themselves to the fact that the very production from which their several branches suffer, has been mainly due to the artificial encouragement offered by the tariff, which, while stimulating production at home, naturally operated to deprive them of a market abroad. As we have shown, a foreign market becomes more and more necessary as productive operations expand, and yet, by prohibiting importations, we are doing our utmost to prevent the growth of an export trade. The advice given by the Pittsburg journal to its protectionist friends is judicious and in every way worthy of their most careful consideration. We do not even hesitate to say that the Leader is much more truly a conservator of the interests of the protected industries than those who, by blind opposition to the progress of public opinion, invite sweeping, and perhaps temporarily destructive, changes in our industrial relations.

H. B. Payne, Wm. H. Chisholm and others of Cleveland are putting $1,000,000 into iron mines in Ontario, said to be the richest in the world. The mines will be reached by the Central Ontario railway, now in course of completion, the present terminus of which is on Weller's bay, the best harbor on lake Ontario, sixty miles from Oswego, and about thirty-six from Rochester. Extensive docks and ore pockets have been constructed to facilitate shipment of ore to the United States. The area of the new mines is about 60,000 acres, and they are 80 miles inland from Lake Ontario. About 100,000 tons of ore are estimated as the first year's output. Samples indicate magnetic and Bessemer ore of the finest quality.

The New York Sun enumerates the following list of presidential candidates for the democratic party: Bayard of Delaware; Butler of Massachusetts; Fowler of New York; Hewitt of New York; Thurman of Ohio; Hendricks of Indiana; Holman of Indiana; McDonald of Indiana; Palmer of Illinois; and Randall of Pennsylvania. It says, "We do not include Tilden in the list, as it is certain he will refuse the nomination. Among these ten men our preference is strongly in favor of Holman.

The Michigan Central Bridge Across the Niagara.

The Michigan Central railroad is building a new bridge over the Niagara river a little distance below the falls. The chasm at that point is 859 feet from bluff to bluff, and the grade 245 feet above the surface of water, and being just at the head of the rapids the structure must be such that it can be erected with out false work or temporary supports. The bridge is to be a double track steel bridge built to carry upon each track at the same time a freight train of the heaviest kind extending the entire length of the bridge, headed by two "consolidation" engines, and a side pressure of thirty pounds per square foot, which pressure is produced by a wind having a velocity of seventy-five miles per hour. Under the above loads the structure is strained to only one-fifth of its ultimate strength. The total length of the bridge proper is 895 feet, divided into two cantil-levers of 375 feet on the Canadian and 395 on the American side, supported by steel towers rising from the water's edge. A fixed span of 125 feet is suspended from and connects the river arms of the cantilevers. The clear span across the river is 500 feet, being the longest double track truss span ever yet built. The Central Bridge Works of Buffalo have charge of the work, and they are to complete the bridge by Dec. 1, 1883.

So accurate is the design and workmanship that no two pieces are put together until placed in their final position in the bridge, yet every member must fill its place to the hundredth part of an inch. By the powerful machinery used here, the steel having a strength of 80,000 pounds to the square inch, is cut, punched, bored and planed with as much ease as though it were pine. After it is completed, it is loaded on cars by aid of steam derricks—enabling three men to handle the heaviest pieces with perfect ease—and sent to its location. For erection at the bridge site, temporary scaffoldings of timber using some 600,000 feet of timber, will be built from the bluff on either side out to the edge of the water on a level with the top of the bluff. Upon these the shore arms of the canti-levers will be erected, one end resting on the steel towers and the other upon masonry upon the bluff. The shore end will be firmly anchored to this masonry, so that it will take an uplifting force of 400 tons at each end to displace it. This constitutes the counterweight to balance the unequal loading on the river arm referred to above. As this, under the most unfavorable conditions, can never equal 200 tons, the provision is ample.

After the structure is completed from the shore to the steel towers, comes the difficult portion of the work, i. e., to span the 200 feet across and 245 feet above a roaring river whose force no earthly power can stay. No temporary structure can survive a moment, and here the skill of the engineer comes in to build nature and laugh at her powers. The design of the canti-lever is such that after the shore arm is completed and anchored as above, the river arm may then be built out, one panel or section at a time by means of great traveling derricks, and be self sustaining as it progresses. After one panel of twenty-five feet is built and has its bracing adjusted, the traveling derrick is moved forward and another panel erected. This the work progresses section by section until the ends of the canti-lever are reached, when there still remains a gap of 125 feet to close. Into this will be swung and suspended from the canti-lever arms, an ordinary truss bridge forming the connecting link and completing the structure.

THE EAST.

A TEXAS steer broke loose from a lard-bound train at the Charleston freight-yards in Boston one workman in the air and another into the water, and dashed through a mahogany door into the head and face were also badly injured. The steer was finally captured and killed.

The operatives at Fall River were visited and entertained by the senate's Sub-Committee on Education and Labor. The homes on the mill-privileges owned by the corporations were found to be in a bad condition. An old English woman said the operatives were better off in England than here.... Frost did considerable damage in New England and along the valley of the Hudson. The loss on tobacco in three counties in Massachusetts is placed at $125,000.

JAY GOULD was a witness before the Senate Sub-Committee on Education and Labor, at New York. A large audience gathered to hear him recite his autobiography. He said he was 17 years old, and was in his youth a cow-boy. He studied mathematics night and day, learning at a tender age that $\frac{1}{8}$ of $\frac{1}{4}$ of $\frac{1}{2}$ of 800 made $50.00, and later applying that principle with success to the stock of the Western Union. He next joined a surveying party, which beat him, and he was forced to sell sundials for his daily food supplies. In 1856 a surveying contract, and made $5,000 a year. He then began business as a lumber with a partner. The partner laid all himself. He then became superintendent of a railroad, and ever took hold with that road except Mr. Gould who long it nearly all the stock. The road then got deep in debt. Mr. Gould was rich. Skipping over many incidents in his career, he said he began to come down to his operations in Union Pacific. There he secured to save the property of 2,000 stockholders. Next came the Southwestern system. Mr. Gould sincerely wanted to see what could be done by consolidation. When he got the 6,000 miles of road together they earned $ 30,000 a month. Last month they earned $ 2,000,000. He was a town director in many of the cities and railroads of other regions of the country. The Senators asked Mr. Gould about personal legislation, it did not strike him favorably. Government and strict science would be deplorable. Supply and demand, he thought, would fix everything and bring about the millennium.

JOHN JACOB ASTOR, of New York, is said to have decided to his only son, now United States Minister to Italy, property valued at the time the latter resigns, to be subject to a pension of $ 20,000 per annum. The object is believed to be the consummation of the union of the estates.

THE WEST.

A BIG sand paper warehouse on Wabash street, Chicago, was gutted by fire. Three girls jumped from the third story, one breaking a leg and receiving internal injuries. A man in attempting to escape fell unconscious in the stairway, and his head and face were also badly burned and crisp. A fireman fell from a ladder, and a spectator was crushed against a wall by a hook and ladder wagon running away. The fire tension on hose of the rig house are unending, and it is feared two persons lost their lives. The total loss is at $ 75,000.... A man who has died a tramp in Plainfield, Utah, covered eight passengers and two trainmen with a revolver, robbed them of their watches and money, and escaped in the darkness.... Bertold and Battle, who robbed the Riverside stage and killed the express messenger the night of Aug. 11, were hanged by a mob at Lake City, Arizona. The condemn assembled in force, proceeding against the hanging. There were rescued in the mob on the day of the execution of guns, of all of which were given. It placed in a straight line the prisoners would be fourteen miles in length.

HENRY VILLARD'S and Jay Gould's enabled guests were given a gorgeous reception at St. Paul and Minneapolis, both cities being astray in a wealth of decoration. The processions were large and fine, the different industries being represented in the many. At Minneapolis a platform in waters was kept working during the entire reception, flouring and sawing. and a lumber mill set in motion. Private and public banquets, toasts and responses, and a reception at the Hotel Lafayette at St. Paul, were features of the occasion. Minnesota is now the banner State of the North in the production of wheat, and the presence of the Northern Pacific magnates and complimentary visit to the State.

He has not yet decided whether he will accept the position of Minister to Germany, tendered him by President Arthur. Secretary Lincoln, Gen. The Senators asked Mr. Gould about personal legislation, it did not strike him favorably. Government and strict science would be deplorable. Supply and demand, he thought, would fix everything and bring about the millennium.

The condemn assembled in force, proceeding against the hanging. There were rescued in the mob on the day of the execution of guns, of all of which were given. It placed in a straight line the prisoners would be fourteen miles in length.

HENRY VILLARD'S and Jay Gould's enabled guests were given a gorgeous reception at St. Paul and Minneapolis, both cities being astray in a wealth of decoration. The processions were large and fine, the different industries being represented in the many. At Minneapolis a platform in waters was kept working during the entire reception, flouring and sawing, and a lumber mill set in motion. Private and public banquets, toasts and responses, and a reception at the Hotel Lafayette at St. Paul, were features of the occasion. Minnesota is now the banner State of the North in the production of wheat, and the presence of the Northern Pacific magnates and complimentary visit to the State.

THE SOUTH.

ISAAC SHELBY, centenarian, was murdered in Lexington, Ky., last night. He was 97 years old, and was in his youth a cow-boy. He studied mathematics night and day, learning at a tender age that $\frac{1}{8}$ of $\frac{1}{4}$ of $\frac{1}{2}$ of 800 made $50.00, and later applying that principle with success to the stock of the Western Union. He next joined a surveying party, which beat him, and he was forced to sell sundials for his daily food supplies. In 1856 a surveying contract, and made $5,000 a year. He then began business as a lumber with a partner. The partner laid all himself. He then became superintendent of a railroad, and ever took hold with that road except Mr. Gould who long it nearly all the stock. The road then got deep in debt. Mr. Gould was rich. Skipping over many incidents in his career, he said he began to come down to his operations in Union Pacific. There he secured to save the property of 2,000 stockholders. Next came the Southwestern system. Mr. Gould sincerely wanted to see what could be done by consolidation. When he got the 6,000 miles of road together they earned $ 30,000 a month. Last month they earned $ 2,000,000. He was a town director in many of the cities and railroads of other regions of the country. The Senators asked Mr. Gould about personal legislation, it did not strike him favorably. Government and strict science would be deplorable. Supply and demand, he thought, would fix everything and bring about the millennium.

THE JOURNAL.

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - MICHIGAN.

BUSINESS.

Sixty-four Thousand Dollars in New Buildings and Additions.

Fifty-two New Residences and Cottages this Year.

An Exhibit of what the Charlevoix House Builders have Done and are Doing.

The question is frequently asked by strangers, "What are you doing in the way of new buildings and improvements?" To give a correct and satisfactory answer, the JOURNAL has made a careful canvas of the whole village, and finds a total of fifty-two new residences and summer cottages, besides numerous other improvements, the cost of which, in labor and material, aggregates sixty-four thousand dollars.

To make this canvas it was necessary to go from house to house and inquire of the owner or occupant. Where neither could be found, inquiry of neighbors or an estimate based on the cost of other houses of similar size and construction was found necessary. In no case have the estimates been exaggerated, and we believe the totals represent fairly the business that has been done.

In the beginning of the canvas, the intention was to print the cost or value of each house or improvement, but a few owners made objection, giving good reasons, and suggested that the size of building or description of improvement be given instead. As this could not be done without going over a portion of the ground the second time, it was omitted, and the figures were given with the understanding that they were to be used only in making totals.

A few residences are included which are just commenced, but which will be completed and occupied this winter, and properly come in this year's work.

In the matter of public buildings and stores there has been very little done, the work on Mr. Buttars' store alone covering fully one-third of the entire amount.

On the subject of shops, warehouses, and docks, which properly includes all manufactories, the people seem to be just awakening to their necessity and importance, and another year we shall expect to see the amount multiplied several times. Two industries already agitated (the fruit-canning and the grist-mill) would crowd pretty close to the total for this season, and there is little doubt that others may be secured this fall if our people work for and try to get them.

There was considerable hard work connected with making this report, but we shall not have worked in vain if it is the means of inducing even one man to locate here, either in mercantile or manufacturing business. It represents fifteen hours tramping, up hill and down, cross-lots and through the sand, with the hot sun beating down like a summer day.

First taking up

PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND STORES,

we find a small list, with an aggregate of only eleven thousand dollars, as follows:

A. Buttars, brick store, two stories.
L. D. Bartholomew, finishing opera house.
Congregational church, to be partially completed.
Odd Fellows' hall, finishing.
John Bell, store 21x40, two stories.
John Bell, addition to store, 20x12.

Following with

SHOPS, WAREHOUSES, AND DOCKS,

we find the list slightly increased, but the aggregate is very low, being only four thousand six hundred dollars, as follows:

Stockman & Iddings, two-story warehouse for hardware, and tin [illegible]
Washburn & Ackert, foundry, pattern room, and black smith shop.
Wm. J. Stevenson, blacksmith and wagon shop, 45x28, two stories.
Joseph Hyland, boiler works.
John Nicholls, dock and mill improvements.
Upright, Emrey & Co., dock, warehouse, and improvements.
Chicago resort, boat house for 12 boats.
Charlevoix resort, boat house.
Greening & Geiken, dock, fish house, and ice house.
E. Carpenter, warehouse.
When we come to the list of

NEW RESIDENCES

we find something to be proud of. Fifty-two new houses in one season is a large number for a village like Charlevoix, and forty-three thousand dollars for new buildings, and five thousand four hundred for additions and improvements, is a large sum to expend in so short a time. But large as it is, from what we can learn, next year will largely increase, if not double it. To give a better idea of the class of buildings erected, we have classified them by their value in thousands:

$3,000 and upwards.

A. R. Upright, Henry Bennett.
Byron See.

$2,000 to $3,000.

Harrison Berdan. E. M. Clark.

$1,000 to $2,000.

C. F. Van Auken, Burr cottage.
L. Lewis, Allen Potter, cot..
Chas. Swallow. R. S. Abbot, cot..
Kirkpatrick cot., D. C. Loveday.
Moore cottage.

Under $1,000.

Philip Mudge, O. Blair.
E. P. Houghton, Chas. Ely.
H. B. Weir, cot., Jos. Beauvais.
A. J. Mudge, Jas. Beauvais.
J. Cook, A. E. Mather, cot..
O. S. Satterlee, cot., Horace Hull.
C. Lamoreaux, H. Wade.
J. J. Kanaga, H. S. Harsha.
C. R. Bellinger, A. Cameron.
— Sheridan, G. W. Cronter.
G. M. Bice, D. S. Way.
G. W. Wrisley, Geo. Pappin.
Fred See, Jos. Pappin.
Hayes Bros. (2) — Hurlburt.
H. C. Cooper, O. I. Wheat. (2)
A. R. Colgrove, Robt. Wilkes.
C. B. Glass, Wm. Horton.
C. S. McCausland, Jas. Lamphere.

In the following list of

ADDITIONS, IMPROVEMENTS, AND BARNS,

there are but three items of less amount than $100, and none less than $50. And the chances are that we have missed a considerable number that ought to be represented here. If there are any, we shall be pleased to mention them in another issue. The total is five thousand four hundred dollars:

Mrs. O. A. Sears, addition to cottage.
S. Parker, finishing and improvements.
L. E. Allen, finishing and improvements.
G. W. Bell, finishing and improvements.
W. A. Smith, improvements.
John West, addition to cottage.
H. S. Harsha, addition to residence.
W. S. Johnson, addition to boarding house.
Dr. L. Lewis, addition to residence.
Dr. L. Lewis, barn.
Jas. Ackert, barn.
D. C. Loveday, barn.
F. J. Meech, barn.
Rev. C. F. Van Auken, barn.
John Kelley, improvements.
N. Ainslie, barn.
B. F. Bisbee, addition to residence.
John Bell, barn.
L. Cook, addition to residence.
J. A. Lawrence, addition to residence.
Mrs. McElroy, addition to residence.
W. H. Carr, finishing and improvements.
Wm. Evans, finishing and improvements.
Mrs. Lynn, finishing and improvements.
H. S. Harsha, addition to tenement.
J. M. Eaton, finishing and improvements to tenement.
Horace Hull, barn.

If there is a village in northern Michigan which can make a better showing, let them print their figures, with names, as we have done. And when we get through with buildings we will look around for some other evidence of industry and prosperity and compare notes there. There is a bright future for Charlevoix, if we all have faith and work for it.

Real Estate Transfers.

Reported for the Journal by UPHOUSE BROS., real estate dealers.

The following is a list of transfers of real estate in Charlevoix county, where the consideration is $100 or over, for the week ending Tuesday evening, Sept. 18, 1883, as recorded in the office of register of deeds:

For some time past the republican organs of the state have been asserting that State Senator Michael Shoemaker, of this city, is quietly engaged in laying the wires to secure the nomination on a union ticked next fall as a candidate for governor. This statement, perhaps, might be believed in some portions of the state by those who are not personally acquainted with Col. Shoemaker, but here in Jackson county no one can be found who will believe for a moment that the assertion has any foundation, for the simple reason that Mr Shoemaker has never engaged in any scheme to secure his own nomination as a candidate for office. Whatever nominations he has been honored with in the past have come as a spontaneous offering from the representative men of his party, who were prompted by a feeling of confidence in his ability to represent his party and his constituents creditably, so far as the gubernatorial candidate for next is concerned, the Patriot knows that Col. Shoemaker has made no movement to secure the nomination, and is not a candidate for that or any other office. He feels, however, a deep interest in the success of the opposition to republicanism, and realizes the importance of harmony and judicious nominations at the next state convention. To this end he will labor and lend his influence, and if all members of the union party are controlled by the same feeling, we have no doubt the entire state ticket can be elected. While the democracy, and we believe also the greenbackers of Jackson county, are gratified with the record which Senator Shoemaker has made during two terms in the state senate, and while they are confident he would make a most excellent governor in every respect, he is needsire to urge his nomination for that position unless it shall become apparent that he will be the most formidable standard bearer to lead the combined forces against the stalwarts in the campaign of next year. That contest, coming as it does in a presidential campaign will be an important one, and especially here in Michigan. Disappointed and chagrined at their partial defeat on the state ticket, and the loss of half the congressmen last year, the republicans will undoubtedly make greater efforts than ever before, and use every means within their power to regain entire control of the state and the congressional districts, and we suspect that as a part of their tactics they have been charging Col. Shoemaker with laying plans to obtain the nomination for governor, with with the hope of creating dissensions among the democratic and greenback elements of the opposition. If this is their object they can rest assured, however, that it will not succeed. Neither the democracy or the greenbackers are willing to have the republicans dictate who shall be their standard bearer, more than it shall be their platform of principles. We predict that at the conventions of the two parties next year harmony will prevail, run a union ticket will be amicably agreed upon, and that it will be elected by the people. The republican organs, fearing this, are already sounding the tocsin of alarm by imploring their party to reorganize throughout the state, preparatory for work during the next campaign.—Jackson Patriot.

An abundant crop makes the farmers prosperous. An abundant production of iron makes the iron manufacturers prosperous. The farmer sells his surplus products in the open market of the world. The tariff shuts the doors of the world's markets against our iron. When our market has enough iron the mills stop, wages stop and tramps start. When our market has enough wheat we stop it and the price goes on.—Cheriotte Leader.

Envelopes furnished and printed on short notice at the JOURNAL office.

Senator Pennington, of Charlotte, gave the JOURNAL a brief call last Thursday.

The firemen advertise a ball at the opera house Sept. 25th. They deserve a good patronage.

Further frost reports show greater damage than first anticipated, though that was bad enough.

Mr. W. A. Brown and Miss Anna Armstrong were married at the Bridge street house Sept. 11th.

Amos Fox has a silver quarter which lay in a wreck on the bottom of Lake Superior twenty-five years.

A telegram from Rev. J. T. Iddings, received yesterday afternoon, announces that he cannot be with us next Sabbath.

S. J. Rogers, farmer and lumberman, of Grand Junction, with wife and daughter, are stopping at A. R. Upright's.

Mrs. E. McLester and son, of Plainfield, Ills., who have been stopping at Mr. Ainslie's for a few weeks, returned home Wednesday.

The infant daughter of G. S. Thomas died Tuesday night, of cholera infantum, after an illness of only about 24 hours.

Mr. Geo. W. Mead, of Charlotte, visited Charlevoix last week, while prospecting for a possible location in the law and land title business.

W. J. Stevenson will get into his new shop this week, and tear down and move away the old shop now in rear of Woods & Co.'s harness shop.

An entertainment in elocution by two gentlemen of diminutive stature, announced for the 28th, at the opera house. Particulars next week.

While southern Michigan suffered greatly from frosts, Charlevoix and vicinity escaped unharmed. Tomatoes, peas, and beans are still thrifty, and in blossom.

John Bell has torn down the old building next to L. D. Bartholomew's hardware store, and will erect a new store building 21x40, to be finished as soon as possible.

Mr. C. W. Church and wife, of the office of state board of health, took in the cheap excursion from Lansing, and remembered the editor and family while in Charlevoix.

Mr. W. P. Brown has a bad of night-blooming cereus which will open in a few days. They will notify their friends in the afternoon of the day of its opening.

Dr. W. M. Preston, surgeon and homeopathic physician, remembers the JOURNAL this week with a business card, which will hereafter be found in our directory on the first page.

Next Sunday will be the first anniversary of the organization of the Congregational church in Charlevoix, and the event will be celebrated at the opera house with appropriate service.

The Chicago & West Michigan R. R. Co. disbursed $56,000 among its employes at Muskegon last Wednesday, being one month's wages. What a bonanza that would be for Charlevoix.

Will our neighbors up the lake print a fair and honest list of new buildings and improvements, like the one in this paper, and show to the outside world how much they are doing?

Miss Hattie Sneud, editress of the state news department of the Lansing Republican, visited Charlevoix last week, stopping with the family of J. S. Dixon. While in town she favored the JOURNAL with a call.

Mr. A. A. Nichols and wife of Lansing, visited Charlevoix during the past week. Mr. Nichols is a member of the firm of A. Clark & Co., carriage manufacturers, and took advantage of the excursion rates to see this region.

The burn of Chas. Root, of Marion township, burned Saturday night, destroying five acres of wheat not threshed, and some poultry and household goods. A cow which had been locked in was turned out. Supposed incendiary.

Mr. Frank E. A. Smith, of Charlotte, has been prospecting in this region for an opening in some manufacturing or mercantile business. He represents a firm of ambitious young men, and we hope he will decide to remain with us.

Geo. Budd, of the Sentinel, has been prospecting for a business for himself, and has gone this week to work it up. When started we shall probably have more to say of it. George has the reputation of being a faithful and thorough workman, and such a man seldom lets business drive him when working for himself, he drives the business. Success.

Particulars from Ionia in regard to the death of Virgil Van Vleck at Palo seem to indicate that he committed suicide while under mental depression caused by overwork. When found dead he was lying with the breech of his gun near his feet and the muzzle toward him. His accounts at the second national bank are all right and great sorrow is felt at his untimely death.

A street around the north side of Round lake would open up an excellent manufacturing district. We believe the owners could donate the water front and sell the balance of the property as soon as the factory was running for more than they can get for the whole as it is now without a street. But it is not necessary to donate. Just open a street, and give some one a chance to buy at a reasonably low figure.

Mr. John Bell informed us last Saturday that the frost had not touched his corn or other crops, and his tomatoes and peas were still green, thrifty, and in blossom. And several farmers living south of the village, report about the same state of facts. Those of our citizens having friends in other counties seeking new homes, should remember this among the inducements offered to locate here for agricultural pursuits.

Mr. C. H. Mead, of Lansing, has been traveling extensively through northern Michigan this summer, and came to Charlevoix this week for the first time. He is delighted with our location and surroundings, and predicts a prosperous future for business of all kinds. The opinion of a man who has traveled as much, and is so well acquainted with business as Mr. Mead, is of value, and should be remembered by those who stand, doubting, in the way of others, more ambitious and progressive.

The Grand Traverse Herald came out last week as a sixteen page paper, 112 columns, 76 of which were live advertisements. Verily, the good people of that burg have faith in printers' ink, and know where to use it to the best advantage.

The entertainment given by the Nashville Students at the opera house last Thursday evening, could not easily have been surpassed, and the house was crowded. They are a fine looking company, and their singing here fully sustains the reputation given them by the press of large cities.

Last Sunday evening about half past seven o'clock was witnessed a very brilliant and beautiful display of aurora borealis in the north and northwest. It rose in waves, many-colored like a rainbow, and the motion corresponding to the motion of Lake Michigan, which had been considerably disturbed by high winds during the day. We understand that the display about midnight was much more brilliant, but that was after our bed-time, consequently did not see it.

Miss Alice Canright, who has been stopping with friends in Charlevoix for a few weeks, has been teaching a class of girls in penmanship, offering a prize to the one making the most improvement. At the close of the term, it was decided that Miss Aggie Kirkpatrick had earned the prize. From the specimens shown we should judge that Miss Canright is a successful teacher, as all the pupils have shown decided improvement. She went home on Wednesday, but may decide to return and teach another class this fall. If so, we have no doubt she will be as successful as in the past.

In Grand Traverse the accounts are conflicting. Meeting one farmer he tells you things look black. Meeting another he will tell you everything is bright and green. From careful inquiry we gather that there has been considerable harm done in spots and on the low lands, but almost invariably the high lands have escaped. We do not think that, all in all, there has been much damage done through this and adjoining counties, although, as before said, there are localities where crops will be badly cut. Certain it is, that the farmers of Grand Traverse have escaped much better than many in other parts of this and neighboring states. Grand Traverse Herald.

Will some person tell us why an agricultural implement manufactory will not pay as well in Charlevoix as in any town in Michigan? Hardwood timber for frame work grows here; pine is more available than in many places further south; iron may be shipped in cutively by water without reshipment by rail, as most iron furnaces and mills are reached by water navigation, and the product will easily find a market in northern Michigan and Wisconsin. Such an institution would also add greatly to the inducements to some railroad company to extend their line to this village, and when built, add to the freight business of the road.

A correspondent suggests the following as the philosophy of frost visiting certain localities more disastrously than others contiguous: "It is nonsense to talk about its being the winds upon the higher lands that has exempted them from the depredations of frost; as the air on that frosty night, Sept. 9th, was as still as the grave, on the high lands as well as upon the lower. The philosophy of the matter seems to be this, that freezing is the natural state of all things when left a certain length of time without the life giving rays of the sun. The valleys and lower lands are in most places overshadowed by the hilltops for a length of time before sunset; hence their liability to freeze before the higher where the sun's rays linger longest. Of course this law is counteracted often by various causes; such as warm winds, the evaporation of heated lakes, springs, etc."

There are a few business men in this village who ought to be represented in the advertising columns of the JOURNAL, to show that they appreciate the beneficial influence of competition, if for no other reason. We aim to make our paper represent, as nearly as possible, the business interests and material growth and prosperity of the village, together with its resources and advantages. To do this requires some money and a good deal of hard work. Our article this week reviewing the building done here represents about fifteen hours tramping in the hot sun. The figures could be obtained in no other way than going from house to house and inquiring what had been done and how much it cost. A large number of extra copies have been purchased and sent by our citizens to friends in other counties or states, who probably would not have seen a paper or had any idea of what we were doing in this lively little burg if this work had not been done. Every paper so sent will be preserved, and be a record, not only of the article in question, but of the business men who patronize and support the paper which thus works for their town. This article will answer a question frequently asked by strangers, "well, what are you doing in the way of improvements?" Any man could answer by pointing in any direction to the new buildings everywhere visible. "But how much in dollars and cents?" "Don't know." An answer is now possible, and the names and figures are available. Gentlemen (who do not advertise), will you show your appreciation of this work by representing your business in our advertising columns? Take a space of some size, or a card in the business directory. You will get a benefit, if not in increased sales, you surely will by the addition of every family or every dollar of capital brought here by the influence of this paper. We shall not stop with this. Can't tell what will come next, but will find something. Give us a "boom" in advertising.

Mr. M. E. Byers, of Banks, who went to Colorado Springs a few weeks ago, wrote an account of his trip to the Bellaire Breeze, from which we make the following excerpt: "The chief industry of Kansas from Brookville west, is stock raising. Owing to a very dry spell of about three weeks' duration, the grass looks as though there was no nourishment in it for the cattle. The farther west we went the fewer were the settlements, until there were no settlements at all, except a house or two at the stations. The plains are very desolate looking, not a tree to be seen for hours and hours, and the wind dry and hot." What a contrast with our Michigan! Those seeking new homes will find these northern Michigan counties with more advantages and with fewer shortcomings, and withal a more desirable place for a young man to build a home and rear his family, than those western counties where the hot sun and parching wind in summer, and the "blizzards" of wind, rain, and snow in the winter make life implacant, and work very unprofitable. Many ambitious, hard-working families are lured to those western prairies,—barren plains, by the carefully-worded circulars of railroad companies who have land to sell, and a chain of circumstances make them slaves for years, and their honesty prevents their taking any unfair advantage in order to get money to come back to Michigan, which they would do if they could. We have met hundreds of men with a pitiful tale of suffering, and their advice invariably was, "Stay in Michigan." Mr. Byers' description agrees with many others we have read on the same subject.

Murder Will Out.

It seems that while everything is so quiet and peaceful around us, that it is impossible for a crime equal to murder in the first degree to take place in our midst without any apparent feeling or sympathy, but alas, such is life! On Monday, 10th inst., at the clothing house of Upright, Emrey & Co., a wholesale slaughter of ready-made clothing began. From that time until now the clerks have had their coats off, throwing overcoats, pants, vests and full suits in every direction. The company's object is to close out their clothing at cost. Call and get an overcoat for $2.00.

Bay Springs.

The late frost, said to have done so much damage to crops in nearly every part of the state, I notice has been mostly confined to low lands in this town.

Nearly everybody in this vicinity are now keeping up their cattle. Mr. Chapman started the good move. He has a large potato patch, without fence, and proposing to use Paris green to kill the bugs, cattle owners took the hint, and few cattle are now seen on this old range. A scare like this does good sometimes. It has made the cows very handy to find every night and morning.

The rail "pound" constructed on one side of Mr. Chapman's barn does not work to complete satisfaction. An Indian pony imprisoned there a few nights ago concluded that he'd rather be on the outside, and charged over the fence. Mrs. Addis' "fancy stock" got imprisoned there, too, but he charged under the barn and got fast.

Sunday night last we had a grand display of northern lights. Some of its rays seemed quite near the tops of the trees.

A ten acre watermelon patch near the head of Pine lake just now would not be a bad thing. No one seems to have missed one this year.

The threshing machine is abroad in the land, and the yield of grain is better than last year, so far as heard from. FRANK.

RAISING A CHURCH DEBT.

BY REV. WASHINGTON GLADDEN.

The Methodist Church at New Albion had long been struggling under a load of debt. Its edifice, built in the dark times following the war, was an ambitious piece of architecture; the church of the future beyond a doubt, since it was much larger than the congregation, and the pews were still vacant which the sanguine builders had expected to see filled by the men who were expected to pay off the mortgages. The Rev. Mr. Thorpe, the pastor, had carried this debt now for two years. It had been the burden of his days and the nightmare of his dreams. At length he had brought his congregation to the point of attacking it. He had made several anxious pilgrimages to the rich Methodists in neighboring cities, but found small encouragement. It was settled that the Methodists of New Albion must slumber their own load. Accordingly, the first Sunday of October was devoted to a carefully-planned effort for the payment of the debt. Mr. Thorpe had concluded to dispense with the services of a "financier" and to direct his own forces. There was to be no regular service in the church, but the public were invited to meet at 10 o'clock in the forenoon, and, by the grace of God, the meeting would not adjourn, Mr. Thorpe said, until the debt was paid. A collation was provided in the basement, so that the people might spend the day in the work.

The debt amounted to $22,000, and when the meeting opened in the morning $17,000 were at once subscribed, this amount having been secured before and by private conference with the older contributors. The excellent start awakened great enthusiasm, and for a time subscriptions came in rapidly. I feel loth to report the failure of the people's ability seemed to have been reached, and the list footed up only about $2,000. Mr. Thorpe kept his forces well in hand, however, and showed no signs of wavering. Exhortations and appeals were interspersed with singing; a judicial and energetic committee did a great deal of personal work with individuals; messengers were dispatched to labor with absentees. But it seemed evident that the large gifts had all been gathered in, and those who were still a deficiency of $3,000, that the small subscriptions yet to be obtained would by no means supply.

As Mr. Franklin, of the Congregational Church, walked home after the service with his pastor, they passed the door of the Methodist Church.

"Let's look in a moment," said the pastor, "and see how they are getting on."

They sat down on one of the back seats and watched the proceedings. From Mr. Thorpe's occasional remarks they learned the situation of affairs, and saw that the case was probably hopeless, though the resolute leader did not for a moment accept to such a conclusion.

As they walked along, Mr. Franklin said:

"Making a strong fight, aren't they?"

"Yes."

"But they will not take the fort?"

"I don't know."

"I do. They have got to the sticking point, and they will not get past it."

"Pity," said Mr. Strong, sententiously.

After a moment's thought Mr. Franklin added, with a new interest:

"Is it lawful to pull your fellow-creature out of a pit on the Sabbath day?"

"I should say so, especially if he is trying to get out himself."

"Lawful to hitch up your horse to pull him out?"

"Yes," laughed the minister.

"Well, you go home and get your lunch and I'll get mine and have Major put into the buggy. I'll be around here before 1 o'clock, and we'll see what we can do."

"All right."

It was not long before the good white horse came at a weekday pace to the door of the parson-ge, and the friends were soon whirling away.

"Now, we've got to be calm," said the banker. "My first thought was to call only on some of our own people, but I am not inclined to give some of the rest a chance. The Episcopalians and the Free Baptists have a heavy debt of their own, and the Advent is at work aside to help much. We must visit the others. Brn made quick call on the Lyle Church folks, Ellsworth on the Episcopalians, Thompson on the Free Baptists, and you and I will look out for our own."

They were stopping at Mr. Briggs' mansion door, and the master of the house answered the bell.

"Why, good evening, all! Drive in. Sorry to see the Methodists in such a fix in paying their church debt. Will you go and stand in the vestibule of your church and waylay as many as you can of your strongest men, as they go into the afternoon service, and get subscriptions from them? Start the paper yourself. Then ask Mr. Phelps to take up a collection before the sermon for the same object. Get cash subscriptions, payable to-morrow at my bank. Report the amount to me at Mr. Strong's house by 4 o'clock, sharp. Will you do it?"

"What a steamboat you are!" said Brinsmaid, laughing.

"Will you do it?" said Franklin, stremmatically. "No time for nonsense, old fellow."

"Yes, I'll do it."

"All right. Good-by"

And the white horse was soon flying down the street.

None of the other churches had afternoon services, and all that could be done in them must be done by personal application to a few of the most prosperous members. But Mr. Franklin had selected the right man as canvasser in each society, and after they had been set at work he and his pastor returned to their own parish, which they divided between them, entering before 4 o'clock to see a good proportion of its most generous members. At that hour they all met at the parsonage, as by agreement, bringing with them a much-larger sum than the most sanguine of them had hoped to get.

"They came down handsomely," said Brinsmaide. "Three or four refused to give anything, but most of them had their names down before they knew it. It dropped on them so suddenly-like that they hadn't time to hunt up excuses. The old doctor warmed up to the business beautifully, and begged like a professional. Didn't suppose it was in him. They brought in nearly $100 in the locks, beside all I got from individuals."

The others had much the same story to tell. Sympathy with the Methodists in their courageous efforts was universal, and it had found a generous expression.

"Now each of you sit down and write a short letter," said Franklin, "explaining that the amount you have collected is from friends in your church, naming the amount and stating where it may be called for to-morrow, and we'll go over at once and send the cheque over to Brother Thorpe. I trust he is lobbing out yet, but it must be pretty tough for a man who doesn't believe in the perseverance of the saints to hang on to such a poor promise."

It was about half-past 4 when Mr. Franklin and his friends entered the Methodist Church. The back seats were all occupied, so they stood in the space behind the pews and looked on. The church was pretty well filled, and Mr. Thorpe was still keeping up a lively fire of appeal and argument, but there were no responses, and it was plain that hope had departed from most of the solicitors.

"Will you walk forward and take seats, gentlemen?" said one of them.

"No, thank you," said Franklin, "we are only lobby members. How do you get on?"

"Slowly."

And the solicitor shook his head dolefully.

"How much have you got?"

"Only a little over twenty-five thousand."

"Why don't you stop where you are?"

"Then we lose everything. The greater share of the heavy subscriptions are conditional upon the raising of the whole debt."

"Won't your subscribers make them unconditional?"

"No. We've begged them to but they are obdurate."

"Pity, isn't it?"

"Yes sir. It will be a hard blow if we fail now."

The discouraged gentleman walked away.

Mr. Franklin's air had been so indifferent that he had not ventured to ask him for anything.

"Send up your letter, Brinsmade," whispered Franklin, "Get that small boy to take it up."

The small boy bobbled up the aisle and handed the envelope to the pastor. Mr. Thorpe tore it open eagerly.

"Hallelujah!" shouted the impetuous Methodist. "Brethren, listen to this. The First Congregational Church of New Albion sends greeting to the First Methodist Church with a pledge of $1,643 to be paid to-morrow at 12 o'clock on a check upon the First National Bank." This is signed on behalf of the church by James M. Brinsmade."

The reading of the letter was followed by a storm of cheers and "Hallelujahs" from the Methodist responses, in the midst of which the organ struck up the Doxology, and the whole congregation rose to its feet and sang it with a tremendous energy.

"Will the other Brinsmade come forward," shouted Mr. Thorpe. But before he had time or insist on this a little girl was in mounting the pulpit with another envelope, which the pastor received with trembling hands.

This letter stated that $755, the gift of a few friends in the Universalist church, would be on deposit the next day, at the same hour and place. Over this the tumult was redoubled, one excited brother mounting a seat, and calling for "the second verse of the Doxology."

"Better not protract the agony," said Franklin to Ellsworth. "Let us send up our notes together."

The minister, who had now for six years been in a state of continuous nervous strain, in whose heart confidence had given way to anxiety, and anxiety was fast changing to fear, who discouraged and was on the point of crying for help, was so completely overcome by the contents of the other two envelopes that he sat down in his chair and could not speak for a moment; but at length he arose and half sobbed out:

"Two more, brethren. One from friends in the Baptist Church, with a pledge of $925, and one from friends in the Second Congregational Church, with a promise of $1,840. God bless them, every one!"

This time they were too excited to sing, but there was a volley of amens in response to the last ejaculation, and men and women all over the house were laughing and crying like children.

"Give us the footing now, Brother Harrison," said the minister at length to the Treasurer, who was keeping account of the subscriptions.

"Thirty thousand, one hundred and fifty-five dollars," was the answer.

"Less than $2,000 more are wanted," said Mr. Thorpe. "What do you say to that?"

"Two hundred dollars more for me!" was the response from one of the heaviest of the subscribers; and then the supplementary subscriptions, large and small, came pouring in for ten minutes faster than the Treasurer could record them. As soon as there was a short pause he summed up the amount again, and rising to his feet, quietly said:

"Thirty-two thousand, four hundred and sixty dollars. $460 for shrinkage."

The scene that followed can only be imagined by those who know what an insolvent a church debt is to a devoted congregation, and who are familiar with the ways in which Methodists are wont to express their feelings.

"I preceive," said Mr. Thorpe, rising to his feet, after the tempest had subsided, "that all these pledges are to be paid to-morrow, at noon, at the First National Bank. It is easy to guess who is at the bottom of all this business, and I see him now, standing near the door."

"No seems for me," whispered the banker to his minister. "I'm going. Make my excuses."

And he slipped out of the door and walked quickly away.

"Walter Franklin is the man," continued the parson, "and he is leaving the house this moment. Will some one bring him back?"

But that was a vain suggestion. Mr. Franklin, as everybody knew, would not be brought back.

"Mr. Franklin's pastor must answer for him then," said the minister; and Mr. Thorpe was equal to the occasion, and did it well.

"Brethren and sisters, I am sure that the plan of aiding them in their difficult undertaking was conceived and executed in the right spirit, and that nevertheless, been supported in the heartiest manner by the gentlemen on whom he had called; that the whole scheme was the inspiration of a moment, and the front of the battle was carried by a coup de main. I am sure that he trusted that the result of it would be, not only the emancipation of the Methodist Church from the burden of debt, but the strengthening of the bonds of fellowship among the churches of New Albion. To that wish there were many fervent responses, and after a prayer of thanksgiving by the pastor and singing of "Blest be the Tie that Binds," the congregation broke up.

The day will never be forgotten by any who had part in its doings, and the fruit of the seed then sowed will be reaped in the increasing clarity of many generations.—The Century.

The Nail City.

Wheeling is one of the most extensive manufacturing points on the Ohio, and to point out and vouchers it takes the lead of all the other places. I presume not less than 40,000,000,000 nails are made here every year and they are shipped all over the world.

Wheeling is known as the nail city. Its factories and nails and furnaces and glass houses employ thousands of people, and here as plainly as can be found elsewhere in the country is shown the disastrous result of that burning point in the conflict between labor and capital, the "strike." When strikes occur they bring a Sunday calm, and all kinds of business feel such a dull week's rest. It is from these factories that the smoke and sulphur come. They spread out and mount smoke consumers, and clouds of the black stuff settle over the place until everything is darkened, and the sulphur kills the grass and the flowers. Every day smoke is business, and every bucket full represents so much money; and, as money is what nails symbolize, I don't know that it is such a bad thing to have one's old always before and behind, above and below him, and the shock of his first recess of his abiding place.—Mary Jane" in Courier-Journal.

Postoffice Red Tape.

When a citizen of Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., wishes to send a letter to a friend in the opposite village on the Canadian side of the river, he directs it, prepays the postage, and puts it in the postoffice on the American side; then, in order to reach the postoffice on the Canadian side, which is about one mile distant, the letter goes to Detroit through the United States mails, crosses from Detroit to Windsor, where it enters the Canadian mails, and is sent over Canadian routes back to the South, reaching the Canadian office there in about ten days from the time it started —ten days to go one mile. But when one is in a hurry he goes across the river himself and talks to the other fellow; he doesn't write.

By the State of Mississippi only 1,250 women sold their eggs; 36,000, while no less than 39,000 declared they were just 30.

The Alligator Fever.

It beats all how a Northern man does hanker to shoot an alligator just as soon as he gets beyond the Ohio river, and the further South he goes the stronger grows the feeling. It's a sort of "buck fever," and nothing will cure it except the gore of the reptile. A chap from Rhode Island went down to Biloxi from New Orleans with the party. Small alligators were plenty enough along the creeks and ditches, and very time the Chan State man saw one he almost kicked his boots off. He tackled everybody around Biloxi for an alligator hunt, and he finally paid a darky $3 to drive him to a lake four or five miles away, where the saurians were said to be numerous enough to crowd each other out of water. The boys had been over in the morning and fixed things. A rope was tied to either end of a water-soaked log and led into the bushes, and no sooner had the hunter gone down and discovered a movement in the water than he opened fire.

"Dat's yer game, boss," said the darky, as he seated himself in the shade, and the way that old log was bombarded was a caution. The man made eye shots and line shots and dead shots, and after he had fired about seventy-five times he began to wonder why his game didn't turn tops up.

"Taken a heap o' lead, boss, but you is a terrible hin mighty bull," encouraged the darky, and the bombardment was renewed with a determination to die in the last ditch. Pretty soon a man broke from the bushes to the left, and in a voice of authority called out:

"Shooting alligators out of season is an offense punished by a fine of not less than $10."

"Sa-ay?"

"How many shots have you fired?"

"Only thirty-nine."

"Shooting off a revolver in the State of Mississippi, except in self-defense, is a fine of $5 for each time! Have you a permit?"

"Permit for what?"

"To shoot at Col. Ford's alligators. If not he can recover damages not to exceed $500. Did you cross that road?"

"Yes."

"That's trespass, and the fine is not less than $25. You must come with me."

"But, sir—I—"

"I will bring up my horse and bugger and you must go the county seat."

The "constable" started. So did Rhode Island. They were willing to dire-tions. The Rhode Islander came into Biloxi on a canter, settled his hotel bill without stopping to count the change, and leaving his satchel in the dusted off along the railroad track as if called to a deathbed. When I found him in Mobile a few days later he had lost much of his whiskers and blackened his eye-brows. He also complained of a lame back and corns on his feet.

"Say?" says he, as he carefully looked around for listeners, "if old Mississippi feels so stuck up over a few poor old alligators and swindles you can't keep 'em and be lunged to her! I'd rather shoot a crow any time than an alligator!"—Detroit Free Press.

Sanitary Value of Foliage.

Prof. Gorez, of the University of Geneva, points out that the functions of trees in streets are not limited to acting as screens for annoying sanitary arrangements. They temper the heat and serve as a protection against dust; the evaporation from their leaves tends to keep the surrounding air cool and moist, and, as one of the best means of refreshing the air of a sick-room is to place in it plants and branches, and sprinkle the room with water, a like effect is produced by trees. Sun-light is necessary to health; but trees, if not too freely planted, also act as preservers of sunlight.—The enormous elevation of their leaves and swaying of their branches admitting the light in sufficient quantity, and in addition serving, moreover, to protect the eyes from the noonday glare. So far from spreading fever, they are agents which help to purify it; the evaporation from their leaves determines a current from above, and the fresh air thus brought down assists in driving away the heated and dust-impregnated gases of the streets. Another useful property of trees is that, while in long dry weather it moistens the surrounding atmosphere, thus rendering it fitter to breathe, this effect, which is due to evaporation, ceases in wet weather.

"Bread and Cheese and Kisses."

"But what do you suppose we are going to live on?" inquired a young lady of her slightly impecunious lover after the latter had made the shock of his proposal had somewhat worn off.

"Love on!" said the enthusiastic and visionary youth, "why, darling, we will live on bread and cheese and kisses."

"Yes; well, it may be all right enough, but it's my opinion that bread and cheese, with thin slices of kisses in between 'em, are mighty light sandwiches for a steady diet. You'll have to talk roast beef-beef and strawberry shortcake to me."—Texas Siftings.

What She Did Know.

A little girl was called upon at school to speak a piece; but she told the teacher that she did not know any. "Surely you can say something," said the teacher, "any little verse will do." Still the child persisted that she knew nothing to recite. "Well, say anything," said the teacher, equally persistent. So the little girl got up and said: "A cat run away."—Carl Pretzel's Weekly.

A stand fell down with a crash,
A number of men it did mash,
But the story is short,
Were soon well again,
St. Jacobs Oil cured every pain.

A lady who lives in Duluth,
Went crazy on a visit to Duluth,
He rubbed the pain foul,
With St. Jacobs Oil,
It cured him, and this is the truth.

Too Late.

A New York broker who reached a village in Ohio the other evening was interviewed, soon after playing his game on the register, by a farmer, who said: "I read with you had arrived here this afternoon?"

"My excitement?" replied the broker.

"Well, I should say so. My son Daniel was convicted of stealing a calf this morning, and has been held to the higher court. You ought to have been here."

"Why, I'd have had you on the jury, and you could have cheered Daniel sick of the sentence. Our fellers don't look at such things as you New Yorkers do."—Wall Street News.

"LOOK OUT FOR THE ENGINE."

I am a locomotive engineer, and have been for twenty years, and am now running on the Maine Central Railroad. Life on an engine, as all engineers know is very trying to health and strength. The continual jar of the engine and strain on our long runs all tend to weaken the kidneys and urinary organs. In addition to this, ten years ago I met with a severe accident, and I was taken from under my engine with severe internal injuries, which gave me great pain. I was laid up for six months, and suffered more than I can describe—and more than I wish to suffer again. I resumed work, but my kidneys began to disturb me, and my nervous system seemed to be out of order. I could not sleep, as my nerves demanded such constant attention that I was kept awake a great part of the night to retain—caused severe pains. I employed the best medical skill in Portland and elsewhere, but continued to grow worse.

I was persuaded to try Hunt's Remedy, as I found that many of my friends in Portland had used it with great success, and I had no faith that it would reach my case. However, I sent for a half dozen bottles at one of the drug stores in Portland, and from the use of the first bottle found a great relief. My water was made better, and the pain in the back and limbs greatly relieved. I continued to use and finished two bottles in all, and it has been to me a second trial of health and strength. I gladly and cheerfully recommend it to those troubled in a similar manner, and feel that I owe my present good health to its use.

CAUSE FOR ALARM.

ALBERT G. CURTIS, Brunswick, Me., writes us on May 15, 1883: "I feel she has suffered very much as a result of kidney disease and backache. I have been using Hunt's Remedy for a short time, and find it a perfect cure. Hunt's Remedy is certainly a wonderful medicine, and I feel that every one troubled in a similar manner should use it. I have recommended it to many friends, and all speak highly of it. Write for our pamphlet. Mention this paper.

WELLS' "Room on Coughs." 15c., 50c. & $1. Complete, permanent cure. Coughs, sore throat, etc.

LADIES A children's hands & shoes can't run over it. Lyon's Patent Heel Stiffeners are used.

HUMORS.

The animal riddle of the body, when poorly nourished, become vitiated and cause eruptions to appear on the surface. The age of puberty, the change of life, intemperance and sexual excesses, are also fruitful causes of humors, and vary in character from a pimple, watery sensation to a positive diseases and severe pain. Hood's Sarsaparilla, correcting the diseases of the functions, enriches the fluids, purifies the blood, and causes the disease to disappear. It is one of health and vigor.

Pimples.

Hazeltine Place, New York had so many pimples and blackheads on his face that he was ashamed. He tried various remedies without effect. Hood's Sarsaparilla purified his blood, and all the troubles disappeared.

Ringworm.

My brother had a violent ringworm which he tried several remedies in vain. He then took Hood's Sarsaparilla, and after using it a few months he was entirely cured. He has remained well for two years. H. C. HOOKER, Rochester, N. Y.

Rheumatism.

My father has been troubled with a humor settling in his joints for years. Last winter he was confined to the house for three months. Hood's Sarsaparilla has done him more good than all other medicines he has ever taken. C. I. HOOD, Lowell, Mass.

Boils.

My daughter was troubled with a humor which appeared in boils. Hood's Sarsaparilla has entirely cured her. C. I. HOOD, Lowell, Mass.

Another Life Saved.

Mrs. Harriet Simmons, of Cincinnati, Ohio, writes: Hard's last words to me were, 'Mother, if I die, I know I were cold, which ended in a chill from which I never rallied, and in a few hours I was dead. Now, I am sure, but she continued to get worse, and finally raised a cough which settled on her lungs. We called in a physician, and he pronounced her case hopeless. We called in a second physician, but he could do nothing for her. She continued to get worse, and finally raised blood. Then we called in a third physician, who said that Consumption had her in its grasp, and that he could not cure her. We then got Dr. Wm. Hall's Balsam for the Lungs, and before she had taken one bottle she began to get better, and by the time she had taken three bottles she was entirely cured. She is now as well and hearty as ever. Sold by druggists.

Springvale.

Severe frosts now a days.

Benson Fosdick now owns a mule.

Several citizens on the sick list, including J. E. Chew.

Mr. J. K. Feick is erecting a log structure 30x20 feet.

The hum of the threshing machine is now heard in the land.

Teachers' wages have been increased in this township, and also the number of months in the school year.

Milford Spencer, while getting hay out of a mow, cut one of his hands on a scythe that hung in the way.

The heavy frosts have destroyed the plums in the wild plum orchard, and badly damaged all growing crops.

JACQUES.

South Arm.

Mr. Hiram Warner, supervisor of Warner township, was a guest of J. R. Vance last Monday.

Mr. Henning's little girl six years old died of scarlet fever. The others are slowly convalescing.

Master Charles and Miss Nellie Church, of Banks, have been spending a week with friends beyond East Jordan.

A party of people by the name of Sudman, from near Boyne Falls, visited relatives on the peninsula last week.

Miss Papineau, of Charlevoix, finished her school near the Intermediate lake August 31, and went home the next day.

Master Louis Isaman, aged four years, youngest child of D. Isaman, who has been living with his grandmother, Mrs. Olney, since he was an infant, has come home to stay for an indefinite period.

Miss Scofield closed her four months school in Echo on Sept. 7th with appropriate exercises. The event was saddened by the near approaching death of one of the scholars, Adelaide, which occurred soon after school closed.

Adelaide Higgins, aged seven years, oldest child of Peter Higgins, of Echo, died last Friday afternoon, after an illness of several months. She had the scarlet fever in the spring, followed by dropsy, and a complication of other diseases wasted her away. She was much loved and respected by her school-mates and friends. The afflicted family have the sympathy of friends.

F. A. S.

The frost of last Saturday and Sunday nights was not confined to northern Michigan alone, but was general throughout this and many other states, doing a large amount of damage to crops which had not fully matured. The frost of Sunday night was very severe and was something almost unheard of in this part of the country at this time of the year, but as this is a decidedly off year, such surprises are to be expected.

Petoskey Democrat.

A fishing excursion of two days, 20 miles south on the Intermediate lake was remarkable in its make up and achievements. Two revered clergy, a head of department in the university with the added honor; a distinguished legal ex-regent, and three solid business men, made the company of disciples in the two partner fishing boats. The lake was a long, narrow and beautiful Galilee. The toiling was long and benighted, and the Peter could say that he had taken nothing. But his companions, especially those in the other ship beckoned that a big haul was theirs. Fifty-two inches in length and twenty-five pounds in weight describe within a small fraction the mighty muskalonge that with terrific struggles yielded to his captors, and was borne between two. Eight handsome pickerel and numerous small fry pinned the eclipse of their honors to this huge wanderer of the waters Charlevoix resort celebrated joyously as "the boys came marching home." * * * Some are disappearing from their summer nests, and by next week old birds and young will have flown southward, and with strong wing and clear voice, we hope; and these shores will be silent of the life and song that have gladdened them. A resident community however abide hardy, larger and more rapidly growing, and better domiciled than we had known. Charlevoix correspondence of Detroit Herald.

Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally. It acts directly upon the blood and the mucous surfaces of the system. Price 75c. For sale by Dr. Crouter.

He Bought a Box of Sermons.

Stephen S. Mitchell, a Saco, Me., druggist, went to Boston the other day, dropped in at an auction of unclaimed freight, and purchased a large box. He took it to the Parker House. When Mr. Mitchell opened the box he found that he was the owner of about 2,000 manuscript sermons. These extended over a whole lifetime, each having inscribed the date and the locality of its delivery. The clergyman employed a system of stage directions, and had written along the margin of his pages such suggestions as these: "Deliver this passage in solemn tones." "Scornful smile after 'never'." "Pause long enough to count 25 after this passage." "Close Bible with a violent slam after this passage." "Contemplate ceiling in attitude of adoration at this point." "Sarcastic wave of hand." "Rapid gesture." Manuscript sermons do not possess a weird charm for Mr. Mitchell, and he will dispose of them by giving one to every customer until exhausted.

Sharp Practice.

A tag on a pair of boots in front of a Hebrew establishment on South Illinois-st. reads "$1.25, not each." The strange device was clear only after the contemporaneous history of mercantile life on that thoroughfare was learned. A rival of the above house advertises boots at $1.25. A customer makes a purchase, and the guileful shopkeeper demands $2.50 $1.25 for each boot. The same house displays shirts at 12½ cents each. The yeoman goes in, tosses down a quarter, and asks for "two of them shirts," whereat the brilliant salesman behind the counter declines to sell two, and for one must have the exact change to the half cent, or the price is doubled or trebled at the alternative. Indianapolis News.

One Touch of Nature.

A boy met a youthful acquaintance in the street, and exclaimed: "Didn't I tell you, Jack Busby, that I was goin' to whip you when I caught you out?" "Go away' Bill, I don't want to fight." "Maybe you don't think I can whip you?" "It don't make any difference whether you can whip me or not. I don't want to fight. My mother—" "Yes, your mother knows I can whale you." "My mother is dead. She died this morning." "I didn't know it, Jack, and you mustn't think hard of me. I ain't got nothing against you. I wouldn't hit you, and if mother boy was ter come up and hit you now, I'd knock him down. There, don't cry. What yer got in that bundle?" "A black dress." "Come on and let me carry it for you."

Arkansas Traveler.

What fact appeals more strongly to the mind of thinking people in favor of at least a greatly modified tariff, if not absolute free trade, than the admitted truth that the depressed condition of many of the large industries of this country is such as to challenge serious consideration. The New York Herald calls attention to this subject and says that "as the symptoms are nearly alike in every case, it ought to be very easy to prescribe the cause and prescribe a remedy. The fact that many commodities are almost unmarketable, that there is an excess of supply over the immediate demand, and that prices have reached the lowest limits compatible with a continuance of production, shows beyond all reasonable doubt that the productive capacity of manufacturers has outrun the power of the nation to absorb and consume the products. In less than four years the industries of the country have passed from a period of great prosperity to one of stagnation." Well, what other remedy suggests itself, if it is not a material reduction of an excessive tariff, which alone has caused this condition of things? The time was, no doubt, when a protective tariff was necessary; but then our industries were in their infancy, and capital, being proverbially timid, hesitated at investment without protection. Now, those protected industries are strong enough to cope with competition. At any rate, as the productions exceed the home demand, it would seem to be a good plan to seek outside markets, by adopting a reciprocity policy with other people and exchanging our manufactured goods for their raw materials. Chippewa Democrat.

Pilfered Paragraphs.

A new cheap morning newspaper is soon to be started at Buffalo, N. Y. Leslie Thom and F. F. Fargo are named as editors.

Now is the time your horses and cattle need attention. To prevent disease and tone up the system you will find Parmelee's Condition Powders unexcelled. Full pounds 25 cents. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co. 8-60

The whistle of a locomotive is heard 2,500 yards, the noise of a train 2,000 yards, the report of a musket and the bark of a dog 1,000 yards, the roll of a drum 1,200 yards, the croak of a frog 500 yards, and a cricket's chirp 300 yards.

A bride complained to her husband that she had been too busy all day to get off her best shoes, and that unhappy man, who had already discovered several make-ups in her complexion, exclaimed in abnormal "Great heads of Sarah!"

A common-looking uneducated bug, the locust, can lay eggs that keep perfectly for 17 years, while all the science of the 19th century hasn't produced a plan whereby the egg of a hen can be kept fresh through a single winter.

"It might have been wise," remarked a Bostonian, "to have kept the churches open these cool summer Sundays, and shut them instead when the bitter winds of January are blowing, but it wouldn't have been fashionable. Comfort rarely is."

Almost Marvelous.

The way Parmelee's Blood Purifier works upon the human system. It is such a thorough purifier, it strikes at the root of the disease and by its perfect workings effects a cure almost before the patient is aware. It seizes upon every particle of poisonous matter in the system, expels it, and instills new health and vigor through the entire body. $1.00 per bottle. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co. 9

"Well, said a jaunty son-in-law, bounding in from the office with his father's mail, "you've got a postal here from ma, and she says she's met a cyclone." "Pity the cyclone," was the old gentleman's crusty reply, as he jabbed his pen into the inkstand.

"I have been married now," boasted a proxy old fellow, "more than thirty years, and have never given my wife a cross word." "That's because you never dared, uncle," said a little nephew who lived with them. "If you had, auntie would have made you jump."

Quick Relief.

Hamilton's Jamaica Ginger Tonic and Pain Cure is not only a valuable internal remedy for all stomach and bowel difficulties, such as Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Heartburn, Flatulence, Diarrhœa, Dysentery, Cramps, and Colic, but cannot be excelled for an outward application in Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Sciatica, Sprains, side and backache, and strains in any part of the body. Used freely with warmth and rubbing it gives quick relief. Price 25 and 50 cents per bottle. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co.

There is a good deal of talk in the papers and among citizens because a county English woman is the wife of a Chinaman, and lives with him and helps him do the washing. There is nothing about the affair to create talk. If she had married a lazy white man, who would get drunk on the money she earned, and beat her, instead of helping her earn the money, there would not be much talk about it. Give the woman a chance. A Chinaman is not pretty, but he works like a steam engine, and don't whip his wife.

Medicine for Children

Must not only be effective but so compounded that no harm will result from the use. Such a preparation for worms do which almost every child is subject is Parmelee's Vermifuge. Worm Candies, which are made from the best ingredients, particularly adapted to this use. They work quickly, surely, and harmlessly, passing off the worms after they are dissolved. Do not neglect the children, even though they do not complain. Worms are almost always present. Price 25 cents per box. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co. 9

The Chicago Times says that the 80 newsboys who have regularly attended the Sunday school at the rink tabernacle in that city were on Sunday given new suits of woolen clothing, at a cost of $1,700, and that they will be given a free excursion to Woodstock by the Illinois Central road. This is genuine, practical christianity, and will do more to elevate and humanize the street gamin than volumes of nicely-worded homilies. If there were more of this sort of missionary work, and somewhat less of that which forgets the suffering and sin at home to look after the needs of foreign heathen, the true significance of missionary work would be better understood and appreciated by people of the world.

One of the Invalids.

F. M. PARMELEE: Dear Sir, I have been taking your Dyspepsia, Blood, Liver and Kidney Cure for some time past, and have received more benefit from it than from all of the $500 worth of doctor's medicines that I have used in the last few years. Before taking the cure I was weak and tired out all the time, but now I can work all day without fatigue. Would not be without it in the house. Believe it is one of the best medicines in the world. Yours,

ROBERT A. LOVERIDGE, Jr.,
Somers Lane, Pa.

The last spike was driven in the Northern Pacific railroad, at a point 55 miles west of Helena, Montana, last Saturday. There were about 5,000 people present, notwithstanding the exercises occurred in an isolated place at the western base of the Rocky mountains. Wm. M. Evarts was the orator of the occasion, and delivered a fine address. Speeches were also made by President Villard, Secretary of the Interior Teller, Lord Lionel Sackville, the German minister to America, and General Grant. The one thousand feet of uncompleted track was quickly laid by three hundred workmen. During the progress of the work, which was witnessed by the foreigners with amazement, the band played and the people shouted. When nearly completed a cannon salute was fired by a detachment of infantry present. The last spike was driven by Mr. H. C. Davis, assistant general passenger agent of the road, who drove the golden spike, and this was the same as that first driven by him. The end was reached as the sun was setting behind the mountains. The enthusiasm of the people was indescribable. Thus brought to a happy conclusion a very remarkable event in American history.

ON THE STAIRWAY.

Go up higher, sturdy schoolboy,
Do not loiter now below;
You are wanted at the summit,
Busby, bravely, upward go.

Go up higher, little maiden,
Tripping lightly at the start;
By and by you may grow weary,
Yet go up, be strong of heart.

Go up higher in your lessons;
Go up higher in your play;
Step by step, you'll climb the stairway,
Go up higher every day.

Burdette's Advice to Young Men.

Burlington Hawkeye.

Keep up with the procession, my boy. Don't hang back in the breeching. You may be able to make things drag a little, but you can't stop the team, and you'll have to come along.

There was a man, an eminent mathematician, Dr. Larder of England, who published a treatise to prove that no steamship could ever cross the Atlantic ocean, and the steamer Sirius a few weeks later brought the first copies of the pamphlet to America. This same eminent scientist also staked "his reputation as a man of science," before the house of commons, on his statement that no railway train could ever go faster than ten miles an hour, and the slightest curve would invariably throw it off the track. Babinet, the French calculator, declared that no telegram could ever be transmitted from Europe through the Atlantic to America. There was a man right here in America only one hundred years ago, who opposed the rebellion of colonies because he knew it would be a failure. There was a man who laughed himself sore at Fulton's absurd ideas about steamboats. There were members of congress who wanted Morse shut up in an insane asylum because he talked about a telegraph, which was an impossibility. There was a man who said you never could build a bridge across the Mississippi. There was a man who said you could never raise wheat on the great American desert. There was a man who "knew" that nothing but a steam horse could ever trot in less than 2:40. There was a man "knew" you couldn't make the sun draw your portrait. There was a man who "knew" you never could find a better light than a whale oil lamp. There was another man who knew you could never beat lard oil. There was another man who said Colonel Drake was a gibbering idiot because he said he could pump a better oil than lard oil out of the ground like water. There was another man who said Edison was insane when he talked about an electric light. There was another man who said the phonograph was a clever trick of ventriloquism. There was a man who said the telephone was a newspaper lie. There was a man in England who led mobs of agricultural laborers to destroy threshing machines. There was a man in America who "knew" the invention of the sewing machine meant starvation for the poor seamstress. And there is a man to day who "knows" the Indians can never be civilized. There is man who "knows" we have reached the limit of human progress. There is a man who "knows" the people are helplessly enslaved, and will never rise to resist themselves. There is a man who "knows" that all politics are corrupt, all politicians mercenary, the civil service rotten to the core, and our social life is honey-combed with decay.

Now, my dear boy, there's only one way for you to escape that man's whining, and obstinate, unlish opposition to every thing. Keep so far ahead of him you can't hear him. And do you keep moving and drag him along. Rasp him with the double trees; he has to come, for the old chariot never stands still a second. The difference between you and the man, my boy, is that you run, and he is dragged. You spring along with your eyes open, your head erect, and you help to keep things moving. He has his feet set in the road, his eyes shut tight, his back up on his shoulders and his heart under the wheels. Every time you make a leap you throw the dust back in his face.

Don't, my boy, whatever you do, don't get back inside that man. Don't have any breeching on your harness. Put on the breast-collar and that is enough; you'll run more lightly and feel freer. Let the man in the breeching hang back. All that you have to do is to step out, keep pace with the times, sing as you march, and keep the man in the breeching so covered with dust, the world will only know he's there by the dirt around him. It may be, Tecumachus, you will run a little fast sometimes; it may be that you will kick over the traces in your exuberance of spirit; you may sometimes want to strike a 2:19 gait on a 3:20 road; you may need more curb than whip, but go it my boy. There is a good driver on the seat, and a firm hand on the lines, and I'd rather see you coming down the long vistas of history with the bit in your teeth, your heels in the air, the brake rod sprung, and the dashboard flying than down on your haunches, your eyes shut, and your back bowed, the lash on your flanks, and your collar up to your ears, your legs set like crowbars and the dust of the whole team flying in your face, while you hang back in the breeching and only come along because you can't help it.

The Campaign in Iowa.

In the political campaigns of the past, the republicans of Iowa have had everything their own way in that State. The usual majority for their ticket has been about 50,000. The democrats were not able to get up much enthusiasm against such odds. In fact, there were never any steps taken to perfect an organization of the party until last fall. The brilliant success that crowned their efforts then—electing six members of congress—has aroused the democrats to wage an aggressive campaign this year.

The two most important issues involved in the Iowa campaign, relate to the tariff and prohibition. The republicans have boldly endorsed the high tariff scheme of public robbery and and the Utopian effort to regulate men's appetites by statutory enactment. The democrats have pronounced for a "tariff for revenue only" and licensing the sale of liquor. Their campaign was formally opened at Council Bluffs on Tuesday, ex-Senator Hendricks of Indiana and Congressman Springer of Illinois making powerful speeches to immense crowds of people. It is proposed to keep things hot until the close of the contest. The republicans will be stubbornly opposed at every point. It is conceded that the republican majority will be greatly reduced, if not entirely wiped out. The democrats are winning recruits every day. The justice and wisdom of their position is recognized by the conservative citizens of the state, and the latter will vote in harmony with their honest convictions regardless of all purely partisan considerations.

It is an encouraging sign when a state like Iowa, which has always been so one-sided politically, is shaken with a mighty political contest. "Let the waters be troubled that there may be health in their flow."

Woman is just awfully lovely in newly laundered Wamsutta and lawn, when fresh from close communion with toilet soap and a crystal watery bath. She has the ripe peach fragrance of Paradise and the breath of the cape jessmine of the tropical empyrean. When a fellow passes to the windward of a lovely woman who is filling the air with sweetness and purity as she trips gracefully along he delicately sniffs the air for an hour, as if he had got a snatch of heavenly perfume and was trying to woo celestial battlements. God bless the women! If there were none on earth, bald-headed men and babies would be awfully scarce, and courting would lose more than half its flavor. —Burdette.

The utter heartlessness of the monopoly magnates, and their lack of the common feelings and instincts of humanity, are becoming more and more apparent every day. My lord Vanderbilt's "the public be d—d," finds its counterpart in the soulless computations of the Western Union bandits, as voiced by Dr. Green, president of the company, who in a recent interview said: "As I told General Eckert, this afternoon, the several hundreds of thousands of dollars which have been lost in the strike I regard to be the best financial investment made by the company. Hereafter, General Eckert tells me that he will get one-third more work out of a man for a day's service, and the economy of such a step will retrieve the loss in less than six months."—Cresswell Democrat.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

A BOSTON squelch says that "the severe drought on which New England is now suffering has not only ruined the ripening crops and seeded the fall feed, on which every farmer depends, but it has dried up the brooks and well-and scorched the forests until every meadow and grove is a tinder box, ready to spring into a blaze on the first contact of fire. Forest fires have been burning for several weeks in some of the outlying towns near Boston. It is impossible to estimate the real and entailed loss from these causes, but it will probably reach $1,000,000. Destructive forest fires are also reported in New York and other Eastern States. . . . Mrs. Julia P. Smith, the novelist, was killed by a railroad train at New Hartford, Ct.

A SCORE of villagers attended the auction in Chippewa, N. Y., at which Horace Breeden's farm was sold, One bid was made for the entire farm and property, and was sold to Miss Gabrielle M. Greeley for $80,000. Neighbors who wanted the property would not bid against the daughter of the pioneer. Breeder bought about $50,000, and he expended on its improvement about $25,000. . . . N. A. H. Wilson mill's steam cooperage works in Jersey City were consumed by fire, with all the machinery and eight car loads of staves. The total loss is about $60,000. . . . The Elkhorn tannery, belonging to Michael B. Boehler, at Stroudsburg, Pa., was destroyed by fire. The loss is estimated at $75,000, covered by insurance.

THE Newark (N. J.) Evening News publishes two letters from the absentee of little Charlie Ross, written Nov. 22 and 24, 1874—the year in which the child was spirited away, to Mr. Christian K. Ross, and demanding $20,000 ransom or his son would be put to death. The documents were found among the papers of the late William B. Ross, Chief of the Philadelphia detectives. The point aimed at by the News is that the evidence of these letters was unknown to Mr. Ross or his friends, and so prevented, in a measure, the return of the child to his parents. . . . At a rehearsal in a theater in Fourteenth street, New York, a bridge gave way, precipitating a number of supernumerary ballet girls to the stage, a distance of more than thirteen feet. Several persons were severely injured.

ON Long Island, near Hunter's Point Bend, two passenger trains came in collision, and two persons were killed and eight wounded. . . . Gilmer, Hooper & Co., hat jobbers of Philadelphia, have suspended, with liabilities of $250,000.

SMITH & CO.'s large school and counting-room furniture factory, at Boston, was burned, entailing a loss of $75,000. . . . Buch Hastings, proprietor of the Boston Commercial Bulletin, died at Monmouth Beach, N. J., aged 62 years.

THE WEST.

WHILE a construction train on the South Park railroad was rushing down Kenosha mountain, in Colorado, the engine jumped the track and eight cars back of it were telescoped down the embankment. Conductor Livingstone, Engineer Foster and Brakeman Lake were injured, probably fatally.

A CHICAGO dispatch of the 11th inst. says: "Reports as to the work of last frost are comforting, and, upon the whole, it would seem that the damage wrought is not near so serious as was at first believed. In Ohio and Indiana corn in low lands suffered severely, but the plant in higher ground was only slightly injured. Most complaints have come from the districts in which Kansas and Nebraska seed was planted and which only incompletely to a head. The disasters from Illinois and Iowa are more reassuring, and scarcely the intelligence that the crop has not been injured seriously. In the districts of Missouri tobacco has been ruined, and in Kentucky and Tennessee the damage is almost a total loss. In Michigan corn generally escaped late frosts, but in Wisconsin some be said for fruits, tomatoes, and other vegetables. . . . In the Cleaning valley, N. Y., and sections of New Jersey buckwheat and beans are reported greatly to the fall in temperature, while in the Connecticut district of Massachusetts the crops were ripe and secure. Taken as a whole, cannot be said to do more than temporarily disturb. Dispatches report considerable damage to vegetables at sent forth points in New York and Wisconsin. The question as to the fate of the growing corn must of course be largely one of examination. On the Board of Trade was opened 2 cents above the closing quotations of Saturday, and closed firm with the improvement partially maintained."

EDWARD D. COMAN, city collector of the Louisville Herald, was brutally assaulted in Abl. Joy, of that city. The parties were discussing local politics. Joy took exceptions to a remark of Coman's, struck him with his desk, and with a drawn revolver kept the crowd at bay. There he lunged at Coman, cut to the jugular vein, and with his heavy knife knocked and stamped until the victim was a most sore spectacle. Coman is probably the best-known man in the State. He was born in Kentucky in the year 1 and has a reputation of excellent character. George Williams, a colored porter in the First National bank at Las Vegas, New Mexico, suicided because discharged. He took a gun and compelled the colored force to stand in a row and get through another drill. Only one came in and had him shot.

HUNG, Gleesing, a manufacturing engineer of St. Louis, residing at No. 1,457 Chouteau Avenue, left Forest Park street-car, and, upon reaching his residence, he found his wife in a horrible manner with a hoe, hatchet, iron and other bodies. Mrs. Fleming and Geo. secured his own windows. It is believed that Mr. Gleesing will recover. Mrs. Gleesing's property is furniture and clothes, and her only daughter, Augusta, is still and is under the care of the police.

The total loss will reach $7,000. . . . Mrs. Melanie Rauch, a Hilbert county, Ind., aged seventy-eight years, was burned to death in a deep excavation in which three negroes were also buried and two of them were wounded.

AT a meeting of the Hatchnal agency held at the Indianola, Senator Voorhees and Delegate Martinez, Chief Charles made a most impressive speech. He stamped upon his feet and declared that he would never go upon a reservation alive, but would fight to the last. He said the lands were bought from the blood of white men. Senator Voorhees warned him to secure title to lands he owns, and he finally consented to go to Washington with Agent Roman Nose and discuss the matter. . . . The Utford party arrived safely at Portland, Ore., having gone the entire length of the Northern Pacific route. The citizens of Portland strove to outdo the demonstrations of the long line of towns through which the party had passed. . . . B. L. Payne and their officers of the Oklahoma company were arrested last week at Wichita, Kan., on complaint of the United States Attorney, J. R. Bidwell, who has grown weary of the cost and trouble of keeping these men out of Indian Territory.

THE SOUTH.

A RAVING maniac, armed with a club, entered a school-room at Williamson, Va., and attempted to kill all the girls in the room. His hallucination had taken the form of belief that, in order to escape eternal torment, he must sacrifice 300 female children. He hurt a number of the people, and was himself knocked senseless before his career. . . . At Hagenonine, La., Henry Dickerson, colored, was hanged by mistake, and at Greensboro, Ala., Frank Sheldon, also colored, paid the extreme penalty for murder.

AT a colored celebration in Beaufort county, N. C., boiled shrimps were freely dispensed. Three negroes have died from their effects, and seven are reported to be alive. . . . A boy of 16 and a boy of 17 fought it out with knives and the 17-year-old was killed. The difficulty was caused by a game of ball on Sunday. The deadly toy pistol did not figure in the affair.

A YOUNG man called for a glass of soda-water in New Orleans. The clerk responded. The customer said the glass was dirty. The clerk denied it. The customer drew a pistol and shot the clerk dead. The murderer escaped. The cotton crop in those states from 5 to 10 per cent. The greatest injury is reported in the south-eastern counties. The storm of Saturday night and Sunday was the severest of the season. The loss to planting will probably keep the total yield from falling below last year's figures. The total for last year was 1,927,340,000 pounds. The crop is not all in, however, so figures enough to estimate a short supply."

POLITICAL.

THE dissatisfied Democrats of Hamilton county, Ohio, held a convention at Cincinnati at which eighty delegates were present. They nominated a ticket in opposition to the regular nominees. . . . The Democrats of Illinois and Wisconsin held conventions and were not led to stand and on the issues. The platforms are colorless. . . . Reports from Arkansas represent the cotton crop as being injured by the continued rainy weather. In some counties nearly half a crop will be made. Southern Arkansas is suffering severely from the drought. The late weather does not affect the cotton crop very materially, it being matured in most localities.

WASHINGTON.

THE Treasury Commission appointed to investigate the conduct of Architect Hill have submitted their report to Secretary Folger. They find the office which he held guilty of official favoritism, which in a few instances has resulted great loss upon the Government. The firm of Bartlett, Robbins & Co., of Baltimore, were paid $19,340 for simply duties of the heating apparatus of four buildings. In one case outsiders—Shutters were selected because they were the cheapest, and the work and the quality advertised for. Messrs. Bartlett, Robbins & Co. were awarded the contract although they were not the lowest bidders. The total for last year was 1,927,340,000 pounds. The crop is not all in, however, so figures enough to estimate a short supply."

A GREAT storm is reported on the South Atlantic coast. Off the coast of North Carolina the wind blew at the rate of ninety-three miles an hour, and thirteen vessels were wrecked. . . . Rice in the business portion of Fort Smith, Ark., entailed a loss of $50,000. Insurance, $30,000. . . . Reports from Arkansas represent the cotton crop as being injured by the continued rainy weather. In some counties nearly half a crop will be made. Southern Arkansas is suffering severely from the drought. The late weather does not affect the cotton crop very materially, it being matured in most localities.

"Michigan and Its Resources."

We have just received from the commissioner of immigration the third edition of this famous advertisement. It is a volume of 221 royal octavo pages, printed in a handsome brevier type, with numerous maps and illustrations, and is the result of much study and research. The book is a mine of wealth to one desiring to know the resources, advantages, and possibilities of Michigan. Its articles are classified and indexed so that it is very easy to find any particular subject treated. Under the head of "A description by counties," we find the following concerning Charlevoix county, and we may find occasion to use its pages still further:

Charlevoix county was organized in 1869. It is bounded on the north by Emmet and Lake Michigan, on the east by Cheboygan and Otsego, on the south by Antrim, and on the west by Lake Michigan. It has an area of 396 square miles, and had a population in 1880 of 5,115. Charlevoix, a flourishing village of 1,500 inhabitants, situated on Lake Michigan, is the county seat. The surface of the county is every where rolling, and in some parts decidedly hilly. The county is well watered. Pine Lake, a beautiful sheet of water, stretches 14 miles in an easterly direction from Charlevoix village. Six miles from Charlevoix, a branch of the lake runs in a southerly direction eight miles. The branch is fed by the famous trout fishing stream, the Jordan. The Boyne flows in at the east end of the lake, and the county generally is covered with innumerable spring brooks of the coldest water. There is some available water power, particularly on the Jordan and Boyne rivers. The soil varies from a light sandy to a heavy clay, filled with calcareous matter. The subsoil is of as varied a nature as that of the surface.

Sugar maple, elm, beech, basswood, ash, hemlock, and cedar timber is found in great quantities throughout the county.

The principal crops are winter wheat, oats, corn, hay, clover, potatoes, and root crops. The summer resorts at Charlevoix furnish an excellent market for all sorts of garden vegetables.

All fruits do well, excepting grapes and peaches. The hardier kinds of apples are especially successful. Charlevoix county is at the northern extremity of the celebrated Michigan fruit belt. The cost of clearing averages $20 per acre, although the wood produced, generally pays for the clearing.

There are no government lands in the market. There were 344 acres of state swamp, 1,995 acres of primary school, 3,525 acres of agricultural college, and 42,285 acres of Grand Rapids and Indiana railroad land, subject to entry May 1, 1883.

Unimproved lands are held at from $7 to $10 per acre, while improved farms average from $15 to $20, in the interior, and from $25 to $100 near Charlevoix. There is a state road from Traverse City to Petoskey, which crosses the county. There are a number of wagon roads traversing the county, most of which are new, but are steadily improving. There are also several tramroads built through belts of hard-wood timber which facilitate travel. Much of the travel in summer is by water. The winter is very steady, snow falling by November 15th, and lasting five months. The summer season is delightful, and the county is a great resort for invalids afflicted with asthmatic difficulties. The schools are very creditable for a new county.

As Pine lake is navigable for large vessels, the timber business is an important enterprise in this county. Wood, ties, fence-posts, hemlock bark, and logs are cut during the winter, and are shipped during the summer to Chicago, Milwaukee, Racine, and other lake ports. There are several saw-mills in the county. An iron furnace at Ironton, on Pine lake, furnishes employment to a large number of men. The fishing industry is also a considerable one.

The Grand Rapids and Indiana railroad crosses the county from north to south, and a railroad is expected at Charlevoix within a year.

The famous resorts on Pine lake have contributed largely to the development of the county, and are thronged every summer with admirers of the beautiful scenery and delightful climate of Charlevoix county.

Persons having friends in other states not satisfied with their present surroundings, would do well to send them a copy of this work. Address the Commissioner of Immigration, Detroit Mich.

An exchange boasts that the marine business is looking up in Chicago, from the fact that in the twenty four hours ending Monday night 131 vessels arrived from and 96 cleared for ports on the great lakes. We might say that the marine business of Charlevoix was equal to one-fourth that of Chicago, from the fact that a few weeks ago 18 vessels arrived in twelve hours from four o'clock in the morning to four in the afternoon.

The business card of Mr. C. R. Bellinger jeweler, will be found in this paper. This gentleman has recently obtained the agency of the celebrated Rockford watch, which he will handle in connection with his other business, and our citizens will henceforth be supplied with reliable time. He has just ordered a large stock of jewelry, silverware, and clocks, to prepare for the holiday trade, which will give our citizens an excellent chance to make valuable christmas presents.

Mr. Robert Miller has resumed management of the Bridge Street house, and his card will hereafter be found in the JOURNAL with other live men of the village. With Mr. Miller's experience as a huckford, and his acquaintance in this vicinity, we have no doubt he will keep the house up to a high standard and receive, as he deserves, a large share of the patronage of the traveling public. This house contains a sample room, a feature appreciated by commercial travelers. Former patrons will be cordially welcomed.

"The light of Asia," by Edwin Arnold, editor in chief of the London Daily Telegraph, is a poem in which the effort is made to bring before our modern age, in the western world, that sublime embodiment of the finest genius of the Orient, in its prime, whom we call Buddha, in living form. And to sketch this outline of his specular and ethical systems in vivid pictorial representation." It is a poem which requires study to thoroughly comprehend, and each reading brings out some new sentiment, well worth remembering. Possibly our citizens will have a chance to subscribe for a volume in the near future.

The board of health of Charlevoix township is desirous of making a complete record of all the burials in the township cemetery since its occupation, and intend to continue it complete in the future. The facts desired are contained in the following headings copied from the book of record. Date of death, name of deceased, age, color, sex, occupation, place of birth, residence, town where death occurred, diseases, where buried, lot and block. The board are improving the cemetery, and desire the co operation of individuals in making and keeping it in a condition worthy our corporation. It is to be hoped that all who have friends buried there will furnish the necessary information as soon as possible, to F. W. Mayne, clerk of the board.

The $1,300 lost by Will. A. Stone, on June 30, was found on Sunday last by his clerk, Mr. Fast, while taking an inventory of some shoes. He was removing the shoes from the box when he discovered the envelope lying on the bottom. He says Mr. Stone described the contents to a cent, told how it was put together, and after Mr. F. wrote the description as given by Mr. S., they proceeded to open the envelope, and found everything to be just as described. Mr. Stone had good grounds for suspecting the parties he had arrested and it is doubtful if they, at the next term of circuit court, would not have been found guilty and sentenced to imprisonment. This should be a sufficient warning to young men to let liquor alone in the future.—Enterprise.

FIRE.

S. M. See, Mason & Co.'s Planing Mill Totally Destroyed.

Loss About $12,000, with No Insurance.

About 11 o'clock yesterday fire was discovered in the boiler room of S. M. See, Mason & Co.'s planing mill. The engineer promptly gave the alarm, but before help could arrive the flames communicated to the roof and to the main building, and were soon beyond control. The fire department and citizens responded promptly, and cut a stream with little delay, but the wind was strong from the southwest, which, with the dry condition of everything about the building, made the small stream thrown by the hand engine of little use. After a few minutes of unsatisfactory work at the mill, the engine was moved to a point east of the fire, and efforts directed toward saving lumber and other property, which proved more successful. With the aid of a bucket brigade the fire was confined to the mill yard. With the strong wind and great heat, it is almost a miracle that the whole row of dwellings and boarding houses was not destroyed.

The fire department and citizens generally are entitled to much credit for their earnest and faithful work, and there is no doubt but the property saved pays for the engine many times.

The loss will aggregate nearly $12,000, and as there was no insurance, it will be a total loss to the firm.

Thirteen men are thrown out of work now at the beginning of winter, and the loss to our citizens who are building cannot be estimated.

At this time it is impossible to determine what will be done toward rebuilding. It has been suggested that if the firm cannot rebuild, a stock company should be organized, and the institution rebuilt at once. It certainly a necessity.

Cinders and sparks were blown across Round lake, and for a time endangered the property of the Chicago resort, but prompt assistance prevented serious results.

To give an idea of the rapidity with which the flames spread, an employe states that when the alarm was first given, he with others went down to assist in pulling out the fire. Seeing that it was impossible, he started back to secure his tools, but could not reach the second floor on account of the heat and dense smoke.

Most of the employes lost all their tools.

Numerous minor accidents are reported, but none serious.

The fire is supposed to have caught from a spark flying into dry dust which had accumulated on some of the timbers above the boiler.

A GROWING INDUSTRY.

Ten Thousand Dollars Expended in Building and Repairing Water Craft.

We stated last week in connection with our article on the building interests, that we had other good things in store for our readers, and one of them is now produced. In it we can see the possibilities of a business of great value to Charlevoix, if properly developed.

We first interviewed the pioneer ship-builder in this region, Mr. James Washburn, and found him busy putting the finishing touches to a new two-masted schooner, but he answered our questions, and gave for his item of his business as a landsman with no knowledge of the technical names of the parts of a ship is likely to get in so short a time. Last year he was the only builder here, and the aggregate of his business was between four and five thousand dollars. This year, by a combination of circumstances, beyond his control, the aggregate will be somewhat less, but it is still healthy. Among these circumstances are two other builders, Messrs. Campbell Bros., and E. H. Smith, but he still has the greater part of the new business and his work has the reputation of being well done.

His first work launched last spring was the schooner Hercules which had been thoroughly repaired during the winter. Since then he has built three scows for Boutin, of Petoskey, one for the resort, and one for Allen's pile driver. This last is said to be the best ever launched on these waters. He is now finishing a schooner for C. Wills & Bro., and is pushing along rapidly a new schooner for Capt. Tullock. With all this new work has been carried a large share of the repairing done here.

Following Mr. Washburn in quantity of new work is Mr. E. H. Smalls, who launched the A. R. Upright early in the season, and is now engaged on a schooner, 46 feet keel, to be ready for next year's business. These two boats will aggregate $2,000 or over.

Campbell Bros.' work has been confined mostly to repairing, the only exception being a fifty-foot scow for E. M. Clark. Their business will aggregate not far from $2,500.

Not least among the new work in this department of our business lists reels, by L. E. Allen's pile driver. Not mindful the week of one yard, it is still the work of Charlevoix, and is a machine which daily adds to the value of our water front. It is a well-made, compact, and complete machine, and will doubtless do good service many years.

In addition to the above there has been probably a dozen new row boats launched this season, at an average cost of not less than $30 each, Jos. Beauvais and O. D. Mason are the principal builders in Charlevoix.

Shall we Rebuild the Burned Planing Mill?

Now is the time for the capitalists of the village who are interested in its welfare to come forward and take the lead in organizing a stock company to rebuild the planing mill and stock it for business. Let the capital stock be fixed at not less than $12,000 or $15,000, making the shares $25 each. Then our wealthy citizens can subscribe for $1,000 or $2,000 worth of the stock, and there are few men in town who will not take at least one share. Let a two story brick or wood building be erected on the site of the old mill, and in sixty days a change could be in condition to employ twenty-five men, and could be run, as it should be, all winter—this on the presumption that the parties burned out yesterday will not rebuild. This matter is of vital importance to Charlevoix, more so than any other of the present lines. Look to it that it is not neglected until we have all lost money by it. Investigate it, and you will find it a paying investment.

THE LONELINESS OF DEATH.

The silent chariot stands at the door,
The horses champ and stamp and neigh,
The coachman hushed and still from roof to floor,
And all the world of its mysterious wheels,
Yet each it presence feels.

No clamping hats, no tramp of passing feet,
All dark and silent up and down the street,
And yet thou may'st not keep it waiting there
For one last kiss or prayer.

Thy words, with some strange other intercourse,
Strike cold across us like loud eyes exchanged,
With things that are not thought or things that are,
Take like a sunset sick star.

And thou too weak and agonized to stir
The cup to quench the dying thirst, or shift
Thy pillow, now without our help turned rest,
Nor wait our ministries.

Thou, loved and cherished, must go forth alone,
Some one chose fondly to the door, not over;
No head is turned to see the joy we stay
Where then art not, and pray.

No panel bars thy white, pendulous face,
Our walls are naked to thee, not our thoughts;
It waits, it waits for love, but love alone:
"Arise, let us begone."

Alone, alone, up at the awful way,
Do any stars cheer thee kindliness? Any ray
Thy lonely day does the silent chariot keep
While we, the social dead, sleep?

We know not. Some may follow thee afar,
Some hear the sound of any departing car;
Only on Calvary like a strong black sea
Rolls on Christ as and thee.

THE BLACK VALISE.

The excellent wife of the Rev. Septimus Medd felt vaguely uneasy on the morning of her husband's departure for London. He had never left her for a single day since their marriage upward of ten years ago. He was a mild, easy-going parson, of a timorous disposition, utterly ignorant of the ways of the world, and likely to be easily imposed upon by designing persons. When he came down to breakfast, equipped for the journey, he looked so pale and nervous that his wife said:

"I wish I could come with you, Septimus. I feel sure you will get lost, or something. You are like a great child."

"Oh! I can take care of myself, my love," said the Rev. Septimus, stoutly. "Soon easy at your mind at rest about me. Besides, I shall be back in a day or two, or by the end of the week at the latest."

"Where can I write or telegraph, in case I have anything to communicate?" inquired his wife.

"Well, you see, my darling, I don't quite know whether I shall be able to get in at the Tavistock," said the Rev. Septimus, with an air of hesitation. "London is very full at this time of year, I'm told. Perhaps I had better arrange to call every morning for letters at the Charing Cross Postoffice."

"Very well. Mind you write and let me know what day you are coming back. Here's the paychaise! Now, Septimus, remember I'll be dull company, and see that you get your full share of your Aunt Julia's estate, for the children's sake. Don't trust those London lawyers, and don't sign your name to anything without thoroughly understanding it. Come, children, say goodby to your father, or he will miss the train."

The Rev. Septimus tore himself from the bosom of his family with considerable emotion, and took his seat in the pony-trap, to be driven to the station.

His wife waved her hand as he disappeared from view, and shed a furtive tear on the doorstep before returning to the house. She could not shake off the uncomfortable foreboding that had taken possession of her, and the next day she wrote her husband a long letter, repeating all her injunctions and warnings, and urging him to take care of himself.

Three days passed without bringing any news, and Mrs. Medd's somewhat unreasonable anxiety increased to such a pitch that she could not refrain from sending the Rev. Septimus a telegram. If he had been too busy to reply to her letter, he, at all events, would not leave a telegram unanswered, more especially as she begged him to let her hear from him at once. To her dismay, however, her last communication was not more successful than the first, and she became seriously alarmed. She felt certain he had not received her letter and telegram, and wondered uneasily what could have happened to him. Had he been suddenly taken ill, or had some more serious evil befallen him? In the midst of her suspense and perturbation she was startled by receiving a visit from a Police Inspector, who had driven over from the neighboring town.

"Are you Mrs. Medd, ma'am, the wife of the Rev. Septimus Medd?" inquired the officer, on being ushered into the room.

"Yes. My husband is away in London. What is the matter?" cries Mrs. Medd, in an agony of apprehension.

"I have had a telegram from the London police, directing me to ascertain Mr. Medd's address in London, and what his movements are," said the Inspector, mysteriously.

"Why! is anything wrong? For heaven's sake tell me!" exclaimed the distracted wife.

"I hope not; but a suspicious individual, giving the name of Smith, has been apprehended in London on some charge or other, and some of the luggage found in his possession is supposed to belong to your husband."

"Great heavens! He must have been robbed," cried Mrs. Medd, turning pale.

"That is just what we want to find out. Will you kindly give me his address?"

"I don't know it," exclaimed Mrs. Medd, in despair. "I am anxiously expecting to hear from him. He may be at the Tavistock Hotel in Covent Garden; he told me to address letters to the Charing Cross Postoffice."

"Have you done so?" said the Inspector, making a note in his pocket-book.

"I wrote two or three days ago, and have since sent a telegram; but I have had no answer," said Mrs. Medd, bursting into tears.

"We can easily ascertain if he has called there, and also whether he is staying at the Tavistock Hotel," said the Inspector, in a matter-of-fact tone.

"There is no cause for alarm at present."

"Are you driving back to Bilchester? Let me come with you," cried the poor lady, in a painfully-agitated state. "I shall then hear the answer to your telegram without delay, and, if necessary, I will go up to town immediately. I'm afraid my husband is ill."

"Don't be frightened, ma'am; but come with me by all means, if you wish," said the Inspector, soothingly. "In fact, it will be just as well."

Accordingly, poor Mrs. Medd went off with the Inspector, who, during the drive of eight miles, asked her a good many questions about her husband, and plainly showed that he entertained disquieting suspicions which he was unwilling to communicate. What these might be, the unfortunate lady was too frightened to inquire, for her apprehensions were aroused, and she hardly dared even to speculate upon the subject. On reaching Bilchester she determined to consult the local solicitor, who was an old friend and adviser, and she therefore arranged with the Inspector to meet her at that gentleman's office as soon as he had received an answer to the telegram he was about to dispatch. Fortunately, the lawyer was disengaged, and Mrs. Medd was shown into his room immediately.

"How do you do Mrs. Medd? Take a seat. What can I do for you to-day?" inquired old Mr. Brock, cheerily, as he shook hands with his visitor. "By-the-by, have you heard from that husband of yours since he went away?"

"No. Why do you ask," demanded Mrs. Medd quickly.

"He had a letter from Simpson & Hall, the lawyers, inquiring about Miss Julia Norman's estate in London, you know — said Mr. Brock, taking up a letter from his desk. "They expected to see your husband yesterday, but he never called. They write to ask if he is in town, and for his address."

To the lawyer's surprise, the poor lady burst into tears at this fresh piece of information, which he considered by no means alarming, and took his seat in the pony-trap, to be driven to the station.

His wife waved her hand as he disappeared from view, and shed a furtive tear on the doorstep before returning to the house. She could not shake off the uncomfortable foreboding that had taken possession of her, and the next day she wrote her husband a long letter, repeating all her injunctions and warnings, and urging him to take care of himself.

A LEGEND OF THE RHINE.

BY O. P. WISNER.

In her castle lived a maiden, fair and brilliant, by the Rhine,
Where the waters roll in splendor, making music all the time;
Dashing onward, dashing wildly, like an arrow, in their flow—
Grand old music ever making, as the waves to ocean go.

And the maiden sometimes wandered by this silver flowing tide,
'Neath the moon-beam's nightly glintings,—near the passing wavelets wide;
Met her there 'neath starlight gleamings,—he a youth, as soldier dressed;
And as lovers walked together, whilst his suit he anxious pressed.

But the maiden by the river, though she loved him well and true,
Still his suit as oft rejected, by those waters bright and blue.
"Longer wait," she said, so coldly, as he pressed her hand in his—
"And the future we'll think over;" proudly answered only this.

Then her lover by the river said, "I've waited well and long,
'Till my soul is chilled by waiting, though my heart is brave and strong."
But her pride still kept him waiting, though she loved him well and true,
In her castle by the Rhine-waves, rolling 'neath the skies so blue.

Then he left her by the river,—left her to her thoughts alone,—
Left her there like marble statue, turned, like Niobe, to stone;
And her heart grew faint within her, for her soldier-boy had left—
Left her by the brilliant waters,—left her, of his love bereft.

Now when years had floated past her, in her castle by the Rhine,
Mournful strains of music mingled with the river's ceaseless chime;
As the moonbeams fell so silent on her castle by the wave,
And she thought of him who loved her,—him, the soldier-boy so brave.

Then her pride, exhausted, left her,—left her by the Rhine in tears,—
When she thought of him who loved her, through the long departed years;
And she spoke to page beside her, "Go and tell him I am ready."
Then he darted like an arrow, still repeating, "I am ready."

And when days had slow departed, by the blue Rhine's shining wave,
Stood the page, returned with answer, from the soldier boy so brave;
When his pallid lips were parted, he returned for answer this:
"You must wait forever, fair one"—and his only answer this.

Then the maiden by the river felt a shadow o'er her come,
And, by page assisted gently, sought her snow-white couch at home,
In her castle by the Rhine-waves; and her lute no longer played,
For her lover had deserted,—for his country drew his blade.

But the soldier, years thereafter, came to look upon her grave,
And his heart was wrung so sorely,—heart of manhood, now so brave.
Then he cursed his pride and hers,—pride that never brought relief,
When the heart was filled with love,—love so constant, yet so brief.

And above her, in the grave yard, creeps a green-leaved tender vine—
Creeping over stones and fences, and o'er ancient walls of time.
'Tis the maiden seeking, ever, him she proudly tossed away;
And this vine is ever creeping,—creeping over walls to-day.

Return of the Wanderers.

Now that the president has set his face toward the capital, it is to be supposed the members of his cabinet, the heads of bureaus, and the, chiefs of divisions, who have been scattered in different directions during most of the summer, will find their way to Washington too. It is high time.

All the public business requiring the responsibility of executive action has been postponed on account of the absence of these officials. The only connection that they have maintained with the government has been to draw their full pay for every hour they devoted to personal pleasure. In respect to the salary, they all have been remarkably punctual.

Whether cruising at sea in vessels of war equipped and supplied at the public expense, or travelling on land at the charge of the army appropriations, these officials have been diligent in depleting the treasury. During the past year some of them have been absent from their posts more than two months in the aggregate. Perhaps some of them propose to make up a full quarter before finally settling down to regular work.

The law regulating vacations only applies to subordinates, and it was passed at the last session. Abuses in this matter had become so flagrant that it was necessary to impose some restriction on the discretion that had formerly been allowed. A limit of thirty days was fixed for the annual leave, with pay, "except in case of sickness." This last saving clause opened the door to a new abuse.

How well the outside sharpers improved their opportunities while the clerks were practically carrying on the government, will be known as the accounts are reported and the jobs are disclosed. Canning and colluding contractors make it a business to visit Washington at the season when the president and cabinet and the officers next in authority are certain to be absent. They know how to time their presence and to make it most profitable.

Trifles like the finding of ten thousand dollars under a part of the machinery in the redemption bureau of the treasurer's office, and sheets of bank bills in the waste basket of the comptroller of the currency, will not disturb the serenity of the administration. Explanations have been made, and if they happen to be lame, there are others ready for service.

The president will find liberal estimates for the public expenditures, prepared by the clerks for his approval, after the refreshed secretaries have glanced over them and exhibited their gentle revisions. These estimates will discreetly cover all the junketing by land and sea, so that the economists of the house of representatives will have to explore deeply before discovering in detail how the people's money was squandered for personal pleasure.

But the committee of appropriations in the next congress will be composed of different elements from that in the last house of representatives. Keiffer will not be in the chair, and Secor Robeson will not be there to lead a reckless majority. Randall will be on hand, and Holman will be at his old post, to lead reform and retrenchment. Loose estimates will have a bad show next winter.—N. Y. Sun.

The High Low Tariff Game.

We have been expecting that some grand mogul of protection would put forth the claim, for the sake of holding fast to the republican machine the woolen manufacturers of the country, that the tariff has had the effect to reduce the price of wool; and now comes Senator Morrill, of Vermont, the father of the wool tariff of 1867, and the chief manipular of all tariff legislation since 1862, with the very significant assertion, made in defense of the reduction of the wool tariff by congress last winter, "that the depression in the wool market is not due to importations, for these are light, but to the strong competition naturally produced by high duties." On the other hand for the sake of holding fast to the republican machine the votes of the farmers, Senator Sherman of Ohio, another high-tariff expert, demands the restoration of the old high duties on wool in order to keep up the price. According to the plan of action developed by these republican leaders the matter is presented about as follows: The high tariff on wool is commended to manufacturers because its effect has been to depress the price, and it is commended to farmers because its effect is to increase the price. Two things, however, are certain—the tariff has been very high for a great number of years, and wool has been steadily shrinking in price. It is also quite certain that if our wool product is still further increased, and we do not manufacture woolen goods for export, the price must go still lower. In the meantime we leave it to the tariff experts to establish the truth of their contradictory propositions—that the high duties on wool have depressed the price for the benefit of the manufacturers and consumers, and that they increase the price for the benefit of the farmers and producers. It is Morrill against Sherman; but Morrill is after the manufacturers' votes, and Sherman is begging for the farmers' votes. It is a nice game—illustrative, throughout, of tariff trickery and pretense.—Jackson Patriot.

Fuel and Clothing.

Cold weather is approaching. Suggestions of frost are already in the air. Fuel will soon be in great demand. Last winter, in order to put money into the pockets of wealthy operators, the republican congress increased the tariff tax on all bituminous coal from about 50 to 75 cents a ton. Who asked congress to do this? Who log-rolled and traded and begged for an increase of the tax on coal? Not the consumer. The whole job was done by the wealthy mine owners. Those who are engegged in producing coal for consumers got the tax increased. Was it for their own benefit, or for the benefit of the consumers, that they did this? The great coal monopolies wanted the tax increased to put more money than they were getting into their pockets. That was their game, and nine or ten Michigan congressmen voted for the law increasing the tax. They voted in favor of the coal monopolies and against the interests of the consumers.

Besides fuel, warm clothing will soon be needed. Heavy woolen goods are required for comfort in this winter climate. The same congress and the same congressmen voted to make the tax on woolen goods and woolen clothing 35 cents a pound on the actual weight, and in addition thereto 40 per cent on the market value. The coarser and heavier the clothing, the higher the rate of taxation.

Congress when it put on these taxes voted away a part of every family's earnings for fuel and clothing. It voted to take money out of the pockets of consumers and put it into the pockets of the producers of these things. The tax on these articles is what is cheatingly called a protective tariff. It is easily understood. It is a method of taxing the necessaries of life for the benefit of those who produce them—of taking the money of the many for the gain of the few—of plundering the great mass of the people for the enrichment of monopolies and combinations.

All those in favor of releasing fuel and clothing from taxation will hereafter please vote against any Michigan congressman who wears a republican label, and will vote only for some opposition candidate who is hostile to the republican policy of levying high taxes on the necessaries and comforts of life for the advantage of monopolies and combinations. Cheaper fuel and clothing will not harm our people these long and cold winters.—Jackson Patriot.

Pilfered Paragraphs.

Who ever heard of slandering a bad man? Who ever heard of counterfeiting a bad note? Slander, as a rule, is the revenge of a coward. It is generally the best people who are injured in this way.

Imperfect sweet apples, which are not sultable to bake whole, may be made a delicious dish. Pare and slice the best part of the apples, put them in a pudding dish, and when tender serve with sugar and cream.

A lovely gift for grandma is a shawl made thus: Choose a square of drap d'ete or of cashmere, and it may be black or white or a soft fawn color; feather-stitch a narrow hem, and then crochet a border with zephyr of the same shade. These shawls are so soft and light, and so much prettier than a plain square or one with fringe, that they are really graceful.

When a workingman reads that "There is a necessary protection against cheap foreign labor," as he frequently will in reading republican sheets, let him ask how. Let him look up the law that places a tariff on imported cheap labor; let him consider whether the philanthropic manufacturers really pay him any more wages on account of the protection they receive at the expense of the country that laborers could demand under the inexorable law of supply and demand.—Cheboygan Democrat.

Used freely with warmth and rubbing it gives quick relief. Price 25 and 50 cents per bottle. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co.

Michigan with an area so great that the distance from detroit to the northern end, equals the distance from the same city to New York; with a yearly product of crude iron exceeding that of any state in the Union; with a salt product greater than that of all the rest of the United States, and an output of copper only rivaled in the whole world by Chili—with so great natural elements of wealth as these the great state, even though it loses its present forest must rank as an American lumber mart, may yet count its coming centuries of continuous and abundant prosperity.—New York Evening Post.

Harry Dunkoehler, a compositor in the office of the Advocate, at Sturgeon Bay, Door County, performed the difficult feat recently, it was said, of setting 25,000 ems of solid minion type in eighteen and three-quarters consecutive hours. He picked up his stick at 6:30 in the morning and dropped it as 1:15 the next morning. Two ems of coffee at 9 p. m. was all the nourishment taken during the whole time. After four hours sleep he began work again in the morning as usual without experiencing any fatigue after his herculean task. Robert Bonner, the renowned editor of the New York Ledger, set many years ago, on a bet of ten dollars, 25,000 ems of solid type in twenty hours and twenty-eight minutes' steady work. Harry thought he could equal Mr. Bonner's time, said to be the best on record for rapidity and endurance, and accordingly made the attempt, with the above result. He is twenty years old and has been four years at the business.

A nervous looking man went into a steer when a clerk inquired if there was anything could do for him. He said no he didn't anything. She went away and he sat there an hour longer when the proprietor went to and inquired if he wanted to be shown anything. "No," said the nervous, "I just want to around. My physician has recommended perfect quiet for me, and says above all things must avoid being in crowds. Noticing that did not advertise in the newspapers, I thought this would be as quiet a place as I could find. I cease in for a few hours isolation." The proprietor picked up a belt of cambric to strike him but the man was out. He said all he was a quiet life.—Ex.

On the last regular trip up the Hudson, Jay Gould's new yacht, the Atalanta, commodore Samuel Thomas's yacht, the Vesta, with the Sage of Grumercy and a party of friends on board. There has long been a rivalry between these two vessels, and when they came alongside a race began in earnest. For several miles the race was so even that it was impossible to see that either was getting the advantage of the other. Finally, by degrees the Yosemite forged ahead several lengths, and soon dropped anchor off Grumercy, having succeeded in leaving Gould's yacht some distance in the rear. One of the engineers said that the boilers of the Yosemite has been tested to 130 pounds. During the race the steam was said to rise to 110 pounds. Tilden enjoyed the excitement of the race, but he was not aware, it was all over, of the trick that he ran. Gould, on the other hand, will not allow a strain of more than 70 pounds on the boilers of the Atalanta although they are tested for 120 pounds.

The government has reduced the amount of the debt redeemable at its pleasure to a little over $200,000,000, and under the existing conditions of its revenue this can be fully paid off in three years. No other part of the funded debt will, then, be redeemable for many years afterwards. It is an interesting question therefore, what will be done with the surplus revenue. The government can use it not only for its undue bonds, but this will require the consent of a large premium on them—it to 2 per cent. The 4½ per cents will cost in the neighborhood of 114, and the 4 per cents 20. There will be a strong protest against this policy from the national banks which have the bonds deposited as security for their circulation, since the national bank notes will necessarily disappear with the bonds. But the government will either keep on paying its debt with its ordinary revenue or reduce its taxes and tariffs so as to get rid of the surplus. So long as the debt is being reduced the people will continue to unfairly to pay a large excess of revenue; but when the debt reduction ceases they will demand relief from all taxes that are not needed for the support of the public service. But it is the department shall the taxes be reduced? The protectionists say, in that of internal revenue; they will demand that those taxes which are the least felt, the most easily collected and the most productive be abolished and the tariff taxes maintained as the present high rates. The democrats will, on the other hand, insist that the imperceptible taxes on spirits, beer and tobacco be left as they are, and the reductions made in those duties which are a burden and a tax on the materials of our industries. The question will be the issue before the next presidential campaign and approaching congress.—St. Louis Republican.

STATE OF MICHIGAN, Thirteenth Judicial Circuit, in chancery. Carl G. Von Platen, petitioner, vs. William H. Condon, defendant. Suit pending in the circuit court for the county of Charlevoix, in chancery, at Charlevoix, on the eighteenth day of September, A. D. 1883. In this cause it appearing from affidavit on file that the defendant William H. Condon is not a resident of this state, but resides at the city of Chicago, in the state of Illinois, on motion of Cruickshank & Grier, petitioner's solicitors, it is ordered that the said defendant, William H. Condon, cause his appearance to be entered herein, within four months from the date of this order, and in case of his appearance that he cause his answer to the petition to be filed, and a copy thereof to be served on said petitioner's solicitors within twenty days after service on him of a copy of said bill, and notice of this order, and that in default thereof, said petition be taken as confessed by the said non-resident defendant. And it is further ordered, that within twenty days the said petitioner cause a notice of this order to be published in the Charlevoix Journal, a newspaper printed, published, and circulating in said county, and that such publication be continued therein at least once in each week, for six weeks in succession, or that he cause a copy of this order to be personally served on said non-resident defendant, at least twenty days before the time above prescribed for his appearance.

A Tariff is Taxation.

Why should our manufacturers be restricted from producing goods at a price that will enable them to compete with the manufacturers of any other country by a tax on raw material? Why should our farmers not be permitted to exchange the produce of their farms for the greatest quantity of articles they need that the markets of the world afford? Why should our workingmen be compelled to pay a price and a half for nearly all the necessaries of life to sustain the policy of protective taxation? The effect of protective tariff legislation is hostile to all the true interests of the country. Undoubtedly a few men are made enormously rich as the result of tariff legislation. The money they thus obtain is not made out of nothing and nobody. It is squeezed out of their fellow countrymen by the operation of law. The tax on raw material is a burden to the manufacturer which the law tries to give him back by a higher tax on finished goods; the tax on iron, woolen and cotton goods is a burden to the farmer for which he gets no adequate return under the spoliation system; and the tax on nearly all the necessaries of life is a burden upon the workingman, for which he gets no equivalent. In the genuine which is the essence of protective tariff legislation, the farmers and workingmen get the worst of it every time. We shall have frequent repetitions of crippled manufacturing industries as long as we tax raw material to increase the price of goods; we shall have sung times among our farmers as long as they are compelled to buy what they want at tariff inflated prices and to sell their surplus at prices fixed in foreign markets; and we shall have constantly recurring hard times for workingmen by the stoppage of production and throwing them out of employment whenever the home market is supplied, the foreign market being closed to us by our so-called protective tariffs. It is as true as holy writ that the scheme of protective tariff legislation is upheld upon false pretenses for the benefit of a few manufacturing capitalists, and for their enrichment the whole country is outrageously taxed. A tariff is taxation, and it is nothing else. A revenue tariff is taxation for the benefit of the government. A protective tariff is taxation for the benefit of private business interests, and is a burden that the people ought not to be compelled to carry. Law ought not to protect robbery and stimulate jobbery. Patriot.

A few weeks ago we called attention to the fact that the majority of new papers being started in Michigan were democratic and also that many of the old ones, with republican proclivities were getting upon the fence. The following from the Boston Statesman shows that it is not in Michigan alone where democratic papers are rapidly taking the place of pap-sucking concerns of the republican stripe, but the democratic tendency is universal. "As showing which way the wind is blowing in the political world, two of the recent newspaper changes are suggestive. The New York Graphic, heretofore an able republican champion, with occasional independent leanings, is now democratic. The Chicago Herald, which well posted people believe has the brightest future before it of any paper in the great western metropolis, has changed hands and aspires to become the leading exponent of democratic principles in the northwest, a position which it will likely attain, as it is backed by a notable combination of brains, and business energy. For some years past the Herald has been a slashing republican paper. Similar changes of lesser importance are reported from other parts of the country, and in numerous localities new democratic weeklies are springing into existence. These are good signs and make it clearer than ever that the people are in dead earnest when they declare that the republican party must go.—Cheboygan Democrat.

In naming probable candidates for the presidential race next year, the Washington Gazette has this to say of Daniel W. Voorhees: This great political leader, who is familiarly known as the "tall sycamore of the Wabash" is one of the most deservedly popular democratic statesmen that has ever represented his party from Indiana; his social and political fame is not limited to his own state; his genial democratic bearing, free from airs, pomp or arrogance, has won for him thousands of devoted and admiring friends in every section of our republic. Mr. Voorhees would prove a worthy standard-bearer for the democracy, and would bring to their support thousands of the working classes who now vote with the republicans. If elected, Dan would make a popular and conservative president. Possessed with oratorical powers of the highest order, intensely enthusiastic in his deliveries, yet never harsh, severe or impolite; kind, generous and sympathetic with the humblest, as with the most favored citizen, a democratic ticket with his name is the leader, coupled with a Pennsylvania democrat of strength and ability as vice president, the great state of Pennsylvania would be captured from the republicans and placed in the column of the democracy."

To be Rebuilt.

There is every prospect that a new planing mill and door, sash, and blind factory will be built at once. A meeting was held at the office of J. Mile Eaton last Friday evening, and a temporary organization effected, by the election of a president, secretary, and a committee of five to solicit subscriptions. It was proposed to organize a stock company of 400 shares at $25.00 each, if a sufficient number of shares could be taken. A large amount was promised at that time, and the meeting adjourned to Tuesday evening following, at 7:30 o'clock, at the same place.

The committee canvassed the village pretty thoroughly, and at the meeting on Tuesday evening reported something over half the necessary amount subscribed.

Owing to the absence of the president, J. Milo Eaton, the secretary, W. P. Brown, called the meeting to order, and D. C. Nettleton was elected chairman for the evening.

Minutes and reports were read, and considerable discussion followed, concerning the increasing of subscriptions by those who had already subscribed liberally. Some could double their amount if the assessments were to come in a way that they could meet them.—they wanted some assurance of how much and when.

It was finally decided to increase the committee by the addition of Mr. See and Mr. Cook, of the late firm, let them make as close an estimate as possible, of the amounts necessary to be paid, and report to a future meeting. After some further discussion as to site, subscriptions, etc., the meeting adjourned till this Thursday evening, at the same hour and place.

At this writing we have not the least doubt that the whole amount will be subscribed, and the organization effected within a week. If it is, the machinery will probably be ordered so as to reach here before the close of navigation, the building erected to cover it, and business fairly commenced before winter sets in. We see no reason for a failure to move along in this manner, and hope none will arise.

Will Stand upon his Record.

A reporter of the Flint Journal attempted to interview the governor the other day for the purpose of drawing out some defense against the attacks of several republican newspapers of the state, but instead found that gentleman inclined to pass them without notice. He thinks his reputation is such that no defense is necessary to these assaults: The Journal says:

Our reporter called at the executive office this week to see the governor, and said to him:

"Governor, the Post and Tribune, Saginaw Herald and Lansing Republican are pitching into you, and I want to get some points—if you have no objection."

"Yes, but I have an objection. Those papers did more to make me governor than any of the union papers in the state, and I have no desire to do anything that would change their course towards me in the least. Should I conclude to positively decline a renomination, I may then find it necessary to have them speak well of me, so I may get down and out."

"Yes, but three papers are saying—"

"No matter what they say. They can't say anything that should place me on the defensive. If you read in the Post and Tribune that I have robbed a contribution box, turned my wife outdoors, or murdered my grandson Josiah, don't deny it, or come to me for facts or authority to contradict it. If during my 46 years' residence in Michigan I have built up a reputation that needs to be defended from the cowardly personal assaults of certain republican editors, I am to be pitied indeed. The republican voters take no stock in these assaults, but everywhere I go assure me that they are heartily ashamed of them. It was thought the Post and Tribune had reached its lowest depth under Col. Beard's management. The effort of the present manager seems to be to make Col. Beard's course concern tively respectable. At first thought this would appear to be impossible; and yet at present the chances seem to be all in his favor."

"Then you don't care to be defended, governor?"

"You are right, I don't."

Notes and News.

It has been decided by the customs division of the treasury department that hemlock bark is dutiable under the provision of the tariff act which fixes the rate of duty for "extract of hemlock and other barks for tanning," but is free of duty under a provision in the free list.

The comet recently discovered has been proven to be the long looked for comet of 1812, and during the past week has undergone remarkable changes in form and has increased in brightness fifteen fold. It is expected before long to become visible to the naked eye.

Bradstreet, in its weekly review of the state of trade last Saturday called attention to the fact that pig iron has dropped 50 cents per ton, and that wheat and corn have declined on account of the increase of visible supply and the lack of foreign demand. Pork has also declined, and millers and produce dealers are only buying for present demand. The heavy failures in New York and low water in New England have kept the tide of trade at about the level of the past month, although the dry goods trade has been generally well maintained.

Is not a church a little out of its sphere when it adopts resolutions like the following, in an attempt to regulate the votes of its members, as was recently done at a conference in this state? Honest people differ on political questions, and do not like to have their church say how they shall vote. "Resolved, That we will not support by our influence or ballot any political party that refuses to submit to the people the question of constitutional prohibition, and that does not stand by all legitimate means to suppress the traffic in intoxicating drink."

One of the works of the legislature of 1883, was the repeal of the law forbidding marriages between white persons and negroes. The law did not prevent miscegenation. Where persons of different color fancied that there was an affinity between them, that they wanted to marry, they usually lived together as man and wife without the formality of marriage. The colored people of the state felt that the law was inoperative except to fix a brand on them, and they were anxious for its repeal. Not only are such marriages to be permitted in the future, but the sanction of law is given to any such marriages heretofore made, and the issue of such marriages is legitimized. This strips from our statute books the last trace of an attempt to discriminate against negroes on the ground of color.

From the views gathered by representatives of the Evening Journal, and elsewhere presented, Hon. Samuel J. Tilden is a very lively political corpse. Misery of the leading democrats of Detroit express themselves in admiring terms of his wisdom and political sagacity in the past and present; while others, admitting his great ability, fear he is too old and decrepit for the office if elected. It is, however, quite evident that it will take very little urging to bring the rank and file of the Michigan democracy to Mr. Tilden's support should it be disclosed within the next few months that he is again an aspirant for the presidency. It should not be forgotten, however, by Mr. Tilden's friends that it was not he who was outraged, if an outrage was committed in 1876, but the democratic party of the nation; that it is not he who should be vindicated, but the party which claims that it was defrauded by the counting out of Tilden and the counting in of Hayes.—Detroit Journal.

A reporter of the Detroit Evening Journal interviewed Hon. J. M. Ashley, of Toledo, the other day. In answer to a question whether Judge Hoadley purchased the democratic nomination as candidate for governor, Mr. Ashley said: "Nothing is more false than that accusation. Judge Hoadley is wealthy, but he is a pure man, above the arts of the trading demagogue and self-sucking politician." Touching the subject of unity of party on each side, he said: "Republicans have placated to a remarkable degree the liquor element. They have made them believe that they will protect them in the future. If a large percentage of the German element does not remain loyal to the republican party, I shall avow myself very much mistaken." Mr. Ashley is a republican, and worked with them in congress, during the troublous times of '61-8, and afterward until he left politics. He knows what he is talking about, and is but one of many to expose the slanders and duplicity of the republican party. The republican party is a great temperence party, in theory, just before election, but it never fails to trade with the liquor element when votes are a consideration.

Hayes.

Fine fall weather.

Farmers busy gathering in crops and preparing for old Borax.

Hayes township is swarming with threshing machines at present.

The potato crop is not as good as last year, owing to the late season.

Mr. E. H. Burgess returned home from Milwaukee, last week.

Thomas Murray says he has six hundred bushels of grain this year.

Quite a number of farmers, in this locality, have new wagons.

Mr. George Saunby is improving his farm by erecting substantial fences. Other farmers do likewise.

Hayes people should take the JOURNAL, and get both sides of the matter. We do not believe in this one-sided business.

A. W. Chew is improving his farm by erecting a frame granary. He does not propose to feed rats and "sich," but will make it rat proof.

Several teachers from Hayes attended the examination, held at Charlevoix Sept. 26th.

H. V. Chew and Don R. Chew, who have been visiting friends in this locality, returned to Salamonien, Ind., last week. They were well pleased with this country, and say they will come again.

Miss Carrie Walker who has been visiting relatives in this vicinity the past summer, returned to her home in Canada last week.

Miss Fannie Ross, of Chicago, who has been visiting her parents during the summer months, returned to the city last week.

Miss Cora C. Chew closed her school at Lake View, last Friday. She commences a winter term of school at Charlou this week.

Miss Annie Cooper of Charlevoix, is teaching the "Whitford school."

Mr. John Fish of Hayes, has gone to Barry county to visit friends of yore.

ZEKE.

Striker Stowe's Way.

For years Striker Stowe, a tall, powerful Scotchman, had held the position of "boss striker" at the steel works. Nearly all the men in his department were hard drinkers, and he was no exception to the rule.

But one day it was announced among the workmen that he had become religious and sure enough, when pressed to take a drink, he said:

"I shall never drink mair, lads. Na drunkard can inherit the kingdom o' God. The knowing ones smiled and said, "Wait a bit. Wait until hot weather—until July. When he gets as dry as a gravel pit he will give in. He can't help it."

But right through the hottest months he toiled, the sweat pouring off in streams; yet he seemed never to be tempted to drink.

Finally, as I was taking the men's time, one evening, I stopped and spoke with him. "Stowe," said I, "you used to take considerable liquor, don't you miss it?"

"Yes," said he, emphatically.

"How do you manage to keep away from it?"

"Weel just this way. It is now tun o'clock, isn't it?"

"Yes."

"Weel, today is the twentieth day o' the month. From seven till eight I asked that the Lord would help me; the deil see, an' I pat down a dot on the calendar, right near the twenty.

"From eight till nine he kept me, and I put down another dot. From nine till ten He's kep' me, an' noo I gie him the glory as I put down the third dot."

"How long shall you keep this up? I inquired.

"All o' my life," was the earnest reply. "It keeps me sae full o' pence an' happiness that I wouldn't gie it up for anything. It is just as if He took me by the hand and said, 'Wark awa,' Striker Stowe, I'm wi' ye. Dinna be fearfu.' You teek care o' yeer regular wark an' I'll see to the deil an thirst, an' they shall an trouble ye.'"

Income of the Czar.

The annual income of the Czar of all the Russias probably averages a great deal more than $25,000 a day. The crown domains comprise more than a million square miles, covering an area exceeding that of all our New England, Middle and Southern States. These include cultivated lands, pastures and forests in different parts of this vast empire, which embraces in its despotic arms more than one-sixth the entire land surface of our globe. Beside the revenue from the above estates, the Czar derives a large income from gold, silver, copper and other mines in Siberia. The actual total of his immense revenue from all these sources is not stated in the Government budgets or finance accounts, the crown domains being considered the private property of the imperial family. In a British Consular report of 1867 the total income of the imperial family is estimated at £2,450,000 sterling, which is an average of about $33,500 a day. The imperial contributions to charities, theaters, etc., are estimated by the same authority at about £450,000, leaving a net sum of £2,000,000 a year to "keep the family."—Chicago Inter Ocean.

Dr. Lewis' injury to his left hand, received during the fire last week, is very painful.

There is to be a dance at the Hilton school-house in Norwood township, Friday evening.

Mr. Lewis Reynolds and wife went to Gratiot county, Wednesday, to remain a short time.

The shipment of hardwood lumber was larger in September than in any other month this year.

The hour for evening service at the M. E. church will be 7 o'clock instead of 7:30, until further notice.

It is about decided that Muskegon will have a fruit and vegetable canning with a capital of $75,000.

Willis Trip, of Petoskey, was instantly killed last Saturday, at Masker Bros.' saw mill, one mile north of Bay View. He was piling rolling pins under the tramway, and being from the mill, when the lumber from a passing car fell upon him, crushing him to death.

The board of supervisors meet next Monday. Those having matters to present to that body should have them ready.

The Odd Fellows have about completed their hall, and will occupy it this week. The new front makes a fine appearance.

John Hagerty, from Berea, Ohio, has purchased the John Macy farm, in Hayes township, and moved his family here to stay.

Capt. Robert O'Neil has returned from Mackinaw, where he has been engaged during the past summer, and will remain in Charlevoix this winter.

Henry Johnson severely injured his left hand in the machinery just before the fire last week, but it is improving, and he will soon be able to work with it.

Mrs. Eaton and children, and Mrs. French, went to Ann Arbor on Tuesday, and will go to New York before they return. They will be absent about a month.

The supreme court convened at Lansing Tuesday, with 125 cases on the calendar. Charlevoix county is represented for the first time, in the case of Norwood vs. Wood.

Ten or a dozen men are at work on the congregational church, and the frame is rapidly assuming its true proportions. At the present rate, it will soon be enclosed and occupied.

The Lake City Leader is a late candidate for public favor, No. 3 being just at hand. It is a seven column folio, well printed, and contains a fair amount of local news and advertising.

The Hilton school-house is about completed, and is a credit to the architect, Mr. Isaac Mills, and others all the workmen engaged on it. The district have reason to feel proud of it.

There was from three to five hundred dollars worth of finished work in the burned planing mill, ready or nearly ready, for delivery. This will necessarily interfere with those building.

Whispering in church is not to be encouraged at any time, but when young ladies (?) indulge in it during prayer to the annoyance of persons in adjoining pews, they are unworthy the name.

If any of our farmers want the JOURNAL, and have not the cash, let them remember that we have a family to feed and keep warm; produce and wood are family necessities, and will be taken on subscription.

A needed improvement has been made to the Lewis block, being a large brick chimney near the center of the building, from the ground up. It will better accommodate the numerous stoves, and with less danger of fire.

The Sperling brothers gave an interesting entertainment to a small house last Friday evening. The opinion has been expressed that their rendering of some of the poems was more natural than that of more noted elocutionists.

The schooner Mockingbird arrived on Monday with a consignment of shingles from Manistee, 300,000 of which were unloaded at John Nicholl's dock, and shipped at Upright, Emery & Co.'s. This is an unusual large consignment for our trade, and is said to be the largest ever received here.

The Cheboygan Democrat is to have a new office, new paper, new outfit of type, and numerous other good things. The sheet before us contains 28 columns of advertising to eight of reading matter, as mention is made of a supplement, so that one is led to infer that they do lots of business over there.

Mr. S. R. Beardsman, of Chicago, who bought the Pickerd lands on Manitou Island, has taken possession of the premises and will give special attention to stock raising. He recently purchased four very high grade Hereford heifers of Mr. Aldrich, of Northport. The Island is said to offer excellent facilities for stock raising.

The JOURNAL is in possession of information, which will become public in a few days, that there is a plan being developed by which if success full, a railroad will be built from some point on Pine lake in a southerly direction, to be commenced this fall, and which will doubtless become part of a line connecting Charlevoix with the southern part of the state.

Last Monday Mr. Lewis Reynolds showed us a box of agates, gathered during the leisure hours of the past few weeks. Some of them, when cut and polished, will make very handsome ornaments. He is quite successful in his search for them, and states that his interest in them grows, as he devotes time to studying their beauties.

The circulation of the Mancelona Herald increased from 810 to 1,480 in one week. If this is bona fide subscriptions, it is a success unparalleled in the history of Michigan country journalism. Its motto is "A live paper makes a live town." There is evidently a live man to manage the institution, which accounts for its success.

Mr. G. W. Barker, photographer, has left on our table a fine view of Round lake, looking northeast from a point near the foot of Mason street. It shows three vessels riding at anchor, Breezy Point cottage, the Chicago resort, and a small portion of the north side. The picture shows the proportions of our harbor to excellent advantage.

It is now reported that the iron company intends to erect another stack at Ironton in the near future. It has been rumored for some time that the G. R. & I. R. R. Co. have promised to build a branch of their road to Ironton as soon as another stack was erected. Putting the two reports together, it reads like a positive assurance of a railroad for our accommodation at a very early date.

"If a man built a pig pen, nailed a board on the silly fence, or hired an Indian to dig up the weeds in his front yard, the "improvement" has not escaped the argus eyes of the newspaper men."—Petoskey Record. Does the Record man propose to include all this in order to make a respectable showing? The JOURNAL's report was confined as near as possible to improvements of buildings only and not to contents or grounds.

"In a Nutshell," is the title of a book by Dr. Dio Lewis, which is not only a pleasure to read, but we believe contains more good solid sense to the page than any book we have read in years. It treats of health subjects from the stand point of self-help, and very little or no medicine, and seeks to make people live right every day of their lives. Mr. D. J. Rogers expects to canvass this vicinity soon, and we can recommend the book to all, old and young.

We must thank our friends for the interest taken in the JOURNAL and the efforts put forth to push it along. Present support and future prospects are as good as we could have reason to expect considering all the circumstances. Such appreciation and encouragement is an incentive to renewed activity, and we shall not rest until the JOURNAL takes a front rank in importance and influence among the industries of our village. We say to all, the JOURNAL is here to stay.

The Forbes Family orchestral and brass band concert company are advertised for one entertainment at the opera house, on Friday evening, Oct. 5th. This is a family of children, residents of Petoskey, where they have been in training under Prof. G. R. Salcom, and where they are well and favorably known. The Record has this to say of them: "The gifted little folks have been before the people here, as an orchestral band, on various public occasions, being always ready to assist in entertainments for the benefit of the schools and churches; and their many friends will confidently expect for them a great success in their public life. During the summer they have been playing brass instruments, and are said to have made wonderful progress." The regular program is arranged for two evenings, but as they give only one entertainment here, the second night will be made. We have no doubt it will be well worth the low price of admission. Some months ago they gave an entertainment in Paw Paw, of which the Herald spoke as follows: "The entertainment was pleasing and meritorious to a degree far in advance of some which have had better patronage. The little people all did splendidly. They are nice, pleasant looking children."

The Cedar Springs Clipper truthfully says: "A newspaper and a newspaper editor that people don't talk about and sometimes abuse, are rather poor concerns. The men and business that an editor sometimes feels it a duty to defend at a risk of making enemies of another class, are often the first to show their ingratitude. The editor who expects to receive much charity or gratitude will soon find out his mistake, but he should go on and say and do what he conscientiously thinks right without regard to frowns and smiles."

"In a few weeks we will publish the number of vessels loaded from this place and Bay Springs since the opening of navigation."—Statesman. "The Sentinel and JOURNAL have been giving Charlevoix a thorough overhauling, and last week presented statements showing the amount expended in building and improvements. The Sentinel figures out about $70,000 so spent and the JOURNAL $4,000. Some of the building was for business purposes and really good residences. In a few weeks we shall show what Petoskey has done."—Petoskey Record. For all of which please note that the JOURNAL was the first to begin the work.

Rev. Mr. Ibbings makes something of a change in his method of work in the M. E. church here, which will doubtless add to the interest and attendance. At the opening of every Sunday morning service, he gives a five-minute discourse for children and young people, and limits his regular sermon to about twenty minutes. This closes the morning service at about 11:30, and begins the sabbath school half an hour earlier than usual. The Thursday evening prayer meeting opens with a lecture and is to be made interesting in various ways. The subject for next Sunday morning service is "Christian ownership;" evening, "Duty of pleasing." The evening service begins at 7 o'clock, instead of 7:30.

Rev C. F. Van Anken has about completed, and before another issue of the JOURNAL will probably occupy his new residence on Clinton street. It is a two-story frame, 24x26 feet, with a one-story wing 14x16 feet, and contains nine rooms and a large cellar. Across the front, which faces the north is a handsome porch, so made that to post or appendage becomes an obstruction to the view from any window or door. Through the door we enter the sitting-room, on the west of which is the parlor, and on the south the dining room. These rooms are connected by folding doors, which can be thrown open so as to make them as one large room. The kitchen is south of the dining room, and is supplied with wall-cupboards, dour-chests dummy to cellar, soft water, etc., and has a neat porch facing the east. Adjoining the kitchen is a small woodhouse. The stairway to the chamber is west of the dining room. The family bed room is also west of the dining room, across the hall which leads to the chamber. Up stairs is a hall and three large rooms, the one in the northeast corner having two large windows and a door opening onto the piazza being set apart for Mr. Van Anken's study. From this room one has an unobstructed view down the street to Round lake, and across to the Chicago resort. The wood work inside is ash, oiled. The plaster finish is white. Below every window in the house is a panel. The doors and windows on each floor are uniform in height at the top. The eaves-trough is made a part of the cornice. Geo. Cole was architect and superintendent, James Hemmings inside painter, Chas. Swallow outside painter, Barbee and Ranger built the foundation and hand Mr. Myers did the plastering. Mr. Van Anken also has a well made two-story barn on the south end of his lot. When all is finished as he intends, it will make as comfort- and a home as one could wish.

The JOURNAL announced two weeks ago, that Mr. W. P. Brown had a night blooming cereus about to bloom, and that friends would be notified when it would open. Last Monday evening, about 7 o'clock, it began to unfold its petals, and was watched with interest by those who soon after gathered to see it. When we departed about 9 o'clock it was about two thirds open, and its fragrance filled the house. It was almost a pure white, and when fully opened, it measured about ten inches in diameter. At 11:30 while yet in its highth of beauty, Mr. Brown cut it from the leaf and pressed it. A noticeable feature of the plant is the provision of nature to sustain the bud and blossom during its development. As the bud grew the parent leaf bent over until it rested against another leaf, and the bud rested on a leaf below; the united strength of the three being required to sustain the blossom when fully developed. The plant is five years old, and this is its second blossom.

Shipments.

The following are the clearances from the port of Charlevoix as reported from the custom house for the week ending Tuesday, Oct. 2:

Sept. 26—Schr. A. H. Newland, 5,000 lbs and 4,000 posts, F. J. Meech to Chicago.

UP THE FLUE.

"You must have some rare experiences to tell us, Mrs. Boswell," said persuasive Lieut. Russel, while we waited for the mail stage. "You have been all this frontier post ever since Capt. Boswell was stationed here?"

"Yes; we have been to see right years," she replied, with the rare smile that glorified her face. "Some of the time passed through many trying ordeals here, but I really think that I had an adventure in the East, before I married the Captain, equal to anything that I have experienced."

"Will you relate it and oblige us?" urged Russel.

"Mrs. Boswell," said Dan, the irrepressible youngster of our party, "Jim," jerking his thumb toward the Lieutenant, "is out West here on purpose to spill ink for the New York papers. You can become a heroine of romance if you will."

"Thank you," said our little hostess. "I don't mind accepting the honor."

Three of us were sitting in an inner apartment of the small frontier hostelry. The bar-room was packed with miners, and we had chosen to have our supper served by ourselves, as we had appointed to go on to Custer City in company.

Mrs. Boswell was much below the medium size, quick of speech, light of movement as a bird, and graceful as a fawn.

"It was in 18—," she began; "I had just made the acquaintance of Capt. Boswell, he having some business matters to arrange with father, had called at our place several times. Finally, there came a rare day in autumn, and he and father were closeted the greater part of the day, overhauling papers, documents, deeds and receipts. My fatiney at that time was doing a great deal of business as an attorney.

"At bed-time father said to me: 'Bess, you won't mind an evening alone, so long as Thomas is absent, will you?'

"I said no, for, although there were many robberies being committed in the neighboring cities, private families in the suburbs felt no fear. Our house was a mile from the city proper, and a half mile from neighbor s other way.

"We finished, he continued. I guess the Captain has got to hunt up some papers concerning the estate before he can give Barron a satisfactory title. We shall go to Judge Whitcomb's office, and our search may be so successful that Hardock will find us home again. Still, we may be detained longer. Shan't I stop and tell your cousin Milly to come down and spend the night with you?'

"'No—yes,' I contradictorily answered. 'Do as you please; I am not timid in the least with Thomas here.'

"But Capt. Boswell is going to leave $5,000 here until he returns.'

"'Does any one know about the money?'

"'Only ourselves.'

"'Then I am not afraid. Beside, you are likely to be back before graveyards yawn and thieves do walk abroad.'

"Thomas brought the horse round, and, while father spoke to him, I took of the Capta in's sleeve.

"'Where is your money left?'

"'In my father's desk in the library,' I can be locked with a tender, inquiring glance into my face; how the little woman's cheeks flushed at the mere mention of it, and said: 'Little girl, if you are to be left afraid, we will not go.'

"I told him, honestly, that I was not afraid. I never had that strain of timidity in my make-up, peculiar to womankind; and neither took away.

"I sang about my work, as I put things in shape around the room, and viewed the brilliant sunset, without a fear of care.

"Thomas, our new man-of-all-work, was very busy puttering about the grounds, tying up grapevines and watering evergreens. I knew there was some coarse aftermath upon the hill, that father was anxious to have put in the strawberry beds, and, seeing Thomas go up there with his basket, I tied a scarf over my head, took another basket, and went up to help him.

"As I passed up the hill, I saw a man in the highway speaking to him. I hesitated about going on, but the man made only a moment's pause, and then went down the the hill, and was soon concealed by a turn in the highway.

"'Who was that Thomas?' I inquired.

"'Oh, miss, it was a man from the mills, saying that my brother has had a bad fall on the dam, and is bellowing for me to come and see him. His legs be broke entirely.'

"'What will you do?'

"'I told the man I could not come to to see him to-day—but if I went, miss, I would be sure to be back by 11 o'clock, if not earlier.'

"'You may go, Thomas, if your brother is hurt so bad. Papa will not be away long.'

"'But, my young lady—'

"'Never mind me in such a case as this. I always was very tender-hearted. You may go, and I will run right back to the house.'

"He talked a few moments more, was profuse in his thanks for my kindness, and then started down for the city. I took up the two baskets, and went singing to the house.

"I sat an hour by the open window, enjoying intensely this being alone, and the quiet beauty of the cool, autumn evening.

"Perhaps you will wonder at this," and the dimples played about her pretty mouth, "but little Bess was singing a new song in my heart, and the quiet let me hear the sweet echoes.

"But directly I chided myself for being rather careless, as the road was thoroughfare, and a chance straggler might surprise me. I arose, closed my window, and, obeying some strange, impressive power, I walked through the hall into the library, took my father's key from the accustomed place, unlocked his desk, found the package of $5,000, and, placing it in my bosom, relocked the door, and returned to the sitting-room. I confess that I had no need of a fire, as that from the kitchen stove warmed the sitting-room sufficiently for this mild weather.

"The house was old-fashioned, very, with a fireplace in the sitting-room opening up into a chimney of capacity sufficient for a foundry stack. We had cheerful open fires later on; but the house, being an ancestral pile, was getting somewhat dilapidated, and the partition separating the flues in the large chimney had fallen in. Men had been set to clear out the rubbish and make repairs, but the work, half done, was suspended on account of the arrival of Capt. Boswell and this important business affair.

"I would have enjoyed immensely to kindle a sparkling fire in the wide, wide fireplace, but, as affairs were, could not. So I mused in darkness for that had allowed me entrance into the chimney. I ran the risk of discovery and death in any case.

"Oh, why did not my father and his companions return? It might be hours first.

"They had found me absent from my chamber and sitting-room, and there was no longer need extreme caution. They hurried from one apartment to the other. I could feel the jar of moving furniture, and closet doors were shut loudly. The upper part of the house was ransacked, and then they came down the stairs into the room. Then they came to their new. With direful oaths they mismanged the lower doors, and finally returned to the sitting-room.

"'I saw the light here last,' said Thomas, moving with his lamp across the room, 'and here is the lamp on the table.'

"'She must have got out.'

"'No; I watched for her, and every window is fastened on the inside.' Then he continued: 'Curse her! she's a witch! and hailed they stood and marvel without a word after me. I'll take to catch and knife her myself now.' How he ground it out between his teeth.

"'Shall we search more?'

"'It's no use; we've turned over everything under which a mouse could hide.'

"'What, then? Shall we waylay the old man and his him?'

"'They haven't the money; it was left here.'

"'The cellar,' suggested the voice.

"Once more they dashed out only to return in hot haste now, for there was the trot and rumble of a horse and carriage on the bridge between us and the city.

"'Stay,' urged the stranger, 'tramp us some kind of a story, and we may secure the money yet.'

"I will, replied Thomas, 'but the girl's a witch, and I am just as sure that she is somewhere near us all the time, and would laugh down my mouth at the top of the chimney. Father and Capt. Boswell drove in the yard, and up to the door, just as the clock struck 12.

"'Thomas,' called my father, in his ringing tones, 'come and take care of the horses.'

"Receiving no response from his usually punctual factotum, he sprang up the steps and uttered an exclamation of horror at finding the door open.

"'Boswell,' said he, 'we certainly saw a light here when we came down the hill.'

"'Quick, Jason,' said the Captain, 'there has been foul play here.'

"'Foul play? My God! my poor little girl.'

"'Father,' I strove to call, but the first attempts clocked in dust and soot, ended in a hysterical hiccough.

"'Where is that? What is it?' called my distracted father, and both men dashed for the library.

"I now strove to descend, but the movement brought down bushels of mortar and broken bricks from all sides, and closed up the flue. I fancied thought me of the rope, and by sticking my feet in here and there, I went up the chimney hand over hand.

"Agile as a cat, when I reached the top of the low chimney I sprang down upon the roof and began calling loudly for father.

"You should have heard them run through the house and hallo before they located my voice. At last the Captain came out of doors.

"'Will you get me a ladder, please,' said I, 'I want to get down from here.'

"'A ladder, Jason,' shouted the Captain, 'the little girl is on the roof.'

"'For the love of Heaven, girl, how came you there?' said my father, as I landed upon the ground and began shaking the soot from my clothes.

"'I went up there through the chimney, papa. But you had better put up the horse—you will have to groom him yourself to-night—and then I will tell you all about it.'

"The Captain led me into the house, for I was trembling violently.

"'Now,' said father, being absent only a moment or two without letting me have time to say the smut from my face and hands, 'now tell us what this means—my little girl climbing the chimney like a cat at midnight?'

"In a few moments matters were explained.

"'Thomas, the villain!' ejaculated my father. 'I'll have him if I have to hunt the two continents for him, and he shall have his deserts.'

"He kept his word. Thomas got a term in the State's prison.

"When I gave the Captain his money I should have burst out into hysterical sobbing, only I remembered the soot in time to prevent shading myself in black cravonny and Capt. Boswell believed that it started and tears were but always certificates of the best materials, and"—

"And," finished Dan, our jester, "it may be said, Mrs. Boswell, that you actually the to his arms."

She smiled and bowed, as the sonorous tones of the driver came in among us:

"Stage ready, gentlemen."

Cooling Off a Composing-Room.

The composing-room of the New Orleans Picayune is situated in the upper story of its publication-house, just under the roof, and in summer is exceedingly hot. Last season an inspiration seems to have come to one of the compositors, and he suggested that the roof be moistened with water. This was done, and the result was that the temperature was reduced in the composing-room from 110 degrees to 80 degrees. The cost of the experiment was trifling.

The composing-room of the New Orleans Picayune is situated in the upper story of its publication-house, just under the roof, and in summer is exceedingly hot. Last season an inspiration seems to have come to one of the compositors, and he suggested that the roof be moistened with water. This was done, and the result was that the temperature was reduced in the composing-room from 110 degrees to 80 degrees. The cost of the experiment was trifling.

ETIQUETTE AND COMMON SENSE.

The Relations Between the Sexes Should Stand on Proud Equality.

The amount and degree of unmitigated nonsense that occasionally gets itself spread abroad by and among sensible people under the disguise of being etiquette are, to say the least, somewhat astonishing. This has no reference to that common sense and kindliness, that genial courtesy and mutual respect that under the general title of "good manners" form the minor morals of society. Nor does it mean the arbitrary rules by which society in particular communities decides to guide the walk of its members in matters of small importance. These are purely arbitrary, are founded on no particular sentiment of ideas, and vary widely with different countries and communities. To be sure, they may be, and often are, full of shoddy or sham; their observance is usually insisted upon the more strongly the more arbitrary they are; and the freedom-loving individual may feel their demands to be oppressive and distasteful. But for all this there is a certain necessity of granting obedience and of submitting gracefully to "the conventions."

But aside from these things there are certain absurd ideas that get confused in some way with the kindly common sense and these formal rules, and occasionally get themselves accepted as a portion of that labyrinthine structure called etiquette. And, by way of illustration, we clip the following from an article answering the questions of several correspondents, as to what a young lady should do under certain circumstances. "Another writes to ask us if she should take a gentleman's hat and coat when he calls. Never. Let him take care of these. Christianity and chivalry, modesty and ancient custom make a man the servant of women. The old form of salutation used by Sir Walter Raleigh and other worthies was always, 'Your servant, madam,' and it is the prettiest and most admirable way for a man to address a woman in any language."

Now, we submit that the question of whether or not a lady should be company of a gentleman's hat and coat when he calls has nothing to do with the relations between men and women. It is something to be amenable to politeness and circumstances and individuals. And, as for man being the servant of woman, or "the old forms of salutation," it is all arrant nonsense. The oppressed occupants, and in accordance with it a vertied wooden box was constructed in the corner of the room, with hooks and pegs for hanging coats and furnished with a pipe for supplying water at the top and a pan and drain at the bottom for receiving and carrying it safely away. The supply-pipe was bent over the upper edge of the shelf, and fitted with a nose like that of a watering-pot, so as to deliver a shower of spray instead of a solid stream. On connecting it with the service-pipe, the nozzle of the spray-pipe was found to cause an active circulation of the air in that part of the room, which was drawn in at the upper opening of the shaft and issued again, cool and fresh, at the door level.

The summer surprising thing about the experiment seems to have been the effect of the water in cooling the air to a degree much below its own temperature. With Mississippi water, which when drawn from the service-pipe indicated a temperature of 81 degrees, the issue of the room in which the thermometer at the beginning of the trial stood at 96 degrees, was cooled in passing through the length of the shaft to 74 degrees, or about 20 degrees below the temperature at which it entered, and 16 degrees below that of the water which was used to cool it. Incidentally the absorption of heat by the evaporation of a portion of the water accounts for its refrigerating effect, but the result seems to have been so easily and inexpensively attained, that the experiment is worth repeating.—Helen Campbell, in The Continent.

Two Queer Russian Duels.

While quartered in Russia shoot each other with pistols or pierce each other with swords, the common folk settle their troubles in their own way. Our Kalish boys, for instance, the blacksmiths by trade, had to settle the question which one of them should have a girl with whom both were in love. Without much ado they armed themselves with the heaviest hammers they had, and began the fight. The one swung his dreadful weapon straight at the head of his antagonist, but the latter skillfully avoided the blow, and then in his turn he swung his hammer and crushed the head of his rival. He got the girl.

In the Crimea two Tartars quarreled on account of their common sweetheart, and they agreed to settle their troubles in their own way. Without any artificial weapons, they met each other as the bucks do, striking each other with their horned heads. They made half a dozen rounds; blood flowed from both of them, yet neither of the Tartars would yield. After another furious round, one of them fell down exhausted. Being crazed by defeat, he drew his knife and cut his throat on the spot. The winner, crowning with a wreath of bumps, repaired to his sweetheart, whom he now possesses alone.

Outrunning Death.

"Think of a man getting seasick from riding on a locomotive engine," said Commodore Farley, who shot down from Philadelphia to Atlantic City in a caboose of more than a mile a minute to visit the bedside of his dying child. "Seasickness is, of course, not the term to apply to the disorder, but the term expresses it better than any other name I can think of. My ride created the same feeling of wretchedness that comes on the ocean always gives me, and the sickening sensation of being carried out of its being caused by the rolling of a vessel it was brought on by the pitching and tossing of the locomotive.

"I received a telegram telling me of my child's condition about 2 in the afternoon. Every moment after that was an hour. I realized how excessive was the danger, for I had been away for several nights with the little one. There was nothing but the telegraph-patches were sent ahead occasionally regular trains to run by signals and remain until the engine passed. We were about a minute getting out of the business part of Camden. Then we flew, but no rate could be fast for me. As we rushed along, we exchanged ourselves in a cloud of dust that was so thick some-times that I could not see half a dozen cars ahead. The whistle screamed a perfect warning almost every second. Indeed, it seemed to my excited mind as well as the whole, was redirect to her, and the "clerk" driven severely into the ground. Not a man was hurt, but there was some quick retiring during the next two seconds.

During the shelling of Alexandria Confederate gunners, armed with a pair twenty-four pounders, which made quite interesting for the soldiers engaged between the Stone House and the road. The shells, in a favorable case could be seen as they cleared the top of the parapet. One morning shortly after the duel opened, two gunners for several nights with the little 12-pounder, ran out a shell and rammed it home. They then sighted the piece, and sat in with the engineers. Hoisted over their heads, and remain until the engine was ready. We were about a minute getting out of the business part of Camden. Then we flew, but no rate could be fast for me. Where He Had Us.

There were seven or eight of us in the smoking-car, and by-and-by the conversation turned upon hotels. Six of the crowd were going to stop off at the same village in Georgia, and one of them remarked:

"Well, gentlemen, you can make up your minds to go through purgatory to-night."

"Why?"

"Well, there is only one hotel in the town, and that is run by the meanest man south of the Ohio river."

"Do you know him?" asked a chap who was suspected of being a lightning-rod agent from Chicago.

"I rather reckon."

"And what's he mean about?"

"Everything. He has bugs in his beds, uses beans in his coffee, his rooms are dirty, and he's a rubber in his charges."

"And there's no other hotel?"

"No. If there was he wouldn't get custom enough to keep an ox alive. He's the meanest man in the State of Georgia, and if I ever catch him outside of his town I'll put a head on him."

"I move that we resist my swindle on his part," said a drummer from Chicago.

"If I find bugs I'll fire the bed out of the window," said a patent-churn man from Ohio.

And thus it went on for half an hour, everybody anticipating and predicting, but the question finally closed by the originator remarking:

"Well, we'll have to put up with it I suppose, but you can make up your minds to the meanest, lowdown, lung-dog tavern-keeper in America.

The Size of Alaska.

Although Sitka and Alaskaeure almost synonymous with north pole to average minds in the temperate zone, a comparison of maps shows that Sitka and St. Petersburg, Russia, are in the same latitude, and the mouth of Chilcat river, the most northerly point that we visited, is on a line with the south coast of Greenland. The extent of this northwest territory and the vast distances between points are rather bewildering. Alaska itself is equal in area to all of the United States east of the Mississippi river. Counting the Aleutian chain, the Pirhyleff group, and the 1,100 islands of the Alexander archipelago, the total area of the Alaska island is 31,265 square miles. The island of Attu, the last of the Aleutian chain, is as far west of San Francisco as Bangor, Maine, is east of it, and the inhabited coast-line of Alaska, measuring 25,000 miles, is even greater than the whole coast-line of the Atlantic and Pacific shores of the United States put together.—*Cor. Confucius.

A Chinese sage, born June 19, 551, B. C. His father died when he was only three years old, but he was very carefully brought up by his mother, and from his earliest years, displayed an extraordinary love of learning and veneration for the ancient laws of his country.

At the age of 17 he was inspector of the corn-marts and distinguished himself by his industry, and energy in repressing fraud, and introducing order and integrity into the whole business.

When only 19 he married, but divorced his wife four years after marriage, that he might have more time for study, and the performance of his public duties.

The death of his mother, in his 23d year, interrupted, for a time, his work, and gave occasion to the first solemn and important act of Confucius as a moral reformer. According to the ancient, but then almost forgotten, laws of China, children were obliged to resign all public employment on the death of either parent. Confucius, desirous of renewing the observance of all the practices of venerable antiquity, did not fail to conform to this long neglected law.

The solemnity and splendor of the burial ceremony, with which he honored the remains of his mother, (another old custom that had fallen into disuse), struck his fellow citizens with astonishment, and they determined to bury their dead with the ancient honors, and this practice has continued to the present day.

Confucius now came to be looked upon as an authority in regard to the past, and ventured to speak as such.

He shut himself up in his house to pass in solitude the three years of mourning for his mother, the whole of the time he devoted to philosophical study.

He commenced instructing his countrymen in the precepts of morality, exhibiting in his own person all the virtues he inculcated on others. Gradually his disciples increased, as the practical character of his philosophy became apparent. His disciples were not the young and enthusiastic, but men of middle age, sober, grave, and occupying important public situations.

Confucius divided his disciples into four classes: to the first, he taught morals; to the second, rhetoric; to the third, politics; and to the fourth, the perfection of style in composition.

Confucianism is the basis of the social life and political system of the Chinese. It has been professed by all their greatest men, but it is less a religion than a philosophy, and does not pretend to treat of spiritual things; in fact, it contains no trace of of a personal god. "I teach you nothing," he says, "but what you might learn yourselves, viz; the observance of the fundamental laws of relation between sovereign and subject, father and child, husband and wife; and the five capital virtues, universal charity, impartial justice, conformity to ceremonies and established usages, rectitude of heart and mind, and pure sincerity." This, in fact, contains the whole doctrine of Confucius.

His innumerable works are laboriously studied by the higher literary class, and are considered the standard of religious orthodoxy. Confucius died 479 B. C., in the 70th year of his age. Funeral temples are erected to Confucius, and though his image is not used as an idol, his tablet is worshipped, and sacrifices of oxen and sheep are offered before it, spring and fall.

In the order of production, Michigan stands first among the states in the growth and manufacture of lumber, first in salt, first in copper, first in chimenal pig iron, certainly second if not first in its fresh-water fisheries, fourth in wheat, and fourth in wood. It has the largest copper mine in the world. Seven-tenths of all the wheat raised in the country is grown in nine states, and only three excel Michigan in the volume of this crop. In the last census year it produced more wheat to the acre than any state in the Union except Colorado, whose total yield was less than a million and a half of bushels. It is also one of the best fruit producing states in the Union. All its principal products are staple for which there must be constant growing demand.

A story is told by a Toledo west end preacher on a brother minister, that will bear repeating. On Monday last a circus was in the city, and the whole social circle city was so awakened that an outside view of the stretch of canvas would not suffice. The minister had compunctions of conscience against the grand exhibition, but whether he had a special dispensation to go he did not state. However, his linearity or belief would permit of the children going, and to their credit be it said they were to be seen, provided they had some good sized masculine protector with them. But unfortunately for him he had no children, and was therefore, to use an unorthodox expression "in a hole." Finally he hit up on a plan. He went to the president and tried to borrow his five year old boy, as a companion for the circus. But it wouldn't work, the president remarking, "De waffod's long time for me to see you. He'd recently to be a minister, and I want him excelled."

A little boy sat in front of his father and held the reins which controlled a restive horse. Unknown to the boy, the reins passed around him, and were also in his father's hands. Thus it is often with men, who think that they are shaping a destiny which a higher hand than theirs is really fashioning. They do their own will, but they also do the will of God. A stronger hand guides them, a mightier power holds the helm of their vessel, and saves from rock and wreck. Happy are they who quickly yield to the guidance of an almighty hand.

"I can't say that I do," was the reply. "Why?" "Because you are evidently unaware that a sealed package is not carried by the United States mail for one cent." "This is not a sealed package." "Excuse me, sir, but it is. The stamp is partly on the wrapper and partly on the newspaper, and the postoffice department has very properly decided that that makes it a sealed package. Packages of that kind may get through to their destination occasionally, but it is in violation of the rule. It is very convenient to fasten a newspaper via the wrapper in that way, but it should not be done."

The Keys.

The kidneys and liver are the keys to woman's health. If these organs are in a healthy condition no fear need be entertained of sickness, for the system will cleanse itself of impure matter. An excess of economy, strange as it may seem, sometimes defeats its object, and proves a hindrance instead of an aid. The farmer who concentrates his energies on the important points, seeing that his ground is in a suitable condition, his crops put in and tended properly, harvested and marketed at favorable times will find himself in the possession of more money at the end of the year than he who dissipates his strength and squanders his time keeping an undue vigilance over all the small economies about his place. Also that businessman who refrains from indulging in agricultural papers thinking he cannot afford them, is one of those who "saves at the spigot" only to "loose at the bung." So with other pursuits. The shopkeeper who cuts his assistants thought to the quality and subtleness of his goods, the responsibleness of his prices, and the civility of his clerks, is the one who will win success, rather than he who is always on the qui vive lest he shall lose a halfpenny on this or that sale. Country Gentleman.

It is generally conceded that Wiggins was too easily scared. That if he had come a month up to the chair agents and heisted without shadow of turning that the conjunction of the planets threatened direful disasters to the earth, he would have secured several splendid hits and put up his record as a weather prophet to the very top of the mast. He had fire, water, famine, earthquakes, volcanoes, tornadoes, cyclones, and cinders to pile him. There have been from six to twelve terrible calamities every month of the year, averaging a total of 25,000 lives, while the Java earthquake will probably increase to 100,000. A few of the most prominent will be recalled in enumerating them: The German floods; the burning of the Newhall House in Milwaukee; the burning of a circus in Poland; loss of the Atlantic Cable; the burial alive of seventy-seven miners at Jolliet, Illinois; fire and panic in a New York school house; Hull and Cornwall, England fishing wrecks; avalanches in the Italian Alps; the panic on the Brooklyn bridge; panic among school children at an entertainment in Sunderland England; burning of a theater in Italy; the capsizing of the Daphne, while being launched on the Clyde; the giving away of a pier near Baltimore; the collision on the Rome & Watertown New York Railroad; the earthquake at Ischia; the volcanic eruptions and earthquakes at Java; the floods all the way from Mississippi to Minnesota; the railroad catastrophe at Stuglitz, in Germany; the explosion of the Riverside's boiler; and scores on scores of less startling but quite as destructive catastrophes, which are actually too numerous to mention. Indeed, the extraordinary number of them, diminishes the horror of each one, and leaves only the frightful aggregate to appall the imagination.—Detroit Free Press.

STATE OF MICHIGAN. Thirteenth judicial circuit. In chancery. Carl G. Von Platen, petitioner, vs. William H. Condon, defendant. Suit pending in the circuit court for the county of Charlevoix, in chancery, at Charlevoix, on the eighteenth day of September, A. D. 1883. In this cause it appearing from affidavit on file, that the defendant William H. Condon is not a resident of this state, but resides at the city of Chicago, in the state of Illinois, on motion of Cruickshank & Grier, petitioner's solicitors, it is ordered that the said defendant, William H. Condon, enter his appearance in the cause herein, within four months from the date of this order, and in case of his appearance that he cause his answer to the petition to be filed, and a copy thereof to be served on said petitioner's solicitors within twenty days after service on him of a copy of said bill, and notice of this order; and in default thereof, said petition may be taken as confessed by the said non-resident defendant, and that a further order and decree be made in the premises as to the said defendant William H. Condon, as the circuit court commissioner shall deem just and equitable. And it is further ordered that within twenty days the said petitioner cause a notice of this order to be published in the Charlevoix Sentinel a newspaper printed, published, and circulating in said county, and that such publication be continued therein at least once in each week, for six weeks in succession, or that he cause a copy of this order to be personally served on said non-resident defendant, at least twenty days before the time above prescribed for his appearance.

STATE OF MICHIGAN, county of Charlevoix, ss. At a session of the probate court for said county, held at the probate office in the village of Charlevoix, on the first day of October, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-three. Present, James A. Kent, judge of Probate. In the matter of the estate of LEWIS ALTKREIMGAT, deceased.

On reading and filing the petition, duly verified, of Louis Mesenich, administrator of said estate, praying among other things that license be granted to mortgage said estate to pay debts.

Thereupon it is ordered that Monday, the fifth day of November next, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, be assigned for the hearing of said petition, and that the several heirs at law of said deceased, and all other persons interested in said estate, are required to appear at a session of said court, then to be holden at the probate office, in the village of Charlevoix, and show cause, if any there be, why the prayer of the petitioner should not be granted. And it is further ordered, that said petitioner give notice to the several persons interested in said estate, of the pendency of said petition, and the hearing thereof, by causing a copy of this order to be published in THE CHARLEVOIX JOURNAL, a newspaper printed and circulated in said county, four successive weeks previous to said day of hearing. ANNA L. WARE.

A Thousand Wives.

From Peck's Sun.

"Sit down on the ice box," said the boy to the grocery man. "What you need is rest. You are overworked. Your alleged brain is equal to wilted lettuce, and it can devise ways and means to hide rotten peaches under good ones, so as to sell them to blind orphans, but when it comes to grasping great questions your small brain cannot comprehend them. Your brain may go up sidewise to a great question, and rub against it, but it cannot surround it and grasp it. That's where you are deformed. Now, it is different with me. I can raise brain to sell to you grocery men. Listen. This Solomon is credited with being the wisest man, and yet history says he had a thousand wives. Just think of it. You have got one wife, and pa has got one, and all the neighbors have one, if they have had any kind of luck. Does not one wife make you pay attention? Wouldn't two wives break you up? Wouldn't three cause you to see stars? How would ten strike you? Why, man alive, you do not grasp the magnitude of the statement that Solomon had a thousand wives. A thousand wives, standing side by side, would reach about four blocks. Marching by fours it would take them 20 minutes to pass a given point. The largest summer resort hotel only holds about 500 people, so Sol would have had to hire two hotels if he took his wives out for a day in the country. If you would stop and think once in a while you would know more."

The grocery man's eyes began to stick out as the boy continued, as though the statistics had never been brought to his attention before, but he was bound to stand by his old friend Solomon, and he said: "Well, Solomon's wives must have been different from our wives of the present day."

"Not much," said the boy, as he saw he was paralyzing the grocery man. "Women have been about the same ever since Eve. She got mashed on the old original dude, and it stands to reason that Solomon's wives were no better than the mother of the human race. Statistics show that one woman out of every ten is red headed. That would give Solomon an even hundred red headed wives. Just that hundred red headed wives would be enough to make an ordinary man think that there was a land that was fairer than this. Then there would be, out of the other nine hundred, about three hundred blondes and the other six hundred would be brunettes, and maybe he had a few albinos and bearded women and fat women and dwarfs. Now, these thousand women had appetites, desires for dress and style, the same as other women. Imagine Solomon saying to them, "Girls, let's all go down to the ice cream saloon and have a dish of ice cream." Can you, with your brain addled with evelish and new potatoes, realize the scene that would follow? Suppose, after Solomon's broom brigade had got seated in the ice creamery, one of the red headed wives should catch Solomon winking at a strange girl at another table. You may think Solomon did not know enough to wink, or that he was not that kind of a flirt, but he must have been or he could never have succeeded in marrying a thousand wives in a sparsely settled country. No, sir, it looks to me as though Solomon in all his glory was an old masher, and from what I have seen of men being bossed around with one wife, I don't envy Solomon his thousand. Why, just imagine that gang of wives going and ordering full bonnets. Solomon would have to be a king, or a Vanderbilt, to stand it. Ma wears five dollar silk stockings, and pa kicks awfully when the bill comes in. Imagine Solomon putting up for a few thousand pair of silk stockings. I am glad I am still sit down and reason with me in a rational way about some of these Bible stories that take my breath away. The minister stands me off when I try to talk with him about such things, and tells me to study the parable of the Prodigal Son, and the deacons tell me to go and soak my head. There is darn little encouragement for a boy to try and figure out things. How would you like to have a thousand red headed wives come into the store this minute and tell you they wanted you to send carriages around to the house at 3 o'clock, so they could go for a drive? Or how would you like to have a hired girl come rushing in and tell you to send up 600 doctors, because 600 of your wives had been taken with cholera morbus? Oh!

O, don't mention it," said the grocery man with a shudder. "I wouldn't take Solomon's place and be the natural protector of a thousand wives if anybody would give me the earth. Think of getting up in a cold winter morning and building a thousand fires! Think of two thousand pair of hands in a fellow's hair! Boy, you have shown me that Solomon needed a guardian over him. He didn't have sense." "Yes," says the boy, and think of two thousand feet, each one as cold as a brick of choco late ice cream. A man would want a back as big as the fence to a fair ground. But I don't want to harrow up your feelings. I must go and put some mucic on pa. He has got home, and says he has been to a summer resort on a vacation, and he is all covered with blotches. He says it is mosquito bites, but me thinks he has been shot full of bird shot by some watermelon farmer. Ma hasn't got any sympathy for pa because he did n't take her along."

THE Buffalo papers, following the example of those of New York, are reducing their prices. The Courier-Express inaugurated the cut. Sunday copies are now sold at 5 cents, instead of 7 cents as heretofore.

FIRE at New York destroyed Isbell's Ellis grazing mill, and nearly ruined the factory belonging to C. L. Schleyer & Co. Ellis loses $75,000.

R. G. DUN & CO.'S Mercantile Agency reports the number of failures throughout the United States and Canada during the week ending Sept. 22 as 188, compared with 175 the previous week. The report says: "Assuming the fact that transactions, as interpreted by the bank exchanges, show a large decline as compared with last year, all symptoms regarding trade point to a prosperous condition. Speculation certainly is less important than a year ago, but legitimate trade continued as large in volume and certainly more satisfactory, both as to condition, stocks held and profits realized. The large majority of leading industrial companies are making a healthy loan in the 24 of trade. In cotton goods there has been a good deal of activity of a very healthy character, and, as in woolens, iron and other trading staples, there is in the main a satisfactory condition."

BERNARD GALLAGHER was last spring notorious as one of the lobbyists in the municipal exposition which ended in the Eaglish prisons. He escaped the sad fate of his fellows and returned to Boston where he has not been sentenced to six months in the house of correction. A Pittsburg plot to blow up the Hall at noon of the Democratic convention will continue to the malicious interest of the people, existing between them and to their material benefit."

POLITICAL.

SECRETARY TELLER maintains that the land-grant bills his department to which the civil service law applies is that of $1,301 clerkships. In this the Civil Service Commissioners were at issue with him. The Commissioners find considerable difficulty in framing rules to govern promotions from grade to grade, and say said to be the form agreed among themselves as to the manner in which competitive examinations should govern promotions.

A COMMITTEE of Democrats was held in Cooper Union, New York city, in the interest of harmony among the county factions. David Dudley Field presided. Charles A. Dana and Joseph Pulitzer were among the vice-presidents. Congressman Potter presented the resolutions, and Postmaster Pearson made the speech of the evening.

THE Greenback State Convention in Massachusetts was attended by 375 accredited delegates. Benjamin F. Butler was nominated for governor and John Bowers for Lieutenant-Governor without the formality of a ballot. Resolutions were adopted in accordance with other prominent Greenbackers in calling for a new convention at Worcester October 16.

BEN BUTLER was renominated by acclamation for governor of Massachusetts by the Democratic State Convention. William A. Simmons, in seconding the nomination, said the blue blood and cavaliers must go down. Frederick O. Prince was elected for Lieutenant-Governor. The Republican State Convention of Nebraska nominated M. E. Reese for Judge of the Supreme Court.

GENERAL.

F. B. THURBER, leader of the New York Anti-Monopoly League, was before the Senate Committee on Education and Labor in the opinion of the witness the issue of steam and cooperative land revolutionized the land movements within a few years, and had much bearing on the present unsatisfactory relationship of labor and capital. As a matter of fact, he lived on the extreme northern edge of the city, and had conferred benefits on humanity as a whole by his efforts to secure cheap railroad fares to the city. Speculation, he said, was necessary to the city's growth. Land values were increased by the improvements made by speculators. There were many instances where land had come to be of no use to the owners, and was thrown back on the city. Sheridan and Steadwell's return to city life was cited as a case in point. Mr. Thurber was examined at length as to the methods of the League, and the witness stated that the organization was not political, but was composed of men of all political parties.

MAJ. GEN. POPE, now commanding the Department of the Missouri, will probably succeed Gen. Sheridan in command of the Military Division of the Missouri, which includes, besides the Department of Missouri, the Departments of Dakota, Texas and the Platte. Gen. Sheridan has fixed upon the 1st of November as the date upon which he will turn over the command to Gen. Sheridan and steadfastly refuse to enroll life, although he was at one time elected one of the list of the army until the 5th of February, 1883. Gibson, of Washington, has been ill-barred as a patent attorney before the Interior Department on account of irregular practices.

Notes and News.

Burglars are numerous in the southern part of the state.

Three lives were lost in a railroad collision near Hudson last Saturday morning.

As we go to press the reports from Ohio indicate a small republican majority.

An alderman in Buffalo, N. Y., has been driven crazy by the abuse of disappointed office-seekers.

The pay roll of the Grand Trunk in Battle Creek is $1,000,000 a year. That alone is enough to build up a city.

Bricklayers are now receiving $6 per day for their work in Dallas, Texas, which is the highest wages ever paid in the state for any kind of mechanical labor.

Speaking of the modern crime of obsequiosism, has it been forgotten that while Mr. Tilden was President he was absent from Washington four years? —Evening Journal.

Rice A. Beal, a prominent republican editor and politician, died at Iowa Falls, last week, of acute pneumonia. By his death the republican party loses an active and efficient manager.

Supervisors here and elsewhere are "kicking" at the great increase of the state tax this year. There was a big jobature at Lansing last winter, and the net results are fast becoming apparent. They must have forgotten that there was another campaign to come.

A new evening paper in the interest of Stockbridge, Conant & Co., is the latest venture in Lansing. It is said that its press was bought cheap at Washington from a lot condemned by government printer Rounds. Its purpose is to boom Stockbridge for the U. S. senate, and Harry A. Conant for governor.

The occupation of the city policeman is not a bed of roses. At Detroit last Saturday, patrolman Geo. C. Kimball was shot and almost instantly killed by a rough whom he was trying to arrest, and at Lansing, Friday night, policeman Frank Ball was severely if not fatally wounded by a pistol ball, also received while in discharge of official duties.

Palace car 153, for the President's private use, upon the trip to Louisville and the Yellowstone, "was stocked with six cases of the best champagne, three cases of Rhine wine, four gallons of old Bourbon whiskey of 1880, fine Cognac brandy, Bordeaux and other wines, and four cases of Appollinaris water. A large stock of cigars was also provided. The pantry was well stocked and the menu during the journey was very elaborate. The stores for these two departments —wine vault and pantry—cost nearly $600." Carry the news to Mrs. Hayes. —Leader.

The Kansas City Times says the way to cause produce to bring a good price is to foster manufacturing establishments and other industries, thereby giving employment to many millions of men, who thus become customers wholly. A purely agricultural people is wholly dependent upon the people of more favored countries, where there are diversified interests fostered, for a market for such products as they may have to sell. Why is a farmer located near a large manufacturing town worth more than one fifty or a hundred miles away? Simply because the large number of customers in these manufacturing establishments must be fed, and the farmer finds a ready market for all the products of his acres.

The high protective tariff laws of this country not only stifle and oppress legitimate commercial enterprise and increase the burdens of taxation, but they in numberless ways provide sink holes of corruption and wastefulness. One of the thousand extravagances of our clumsy tariff system is noted in a late report of the supervising special agent of treasury. There are twenty two ports of entry at which custom houses with collectors and clerks are maintained, and at which not a dollar of duties was collected last year. Even on fifty two others in which the collections of last year did not equal the expense of maintaining them. Years ago, when the shipping trade was not confined to a few great ports, these custom houses transacted considerable business, but now that the trade is monopolized by a few of the larger cities there is no earthly need of these minor establishments, and they should be abolished. The only use they serve at present is to furnish fat sinecures for hungry stalwart place seekers. The next democratic congress should legislate these superfluous and costly offices out of existence.—Lansing Journal.

Just before the death of the Hon. Alexander H. Stephens a friend proposed to read a chapter in the Bible and pray with him. To this the expiring statesman replied: "I do object and most decidedly. I have no objection to prayer, for I belive in it; but I do object to death-bed repentance. I have made it a rule of my life to live each day as if it were going to be my last. In the heat of politics I have sometimes forgotten myself, but I am no better to day on my death bed than I have tried to be every day of my life, and I have no special preparations to make, and no special pleas to offer." He evidently believed that God accepts integrity of purpose in lieu of great achievements, and is prepared to make larger allowances for the worst of us than we ever make for each other.

A serious, very serious, charge has been made against Gov. Begole. It is claimed that he eats pie with his knife. This is the greatest charge of all. The Governor's friends have cleared him of every other accusation, including a too free use of the pardoning power, and robbing his grandchild; but this pie-eating charge will be apt to wreck him politically. For our esthetic farmers all eat their pie with silver forks, and they will not vote for a man who cuts a tough muler crust with his knife. Gov. Begole's administration thus far has been most commendable, and until now the republicans have been unable to make any indictment against him hold. But this pie charge is too crushing, and we may as well prepare our minds for a fork-eating republican governor next election.—Independent.

The New York Herald upsets the specious argument of protectionists, who claim that high tariff benefits the workingman, in this manner: It was shown before the senate committee that the wages of an operator were in England relatively higher than they are in this country. One of the witnesses said that the pay of Wheatstone operators in England was from £1 10s. to £2 10s. a week; a man could live comfortably in any part of England for ten or twelve shillings a week—say $2.50. For this sum meat four times a day could be had if desired. When I was traveling about the country, said the witness, "I lived sumptuously for twelve shillings a week, and this was living in hotels." On the whole, the lot of a telegraph operator in England was better than it was in America. In England an operator received from three weeks' to a month's vacation, with full pay. When sick—even though his illness extended over a period of years—he received half pay. When through old age he became unfit to work he received a pension which frequently equalled his salary. In the United States the company paid the same operator a salary of fifty dollars per month, but here the cost of living is much higher. An other operator said that it cost fifty dollars per month for meals and room; about one operator in a hundred had something left over at the end of the year. No pensions can be expected. The Herald has said again and again that wages expressed in money gave no basis for making comparisons. Table after table of money wages are given out as conclusive evidence, but which could not begin to stand close examination. It is the purchasing power of wages that is the main point to be considered, and, judged on this standard, it is misleading and ridiculous to claim that wages in this country are fifty or seventy-five per cent. higher than in Europe.

Every year it becomes more and more apparent, to even casual observers, that the soil and climate of this section are well adapted to the growth of clover. On all soils not absolutely swampy, or so light as to be classed as the poorest quality of barren plains, it flourishes finely. Especially is this true of the average and prevailing sandy loams of this region. There are no better clover lands anywhere in the country. It is a fact also that those farmers who for several years have been growing clover have greatly improved the quality and increased the productiveness of their lands and, as a result of this, are "getting along" much better than those who have pursued a different course. We could name a town in an adjoining county where the farmers are trying to make a living almost entirely by raising grain. And they succeed in "making a living," and that is all they do make, except every year making their farms poorer and less productive. Their wheat crops are diminishing year by year, and this will continue until they are forced to sell out, unless they change their tactics. If they would clover and plaster their farms thoroughly their land would grow better from year to year and their grain crops would be greatly benefited. But they will not do it. They don't take the papers. We haven't a single subscriber in that town. The advice in this article will do them no good for they will never read it. There are others who will read it and perhaps be benefited by it. There are many farmers in this region who will find it greatly to their interest to raise more clover. Some of our readers may say you have told us all this before. That is true. And we expect to tell it again and often, for we know that the clover crop lies at the base of the agricultural prosperity of this country.—N. W. Farmer.

We are now receiving many postal notes. They are a yellowish, oily scrip issued by the party that stole our fractional currency and funded it into bonds for us to pay interest upon, so we not only lost the best fractional currency we ever had, but have to pay the bondholder millions of dollars annually for the inconvenience and wrong that was inflicted upon us. The national party has made a great rumpus about this. They have filled the land with protests against the double outrage. At last the republican party has been forced to throw a crumb to the "noisy greenbackers." They issue this currency to us on condition that when we want a fraction of a dollar we we will pay three cents to get it, and then let other people do the same scrip without paying three cents they punch dates limiting the time in which it can be used. This dirty little scheme to make three cents every time any one of 50,000,000 people needs a convenient fractional currency ought to be known as the three cent swindle. Besides making the people pay three cents, this red tape arrangement requires a vast amount of clerical work. Already the leading papers of the country say they are not a success because of the enormous burden they impose upon postmasters. The scrip not being lawful money of course banks are not required to take it, and as they do not want any competition in the issue of money they refuse it in many cases and will do their best to drive it out. Cut off the duties, issue this fractional currency in convenient denominations, make it lawful money, and stop humbugging and munoying the people! —Iowa Tribune.

In the Commons Fifty-three Years.

The present "Father of the House of Commons," Mr. Christopher Rice Mansell Talbot, has sat for the county of Glamorgan, without interruption, from 1830, down to this day. Like other "Fathers of the House" who preceded him, he has been distinguished for brilliant silence rather than obstructive loquacity. His immediate predecessor, Mr. Cecil Forester, the present Lord Forester, sat for Much-Wenlock, from 1828 to 1874, and never broke silence during that time. His predecessor, Sir Charles Burrell, sat for Shoreham from 1806 until 1862, and during that period of nearly sixty years spoke but once, and that to introduce a bill forbidding housemaids to be compelled to clean windows from the outside.

The Wealth of Nations.

The true basis of national wealth is not gold, but wood. Forest destruction is the sin that has cost us our earthly paradise. War, pestilence, storms, fanaticism and intemperance, together with all other mistakes and misfortunes, have not carved half as much permanent damage as that fatal crime against the fertility of our mother earth. —Fair Oaks Record.

The Fall of a Wig.

In February, 1833, Summer being in England, wrote to a friend as follows: "Lord Brougham has given me his full-bottom Lord Chancellor wig, in which he made his great speech on the Reform bill. Such a wig costs 12 guineas, and then the associations of it! In America it will be like Balaclav' gown." The wig was sent home by Summer, to Judge Story, to whom he wrote from Germany in 1840, saying: "I am glad you have Brougham's wig. I always wished it to go to the law school. Put it in a case and preserve it." This request was complied with, and the wig became one of the penates of the school. But the biennial migrations of students, the resignation of professors and the repeated changes in librarians soon removed those who knew the value of the relic, and the wig, in its pasteboard box, sacked its way to the obscurity of the law-school garret.

Years passed: the death of Brougham in 1868 revived the faded memories of his eloquence, his varied learning and his wonderful career; a biographer of Summer stumbled on a clue to the existence of the wig, and sought it at the Cambridge school. None of the then-present generation of students had ever heard of it. Inquiry proved that the law-school garret had been cleared of rubbish several summers previous, and that the wig in its dusty box had unmigrated to a store-room in Harvard Hall. To old Harvard, then, the searcher went, and encountered an aged employe of the college who presided over the buildings in the yard. Yes, he remembered a wig in a pasteboard box in the old garret; for some time he and had then been turned over to one of his assistants. The assistant was summoned, and after long effort recalled to his memory the fact that he had given an old wig to his children to play with, and that they having extracted its attractiveness it had gone into the ash-heap, and one summer afternoon had been carted across Holmes field to the foot of by the willows, and dumped into the mass of earth and ashes which were then being graded to form the ground upon which now stands the north goal of the football field.

Further search was useless, and the wig was left to its fate; but the future students of the English law, as they finger the pages of Meason and Welsby, or Barnewall and Cresswell, and gaze northward from the windows of the new law building, may meditate on the mutability of fame, and the fall of Lord Brougham's wig from the pinnacle of the woolsack to the ash-heaps of Hollis field.—Boston Advertiser.

Affairs About Home.

Nice rain Monday.

Supervisors in session this week.

The Fountain City unloaded at the pier last Friday.

Call it the "Charlevoix Manufacturing Company."

Mrs. Dr. Carlston arrived on the Lawrence last Friday.

Charlevoix county is to have a new $400 safe for use of the clerk.

A. J. McLeod arrived home last Friday, on the Fountain City.

W. J. Stevenson is to cover the out side of his new shop with iron.

The Lawrence was loaded very heavy with freight last Friday.

Our report of shipments is unavoidably crowded over to next week.

"The Charlevoix JOURNAL is a good paper." Elk Rapids Progress.

With this number the JOURNAL successfully passes the first quarter.

M. L. Leach, of the Northwest Farmer, called at the JOURNAL office Tuesday.

This year gave the best crop of wheat and oats ever raised on Beaver Island.

M. J. Stockman gave planing mill stock a "boom" when he doubled his subscription.

D. S. Way has a lot of new and second hand sewing machines which he will sell cheap.

Supervisor Plettenpleve, of Bear Lake, remembered the JOURNAL this week while in town.

Chas. J. Grier and wife arrived last Saturday, and will commence housekeeping at once.

Most state exchanges quote the JOURNAL'S figures for new buildings and additions in Charlevoix; also the figures for the ship building interest, $47,800. Although Boyne's total is less than half that of Charlevoix, it is remarkably good for so small a village. That of Bay Springs is good, even without Chapman's mammoth hotel and improvements. We want to hear from East Jordan next.

Builders predict that next year's business will greatly exceed if not double that of this year.

We received this week a handsome map showing the lands of the Detroit, Marquette & Mackinaw railroad.

Charlevoix parties have put in bids for the removal of the wrecked Parsons at the mouth of the channel.

There will be a meeting of Baxter post No. 119, G. A. R., at Odd Fellows' hall next Saturday evening.

C. R. Bellinger has just received a new stock of silverware, which makes a fine appearance in his show window.

A. B. Carrier has severed his connection with the Manistee Democrat, and will henceforth devote his energies to the Frankfort Express.

Open lodge at G. T. hall Friday evening. An interesting program is being arranged and a good time may be expected. All are cordially invited.

Mr. Crum is moving a sawmill to a point six miles up Pine lake, and will erect it near C. P. Whitford's mill, already in operation. One by one the manufacturing industries increase.

The Pine Lake Lumber Co. are grading for a new saw mill, to contain 80,000 worth of machinery, the power for which is to be located 150 feet distant, to avoid danger from fire.

Messrs. Barber of the South Haven Messenger, and E. M. Enton, of Bloomingdale, made the JOURNAL a call last Friday. They expressed themselves well pleased with Charlevoix.

Greening & Geiken, the fish men, are each building a comfortable residence on the Mason addition, commenced since our report, and increasing the number of new houses to fifty-four.

The Cadillac Times furnishes more reading matter for the money than any other country paper we receive. Of 56 columns, 46 are reading matter, and the 10 columns advertising represent 40 business firms.

There will be a union temperance meeting at the opera house next Sunday evening at 7 o'clock, addressed by Rev. J. T. Iddings. The subject is one which will never grow old, and the house should be packed.

The dance at the Hilton school house last Friday was well attended and on the whole a very pleasant affair. Among the "light weights" were Edwin Cook and O. D. Hilton. The Blakely band, of Eastport, furnished music.

I say, J. N., don't apologize any more. People won't believe you pretty soon. Do the best you can, and then make your customers believe it is better than anyone else can do under similar circumstances. This plan works well here.

Our exchanges are full of reports of successful fairs. Another year something should be done here. It seems as if Charlevoix county could support such an institution, and this is the place to hold it. Let us see that something is done.

Mr. Geo. W. Jefferies has an enterprising lien. As a regular business she buys eggs larger than other hens frequently giving three to a yolk, but the other day, by a little extra exertion she produced one with three yolks. It measured 6¾8¾ inches.

Mr. Edwin A. Lee, agent for the Detroit safe company was here Monday and opened the safe of the burned planing mill. He found everything unharmed, not even scorched or browned. A safe that will stand such a test is certainly a good one.

The regular Sunday morning service at the M. E. church consists of two sermons, a five minute talk for children and young people, and a twenty-minute discourse for older people. Next Sunday morning the subject will be "Life a testimony."

The Boyne Statesman last week gave an exhibit of the building operations of that live little burg, and made a good showing. For new buildings and additions in Boyne, the aggregate is $25,200; for improvements, including "clearing lots," $6,375; total, $31,575. For Bay Springs, the Chapman hotel, barn, and improvements will foot up $30,000 when completed; new residences, stores, docks, etc., $15,500; improvements, including "clearing lots," $2,500; total for Bay Spring-

Mr. Harris moved that the board buy a safe for the county records, which motion was made the special order for to morrow morning at eight o'clock.

Mr. Thatcher moved that the board buy a map of the county, made by E. K. Robinson, for the sum of forty dollars, said map when not in use by the board to be kept in the office of register of deeds, which motion was carried.

Mr. Darrah moved that the map be mounted and varnished. Carried.

On motion the board adjourned until eight o'clock to morrow morning.

Oct. 9th, the board met pursuant to adjournment; roll called; H. B. Hipp absent.

The hour for the special order having arrived, Mr. Harris moved that the proposition made by Mr. Lee, of the Detroit Safe Co., to buy the large safe offered for $400, to be delivered on the dock at Charlevoix, to be paid April 1, 1884, at seven per cent interest, be accepted, which motion was carried.

On motion the board adjourned to eight o'clock to morrow morning.

The balance of the day was devoted to committee work.

Oct. 10th, board met pursuant to adjournment; roll called; full board present.

Mr. Hipp presented a petition from the citizens of South Arm township, asking this board to incorporate the village of South Lake, in said township, according to the provisions of chapter 127, of the compiled laws of 1871, which was on motion of Mr. Hipp, made the special order for ten o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. Miller presented a petition from the citizens of Eveline township, asking for a ferry across the mouth of the south arm of Pine Lake, at Ironton, which was read and referred to the committee on roads, bridges, and dams.

Mr. Miller presented a petition from Chas. H. Horn and others, asking permission to build a dam across Boyne river, on ¼ of n ¼ of sec. 21, town 32 north, range 5 west, which was read and referred to committee on roads, bridges, and dams.

On motion of Mr. Darrah, Mr. Plettenpleve was allowed to strike from his roll the w ½ of n ¼ of sec. 34, town 34 north, range 5 west, the same being state swamp land; and for the same reason Mr. Bailey was allowed to strike from his roll the following parcels: the s e ¼ of n e ¼, the n w ¼ of n e ¼, and the s w ¼ of n e ¼ of sec. 9, and the s ½ of n e ¼ of section 25, town 32 north, range 6 west.

Mr. Ward moved that the offices of county clerk and register of deeds be separated after Jan. 1, 1885, which was on motion of Mr. Darrah, made the special order for to morrow after noon, at 2 o'clock.

On motion of Mr. Bailey, Frank P. Myers was reappointed county superintendent of the poor for the ensuing three years.

Mr. Darrah offered the following resolution, which was carried:

Resolved, That the $300 appropriated by the county to assist in the construction of the Clarion and Petoskey state road be and is hereby authorized by this board to be expended on or near the south end of the present survey of said road by Jas. G. Lamoreaux, commencing at the center quarter post of sec. 4 in town 33 north, range 5 west, and thence north on the said line as far as the money will go; and that the county treasurer be and is hereby instructed to pay the same on the certificate of Jas. G. Lamoreaux, he having been duly appointed local commissioner of the said road.

Several bills of accounts were read and referred to committee on claims.

On motion adjourned to to morrow morning at 8 o'clock.

THE TRAIN-BOY.

Mid the rattling of the train,
And the locomotive's noises,
Like a genteel caribineer,
Comes the train-boy's voice;
And while manikin Countenances and wriggles,
He doth lustfully rejoices.

He will nudge you with his elbows,
And he'll feed upon your grief
With his big high-pressure box-lore
Till of course it's a shame;
And you wax resolve, and sorrow
Thak you over—all he gets.

With earnest he'll spell you,
Then his cough rings substantial;
And he'll in addar-one trousers
With his unabided hint,
Till he's ready to swear
"The freckled-gaited chemist.

He'll parade his water-lilies,
That were gathered in the spring;
Then a chewy jab me of yellow-
Covered literature he'll bring,
And these nice mi publications
In your lap he'll deftly fling.

Magazines he'll shower upon you,
Each portrait he will pose,
With his frozen 2 fic-looks framed,
Quit a room your—r choose;
And the self-same he's worked
Heaven knows how oft before.

You may sleep, r swear, or threaten,
But not every art exploit
To wit, steal his possessions,
And heed the noise alloy;
He has a cautious mind
Learn th steal, and many I train-boy.

PROVIDENTIAL PIGS.

"Oh, missus, missus! Somethin's done happened."

Blank horror and dismay were depicted upon the face of my small African, as she stood upon my threshold with upraised hands and eyeballs that seemed starting from their sockets. Her purpose was one of preparation, for with the innate consideration of her race she sought to break the news gently to me, but the burden of it was too great for her, and with the next breath she exclaimed:

"Dem pigs done crawed up Miss Lyddy's weddin' gown!"

"Glory," I exclaimed (she had been riotously christened Gloriana, "Glory, now did it happen?"

"Dinnin," said Glory. "Pears to me dem pigs has got Satan in 'em. Gimes Jeff's scooted from de hole what run down a steep place into the sea. I'll go an' fetch 'em a piece."

She sped on and instantly returned with a tattered shred of India mull that had once been white, and still bore some resemblance to a gown. Poor Miss Lyddy! This was all that remained of her dream of wedding splendors. It was too pitiful! I felt at once that the hands of good neighborhood had been irretrievably broken, and that Mrs. Heathorne must be made aware of this last and worst depredation of his unworthy pigs.

But who would break the news to Miss Lyddy?

Glory said I; "she's in the"

"Gone over to de bury'al place ob her ancestors," answered Glory.

Poor, faithful soul, even in those last days of her maidenhood, with the vague terrors of matrimony and the still more appalling responsibility of unsaved heathen souls hanging over her, she did not forget the ancestors. Long lines of Lyddinses lay buried in little sunken hillocks in the family keeping-place which lay just in sight of her sitting-room window. She herself was the last her race, and until within three weeks it had seemed that the only fate which awaited her was to live out her little span under the ancestral rose-tree, and then take her place in the silent ranks of those who had gone before. But a change had come. It came in the person of a returned missionary from the Micronesian Islands, who had buried the past and second partners of his joys and sorrows somewhere under the palm trees of those tropical lands and had come back to the scenes of his youth to recruit his health, since his case, and took up partner No. 3. He met Miss Lyddy at a woman's missionary meeting. He called the next afternoon and was invited to stay to tea. He accepted the invitation, and next morning Miss Lyddy came into my room for 1. tea, dissolved under the Lyddinks roof-tree for consideration and, with much visitation and many faint and delicate blushes, informed me that she had promised to share the future lot of the Rev. Nehemiah Appledoom, inclusive of his six children, and to support him in his arduous labors among the heathen of the Micronesian Islands.

I was struck dumb with amazement. "Miss Lyddy," I said at length, "have you duly considered this project?"

Her thin figure quivered, and her wire fuse, that had yet a delicate pendulum balance of youth in it, grew tender with feeling.

"Yes," she said; "I think I have. I have always had a presentiment that I should marry a minister or a missionary." Admirable and prophetic faith! "And Mr. Appledoom says he knew the moment he set eyes upon me that I was called to be his wife; so you see it is the Lord's purpose in either of us [illegible] to marry [illegible]."

I was a bachelor and very confirmed in my ways, which I plainly saw was what Miss Lyddy desired of me.

"I am to be married in church, I suppose," said Miss Lyddy, with a modest decision. "I am the last of the Lyddinses. All the Lyddinses have been married in church. I will go out to meet my own needfires. If I am to go to far-off lands, I am to go as the bride of the ancestors."

I ventured to make a little clearing in the thicket, but at least not for [illegible]. I shall leave a [illegible] Church, for I shall be [illegible] Lyddinses should [illegible] It is my desire to be married in my grandmother's wedding gown."

Miss Lyddy's voice trembled, and there was a humidity in her eyes, at which I did not wonder, for it was much like a funeral, after all.

"I thought, perhaps," went on Miss Lyddy, "I'd launch the venerated relic to you, you would tell me if anything were necessary to be done to fit it to me. I don't care for the fashions, you know, and my grandmother, as I remember her, was about my height, but still, you know—something—some changes might be advisable."

"Certainly," I said. "Do bring it to me. I should so like to see it."

"It is sprigged India robe called it Ingy mull. My grandfather, Capt. Simon Ludkins, brought it home from over the seas. I'll bring it."

Like some pale and gentle ghost she rose then and went to the bureau drawer and unrolled from rolls of linen that smelt of lavender the frail relic of Mrs. Capt. Simon Ludkins' wedding state. It was the embroidered mull, the undubbed product of Indian looms.

"Sich lovely, I said," and so well kept that it will be just the thing for you. Will you try it on? We can tell then just what it needs."

Miss Lidd proceeded to disrobe herself and put on the spider-net gown. As she did so the changes in fashion's mandates became only too evident. It had no waist to speak of, and just a little lace-trimmed puff for sleeves. Miss Lidby was evidently surprised. She had not thought of this. I knew well what the trembled look upon her face meant, and I pitied her maiden sensibilities. Could it be possible that great grandmother, Mrs. Capt. Simon Lud kins, had ever worn such a gown as this? She said not a word that could indicate the depth of her mortification, but her face was a study for an artist.

"There must be sleeves," she murmured, after a few moments of silent and embarrassed contemplation.

"Yes," I replied, cheerfully as my constrained gravity would allow. "And you might have a fichu and a flounce on the bottom."

She looked down. She had not before realized that the skirt of the venerated relic lacked a full quarter of a yard of too long the floor.

"However could they?" she ejaculated in an undertone. But she quickly recovered herself, and looked up to me cheerfully over her spectacles.

"She had set herself to heart the being married in her grandmother's wedding gown."

Miss Lyddy's voice trembled, and there was a humidity in her eyes, at which I did not wonder, for it was much like a funeral, after all.

"I thought, perhaps," went on Miss Lyddy, "I'd launch the venerated relic to you, you would tell me if anything were necessary to be done to fit it to me. Several new babies in town, but we will not enumerate them.

Mr. Galloway, of Echo, has traded off his farm for a house and lot in Scofield, Monroe county.

A fruit-tree agent, Robinson by name, wandered this way recently.

Rev. and Mrs. H. C. Scofield started Thursday for a trip to southern Michigan. They expect to attend the Baptist state convention, soon to convene at Coldwater, and to visit relatives and friends there and elsewhere.

Mr. J. McInnes has gone to Canada on a business trip. He expects to bring his parents home with him.

It is rumored that Minnie Lanway of this township, but now visiting in Minnesota, was recently married to a gentleman of the latter place.

Mr. John Muirhead, of Norwood, was in town recently and took his two boys, aged eight and six years, home with him. They have been living with their grandmother, Mrs. Campbell, for three years, but John has taken unto himself a new wife and expects to keep them hereafter.

The age of Adelaide Higgins was thirteen years instead of seven, as stated in a recent number of the JOURNAL.

The C. & W. M.

All Grand Traverse people are interested in the progress of the Chicago & west Michigan railroad, which it is expected will be completed through to Traverse City within two years, and, possibly next season. The Grand Rapids Eagle recently continued the following from the Free Press:

The Chicago & West Michigan railway company have about completed the negotiations with Brown, Howard & Co., the owners, for the purchase of the Toledo & Milwaukee railroad. The possession of this new line would lift the Chicago & West Michigan to a leading position among the railroads of the state. Its main line now extends north and south from Pentwater to new Buffalo, 163 miles, with an extension viâ La Porte to La Crosse, Ind., thirty-eight miles; branch from Holland to Grand Rapids, twenty five miles; Holland to Allegan, twenty three miles, where it connects with the Toledo & Milwaukee railroad; Muskegon to Big Rapids, fifty five miles; Grand Rapids to West Troy, sixty three miles; and Mears to Hart, three miles. Total, 376 miles. The Toledo & Milwaukee is located is about 174 miles long from Toledo to Allegan, and if acquired by the Chicago & West Michigan would increase its mileage to 550 miles. The Chicago & West Michigan is principally a lumber road, return freights being light, but the new acquisition will place it in a situation to control a good share of the carrying trade of western Michigan as well as a limited portion of the central and southern tier of counties. The Chicago & West Michigan is controlled by Boston capitalists, chief among whom are the Adams family. Charles Francis Adams and his son John Quincy Adams. The same persons are the principal owners of the Detroit, Lansing & Northern railroad. The Toledo & Milwaukee is being built by the same parties that constructed the "Nickel Plate." Their business is to build railroads to sell. The Newaygo branch of the Chicago & West Michigan will soon be extended to Baldwin, a point on the Flint & Pere Marquette. The company has now running twenty-six of the fifty new furniture cars, ordered at the Muskegon shops. The company is also building several elegant new passenger coaches, baggage, mail and express cars for passenger service on the road. Jersey C. Kimball, the general manager, is known as one of the most thoroughly practical, energetic and economical railroad managers in Michigan. An Eagle reporter, in conversation with one of the general officers of the C. & W. M., this morning, learned that the announcement of the Free Press is not quite true in fact, as to the purchase of the Toledo & Milwaukee or the Michigan & Ohio railroad. That this action has been somewhat considered, is true, and that the purchase may yet be made, is also true, but thus far nothing definate has been proposed or done. The Michigan & Ohio is in close relation with the Ohio Central which proposes to be one of the great coal roads of the country, and the business of shipping coal to this section is certain to increase very largely and rapidly in the near future.

The distance from Baldwin to Traverse City is about 60 miles, and this is all that remains to be built to connect the C. & W. M. road with Grand Traverse bay, and open up at once a large passenger and freight traffic that would add very materially to the receipts of the road, which would pass through a magnificent farming country and tap a large amount of valuable pine timber, while at Traverse City it would take much of the carrying trade of the entire bay country, as this trade is very largely with Chicago. The sooner this road is completed to this point the better for the road and the country. Grand Traverse Herald.

Ben Butler.

The national greenback state convention of Massachusetts nominated Gen. Butler for governor. The democratic convention of the next day also nominated Butler, but made separate nominations for the balance of the ticket.

Gov. Butler made a characteristic speech, reviewing and defending his official acts, and bitterly scathing the republican party.

The campaign in Massachusetts is now open, and will be the fiercest contest the old bay state has ever known. The war cry of the republicans is "anything to beat Butler," and they will spare no money nor efforts to accomplish their purpose. They are terribly exasperated by old Ben's exposure of the rottenness and corruption of republican management, and realize that one more such overhauling will ruin their chances forever. The republican candidate for governor notified the committee that he would put in a quarter of a million dollars himself, and with the other contributions and assessments the machine will have an enormous corruption fund, and the experience of the past shows that it will be expended without regard to honor or principle, but solely with a view to buying as many votes as possible.

On the other hand Butler has his wonderful pertinacity, his unequaled sagacity, the wisdom of experience, and the strongest hold upon the common people that any man has had since Lincoln was shot. He is the ablest politician in the United States, and will give the Beacon Hill aristocrats a bad racket.

The interest in the contest is not confined to Massachusetts, but is national in its extent; for the opinion is gaining ground that if Butler successfully at this election he is a strong candidate for the presidential nomination next year. Independent.

A Dry Eye for Sentiment.

To determine the value of building stone, a meditation among the tombs is a very good thing, and a capital article on the "life" of stone used for public or private structures could not fail to be written upon what might be observed in humble village graveyards or splendid city cemeteries. In far fewer years than most people imagine monuments erected to last to the resurrection are in ruins—before the grandsons of "the poor inhabitants below" are dead. Nature will allow just as little waste material as she can help and has a very dry eye for sentiment. The subject is far from being exhausted.

Some Catch About It.

An insurance agent applied to a woman in Detroit to induce her to get her husband's life insured.

"Will I be sure to get the money if he dies right off?"

"Certainly, madam."

"But will you give me an assurance that he will die right off?"

"No, madam, we cannot do that."

"Well, then, what good will it do me to get his life insured if he doesn't die? I knew there was some catch about this insurance business."

Pilfered Paragraphs.

An old criminal was once asked what was the first step that led to his ruin, when he answered: "The first step was cheating a printer out of two years' subscription—when I had done that the devil got such a grip on me that I couldn't shake him off."

Now is the time your horses and cattle need attention. To prevent disease and tone up the system you will find Dr. Porter's Celebrated Powders unexcelled. Full pounds 25 cents. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co. 2-43

Each postmaster, custom officer and paper-doing newspaper in the country is calling aloud for President Arthur's re-nomination, but as Arthur was an old ward boss when he was struck by lightning he knows what howls from such sources mean.

Always Useful.

If you have rheumatism, neuralgia or any sprains, stiffness, sore muscles, bruises, sore throat, &c., Dr. Porter's Universal Liniment will cure quickly and surely. If your horse has bone spavin, sweeny, sprain, bruises, or lameness of any kind, Dr. Porter's Universal Liniment is the best possible remedy you can use. Large bottles 50 cents, ordinary size 25 cents. For sale by O. B. Weed & Co.

Price $1 per bottle. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co.

Coldwater, according to the Sun, has had a man and woman who are free-lovers. They were living together without marriage. Some time ago the woman left as if she could like exchange. She corresponded with another free lover, her partner being aware of it and offering no objection. And before she went to join the new partner, she made her old ones as comfortable as possible and didn't leave holes in his stockings.—Milan in Michigan.

Restored by Magic.

Has the lake air and wind spoiled your complexion? Do you long for a preparation that will completely remove moth, tan and pimples, and leave the skin clear and soft? If so, you have but to buy a bottle of Hamilton's Arcadia Balm, which is simply magical in the effect and perfectly harmless. It is used in all the best families and gives unbounded satisfaction. Price 50 cents per bottle. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co.

Michigan has a motto upon her coat of arms. Si quæris peninsulam amœnam circumspice. If you wish to see a beautiful peninsula, look about you. That is no flaming advertisement of exaggerated proportions, but a simple introduction to those who enter our borders. the apparently complimentary language of which is found by every visitor to be a truthful statement. The old derisive songs that told of ague, marshes, rattlesnakes, and wolverines as the natural products of Michigan are not sung any more; and none visit the peninsular state who do not go away with pleasant memories of her climate, soil, productions, and people.

The Keys.

The kidneys and liver are the keys to woman's health. If these organs are in a healthy condition no fear need be entertained of sickness, for the system will cleanse itself of impure matter. If you have headache, dizziness, loss of appetite, lame back or side, failing strength, languor, excessive flow of urine, &c., remember they are the advance guard, and give warning to more serious trouble such as diabetes, bright's disease, &c. Parmelee's Improved, Quintuple, Kidney and Liver Cure is a sure cure for all these diseases. Price $1.00 large bottle. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co.

The question, "What do whitefish feed upon?" is often asked, because nobody ever finds a whitefish with anything in its stomach. We had a discussion with some of our fishermen upon the subject not long ago, and last week Mr. David Smith, sup't of McCormick & Commade's fish house, brought to the office a pan full of wriggling creatures of the beech variety, which were taken from the nets of the Detroit boys on the north end of the bay. He asserted that millions of these tiny creatures will be found upon the feeding grounds of the whitefish, and at times are brought up by the nets in such quantities as to cover the decks and embarrass the fishermen. Mr. Smith asserts that the half-digested mess of these creatures is the only food he has ever found in the stomach of a whitefish among the many thousands that have passed through his hands; and the Detwiler brothers, who have had long experience and are unusually intelligent men in their calling, say that whitefish, outside of the spawning season, are never caught upon ground where this beech is absent. It is about an inch in length, very slender in form, and with black and white stripes running alternately around it.—Herald.

Echoes from the Election.

Even Iowa, though plucked like a brand from the burning, has been badly scorched. Last year the republican plurality was 27,871; this year it will not foot up more than 25,000, and may be under 20,000. The democratic figure it from 5,000 to 12,000.

Evening News.

A Columbus, Ohio, dispatch says it is conceded at republican headquarters that Headley's majority will reach 12,000 to 15,000 and that the democrats will have a majority of 26 on joint ballot in the legislature. The prohibitory amendment received over 300,000 votes, but lacked some 20,000 of the number necessary for adoption. The increased republican vote in the cities is accounted for by the trading of certain classes of democratic votes for anti-prohibition ballots, while temperance republicans in the rural districts traded for prohibition votes, and on the whole the republicans got left.

The results of the Iowa election are encouraging in the extreme to the democracy. Every township in the state reports democratic gains. They have raised their legislative representation from 22 to 52 in the house and from 3 to 15 in the senate, and full returns may enlarge the figures. Prohibition is defeated. Whatever may be the composition of the legislature, and if the latest returns bear out the promise of the earlier, the plurality of Sherman (rep) for governor will not exceed 5,000. The democrats have elected Cook for congressman in the sixth district by 1,000 majority over the railroad candidate Stiles. Anti-prohibition and anti-tariff will sweep Iowa in 1884.

The Cincinnati Enquirer of last Thursday morning display headed its Ohio election returns as follows: "Hurled Back! The Grand Old Party in the Hour of Death Rattle its Bones Over the Stones. It's a Rotten Old Party Whom Nobody Owns. The Buckeye State Fires a Big Republican for 1884 Judge George Headly Elected Governor by a Majority Estimated at Twelve Thousand. A big Democratic Majority in the Legislature, Securing the Election of a Democratic United States Senator—But the Prohibitory Amendment is Doubtless Lost. Thus there are Gains for all Our Losses, There are Smiles for all Our Tears, And the Bad Republican Horses are Kicking Like Bob-Tailed Steers."

Ohio is a democratic state. As indicated by two platforms in that state on which the canvass just closed has been fought, the two parties did not differ materially on any important point of general national policy. Judge Foraker is known everywhere as a very popular man, while Judge Headly not only lacks many of the necessary elements of popularity, was not the first choice of a majority of the Ohio democrats, has been sick during a greater part of the campaign, and by leading democratic factionists in the state was not given the support to which his nomination entitled him. Under such circumstances a hundred some majority for Headly means that the people, particularly in the country districts, have become deeply dissatisfied with the way in which republican office holders have managed the trusts placed in their hands and with republican extravagance, corruption, chicanery and monopoly fostering, and that the reformation they have made up their minds that they must look to those who have been their political opponents. The Ohio election means that the republican party must go. Grand Rapids Democrat.

There isn't a grain of consultation for the republicans in the Ohio disaster not one. They can derive no satisfaction from the usual plea of an off year. True it is an off year, but it wasn't an off year vote. The whole army was in the field on both sides, reserves and all; it was perfectly understood that the election would have an important bearing on the presidential election; John Sherman promised the state an Ohio candidate for president if it went republican; there were directly involved in the contest, the governorship and all the state offices, the legislature and the United States senatorship. It was no sideshow, but a circus of the biggest kind that can be exhibited in a single state, and the desperation with which the campaign was conducted on both sides showed how fully the importance of it was appreciated. It is the sheerest nonsense to belittle the result. It is a disaster to the national republican party. It assures the loss of New York this fall, and it makes republican defeat in the presidential campaign all but certain. It will send to the democratic party as to a safe harbor, all the rag, tag and bobtail of doubtful voters who are determined to be on the winning side, and throw half a dozen doubtful northern states into the democratic list. Evening News.

The fate of prohibition in Ohio should satisfy the republicans of the folly of meddling with it. However determined the so called temperence element of the country may be to enact it, the majority of the people are determined to preserve their personal freedom with respect to the sale and consumption of liquor. Any party which commits itself to forcible interference with that freedom will be crushed in every state where the foreign element has any strength, and that means in nearly every state which is essential to success in a presidential election. The persistency of the republicans in obtruding the issue has permanently alienated the Germans of Ohio, and seriously shaken them in their allegiance in Michigan, and it is extremely doubtful if anything that can now be done, can win them back before the great contest of next year. It is true, that the republican ranks are so full of radical prohibitionists that it is nearly as dangerous to offend them by ignoring the question as to offend the Germans by bringing it to the front, but they should remember that the temperance people, at the very worst, will only set up a ticket of their own while the advocates of personal liberty, when offended, will go badly over to the enemy. It is much safer therefore to throw the subject out of politics altogether and let the prohibitionists wear themselves out, if they insist, in a little party of their own. They will not go over to the democrats in any event, and after one or two vain efforts they would come back to the republican fold, their natural place, to stay. Puritanism or moral fanaticism that sort of zeal which impels its victim to devote all his energies to the reformation of his neighbor's vices, and forget all about his own has always been the mainstay of the republican party. Without some moral issue to rouse this zeal into a crusading enthusiasm, the party falls into apathy. It was in their despair of finding such an issue that the leaders of the party have recently been reaching out toward prohibition, and they had indeed gone so far that the republican organs and stump orators all over the country had joined in a chorus of denunciation of the wickedness of liquor selling, and were announcing everywhere that the next great work of the republican party was the destruction of the cup that cheers and nine inebriates. It was a foolish mistake. The world is a long way behind—before that—of thing. The managers will have to look around for something else. There is nothing but disaster in meddling with the dietary habits of the people. Evening News.

The republicans have controlled the national government continuously for more than twenty two years. During that period there has been an enormous increase in the total number of government officers and servants. It was just as apparent fifteen years ago as it is now that a system of examination and promotion for merit would improve the civil service. The republicans had the power to establish such a system at any time. Did they institute a reform or make any effort to bring it about? Not at all. They have been all these long years, carefully maintaining what they now admit to be a partisan civil service until they see that they must soon relinquish their hold on the national government. Then, under the administration of a president who was turned out of the office of collector for alleged unfitness, and who has been reviled and abused without stint by the pretentious reformers of his own party, a civil service reform bill is passed which was prepared by a prominent democratic senator and is best known by his name, and thereupon the republicans all over the country look complacently at one another and cry out, "We did it."

N. Y. Sun.

Clippings from the Boyne States-man: "The sere and yellow leaf" never presented a grander or more sublime scene than along the shores of Pine Lake.—E. S. Johnson has given us for exhibition at this office a corn stalk measuring 11 feet long, grown on his farm.—Geo. W. Childs has purchased Abraham Bros.' livery stable. As with all other things in which Mr. Childs is connected we look to his keeping a No. 1 livery stable. R. S. Hubbard has commenced work upon the enlargement of his store. The addition is to be 40 feet in length and one story high, with an iron roof. —Still improvements continue. New buildings are springing up on nearly every vacant lot in town, and nights we no longer dare take our accustomed short cuts across lots for fear of colliding with the frame of some new building.—The Sheboygan mill has shut down and those who were employed in the mill whose homes are at Sheboygan, including Mr. Quinby, superintendent, and Messrs. DeVille and Conway, have returned. We will be glad to see them back next spring.

The republican press of Michigan continues to be solidly united in condemning fusion. In the opinion of the editors it is degrading, unholy, and utterly unworthy the countenance or approval of honorable men. These gentlemen appear to have experienced a decided change of heart since the time of the civil war. We distinctly remember that during the days when the prospects for northern victories were growing dim and doubtful, there there wasn't a republican writer who pregued for a moment against a fusion with the northern democracy for the suppression of the rebellion.—Lansing Journal.

The Evening News, in a recent issue, forcibly condemns the prevalent practice of opening political gatherings with prayer, a proceeding which the New York democratic convention very sensibly dispensed with. The position of the News on this question is entitled to the approval of every sensible citizen. If there is such a crime as sacrilege, it is committed by the divine who rises in a partisan meeting and petitions the supreme Ruler to champion the cause of a political party.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

THAT American genius is busy is shown by the Patent Offices reports. During the year ending June 30 last the number of caveats filed was 35,734, as against 30,062 in the previous year, and the receipts of the office for 1883 were $305,989 more than in 1881, and $165,020 more than in 1882.

QUININE is said to be decreasing in demand at the West, a prominent Chicago firm reporting that weekly sales are a fifth of those a few years ago, a circumstance due to the disappearance of malaria as farms are drained and lands cultivated. In New England, on the other hand, the sales of quinine have greatly increased of late as malaria has succeeded typhoid as the current type of disease.

IT is claimed that birds and insects disappear when deadly epidemics are about to appear. Testimony of experienced Europeans seems to be in favor of the hypothesis. One writer says: "I venture to suggest that the investigation and collection of trustworthy meteorological data during the prevalence of epidemics, and of collateral information bearing thereupon, have not yet received as much attention as it deserves from the medical profession."

IN South America cattle have increased so rapidly the last few years that bullocks have declined from $10 per head to a few cents over $6 per head. It is estimated that in two years from now the number of cattle in the Argentine Confederation will number 28,000,000, against 13,000,000 in 1877, 4,000,000 of which are in the state of Buenos Ayres. The Confederation also claims 60,000,000 sheep, 10,000 goats, 4,000,000 horses and 18,000 ostriches. The population is only about two to the square mile.

ACCORDING to figures furnished to the American Bar Association Convention, in 1856 there were 20,930 lawyers in this country; in 1870, 40,736; in 1880, 64,187. The number of lawyers in the States at the close of the Revolution was from 500 to 700. Only 135 attorneys had been admitted in New York by royal license prior to the Revolution, and many of these were dead when hostilities broke out. In 1880 there were seventy-five female and 64,062 male lawyers; sixty-four of the seventy-five female lawyers were under 60 years of age, eleven were 60 and upward. To-day there are 70,000 lawyers in the country. In another half-century there will probably be 800,000.

MR. BATTERSON, of Johnsonburg, Pa., started to move his family to where he had established a basket factory in the woods, and got lost in the darkness. Happening to strike a railroad track, they foolishly followed it with their horse and buggy, but as they emerged from a deep, narrow cut, after crossing a bridge, a train dashed past. They had driven for a mile and half over the most dangerous portion of the Johnsonburg extension of the Erie railway, and had crossed the great Kinzua viaduct, the highest railroad bridge in the world, which spans the Kinzua ravine at a height of 301 feet above the creek. Their escape from death was owing solely to the stopping of the north bound coal train a mile below the rock, on account of a hot journal.

DR. J. MITCHELL gives a more hopeful account of the progress of the colored people of the South than some others. He says that the freedmen have nearly 1,000,000 children at school; publish over eighty newspapers; furnish nearly 16,000 teachers; about 15,000 in the high schools and colleges; about 2,000,000 members in the Methodist and Baptist churches alone; that in less than twenty years they can own many acres of land in Georgia alone, and over 5,000,000 in the whole South; that the increase in the production of cotton since the emancipation has been 1,000,000 bales per year, or one-third more than when working under the lash; that colored men have engineered and nearly completed a railroad in North Carolina, and finally, that they are assessed for over $20,000,000 of taxable property.

THE following characteristic incident of life on the far West is given in a recent letter to a friend from Socorro, N. M.: Joel Fowler, who killed three "rustlers" about a year ago, started from his ranch for a cow load. He had discovered that one of his men, known as "Dandy," was a brother of Pearrest, whom he had killed, and he discharged him. Pomp came into Socorro, and, with "Butcher knife Bill," returned to Fowler's ranch to kill him. Fowler was riding to Alma ranch with his men, and when within twenty yards of the stone house met Pomp and Bill. Both of them drew their revolvers. Bill fired at Fowler. The latter drew his shotgun and killed Bill at the first shot. Pomp then ran behind the house and fired five times at Fowler, who had dismounted and ran toward him. Pomp escaped into the house and stood off Fowler. At this time McGee, who occupied the house, rode up, and learning of the trouble, told Pomp to come out of the house. He received no answer and thought that Pomp was dead. So he walked up to the door and kicked it open, and then put his head in to look around. Pomp shot him through the head, killing him once. Fowler then proposed to Pomp that he come and fight him alone with pistols or give himself up and be taken to Socorro. Pomp did not answer. The horse was then tied to drive him out, but, rather than be taken, Pomp killed himself by sending a bullet through his head. The three bodies were buried in the same grave.

THE singular fact that venomous snakes will frequently permit children to play with them and handle them without molestation, recently had an apt illustration near Stroudsburg, Pa. Two little children, the one but 2 and the other 3 years of age, were playing together. The former was the child of Franklin Smith, the latter the child of John Heins. They were playing in Smith's yard. Mrs. Smith, having occasion to go to the door saw the two children sitting sitting side by side on the grass. Her child had a short stick in its hand with which it was giving frequent light taps on the ground in front of it. Mrs. Smith supposed they were playing with a small land-turtle which had been seen about the yard for some days, and after watching the children's mirth for some time she walked toward them to see what they were doing to the turtle. When she had approached to within a few feet of them she was horrified to see that the children were amusing themselves with a large rattlesnake. For a moment she was speechless and motionless. The snake lay at full length, apparently enjoying the caresses and attention of the children. At each touch of the stick the snake would simply raise its head, open its mouth and dart its tongue in and out. It was this that made the children laugh. Recovering herself Mrs. Smith advanced a step or two. The snake discovered her. Instantly its whole attitude changed. Like a flash it threw itself into the coil of springing, by which it alone can inflict its deadly bite. This movement frightened the children, and they moved away out of its reach. Mrs. Smith then found a club and succeeded in dispatching the snake. This done she fainted away. She was found unconscious on the ground by a neighbor who was passing, with the children crying at her side, and the dead snake a few rods away. She was soon resuscitated, and told the above story. The snake was over four feet long and had seven rattles.

Making a Man Laugh for the First Time.

Years ago an inn was kept at Amherst, Mass., by a man who was never known to laugh. This peculiarity gave rise to a wager by a young man that he could make him feel laugh. He proceeded to the hotel, and, sauntering in, saluted the landlord thus:

"Good day, Mr. Warner. How long have you kept this place, Mr. Warner?

"Well, I've kept it all day, I guess."

"Mr. Warner, won't you make me a rum or whisky sour?"

"The sours are all out," was gravely answered.

"Well, put mix one pop, anyhow, and look into it. That'll make it sour enough."

The drink was made, the young man tried it and chuckled and coughed. Spitting the first swallow out, he again appealed to the landlord:

"Now won't you make another, and put a keep one eye slant this time, neither that this pop-eyed drink'll broke out into just one loud guffaw, the first laugh for a lifetime. Then he invited the young man to take a drink "on him." The wager was won. New Haven News.

The Meanest Man in York State.

A farmer in Yates county a few years since put out the early partner of his joys and sorrows. He buried her in a private cemetery and erected a marble slab to her memory. In a short time he married a second wife. He then plowed up his first wife's grave and now uses the tombstone for a doughnut board in front of his house. Rochester Express.

GOSSIP FOR THE LADIES.

Love's Power.

If I were blind, and thou should enter
Ever so softly in the room,
I should know it;
I should feel it:
Something subtle would reveal it,
And a glory round thee center
That would flame upon the gloom.
And my heart would surely awaken,
With Love's second-sight peradventure,
Though the crowd to thee should throng,
If I were blind.

If I were deaf, and thou shouldst speak to me
Ere the presence I had known,
I should know it;
I should feel it:
Something subtle would reveal it,
And the seal at once be broken
By Love's rapid modernism.
Dead to other, strange voices,
And the world's second-sight peradventure—
Whisper, wherever? Thou art,
I will reach my heart!

If I were dead, and thou shouldst venture
Near the coffin we are lay,
I should know it;
I should feel it:
Some subtle article would reveal it,
And no look of noblest essence
Need upon that face of clay.
Shouldst in it kiss me, conscious flashes
Of Love's fire through Death's cold ashes
Would rise back the cheek to red.
I were dead.

Astronomy.

"Are you to take astronomy next term, Elise?" inquired a classmate of her young friend.

"Hardly. But Augustus is giving me splendid astronomical lessons during the vacation."

"Isn't that nice? Has he text books and an atlas?"

"Oh, Ladies, my dear. He says I'm all the world to him, and when I bow my head on his shoulder he is my Atlas." Hartford Post.

How He Felt.

"I heard you kissed the prettiest girl in the room at the party, last night," observed an Austin youth in blue-glass goggles to his companion.

"Well, I did, for a fact. What of it?"

"Oh, nothing, but I'd just like to know how you felt during the sweet osculation?"

"Felt like a beefsteak."

"Like a beefsteak?"

"Yes, smothered in onions."—Texas Siftings.

Flowers.

The love of flowers is very dear to the female heart. In the squalid tenement houses of New York a reporter found that most of the women, who were not perceptually degraded, had pots of flowers in their windows, evidently as much for love of them as for the sake of the ornament. Even in Five Points, where the degradation of the people is the most appalling, he found that the love of flowers was not entirely extinguished. Where they could not be had they were carefully cherished, as though from them came the only consolation for the wretchedness, misery, and foul air of the surroundings. There is something good left in the woman who loves flowers.

The Woman Who Adopt Puppies.

As for "those women who prefer nursing puppies rather than their own babies," they are moved by the universal law of nature, which struggles for the survival of the fittest and subordinates the inferior to the superior animal. In their case the difference between the puppy and the baby is that the puppy knows how to become a street dirt, display a voluptuous form to every man she meets, and so animalize him to the extent of her power; a puppy will never smear behind her fan and turn up her eyes, like a duck in a thunderstorm, to catch an eligible young man. Puppy will never be a dude, or a defaulter, a fool or a felon, and the probabilities are that the baby of such a woman would be one or several of these curiosities. "Then every woman should know her place, in animated nature, and if one feels that this is subordinate to that of a dog, why should she not step into it?"—Mrs. Swisshelm.

Another Audience Desired for the Man Who Lectures to His Wife.

It is, of course, made by lawyer part of a wife's duty as such to list to patiently, and if possible intelligently, all the evening complaints of her husband, whether directed against herself or the neighbors, or society at large. It is probably also her duty, if her husband happens to be an "economist" or a "close" manager, to listen with due interruption or cross-examination to any scheme for the improvement or reorganization of the world that he may like to descant upon when the day is over and the family assembled for the evening meal. It is a duty in the performance of which wives play a noble and self-sacrificing part in life, and we have no doubt that one reason why the world revolves has been so long sustained is that so many of those who would otherwise have joined in it have, by wasting their breath on society upon their wives, or at least by pouring their woes into their wives' ears, been rendered undisposed, that they have lost over and over again their chance of "new deal." No one who has thought much about marriage can have failed to perceive that this power it has of benefit social effects. But then marriage only supplies a domestic audience, and a restricted one at that. An audience consisting of a wife may be sympathetic, but sympathy cannot make up for lack of publicity, the crying need of many a body with a grievance. Besides, the bachelors, a growing, if not an influential class, have not even this compensation for the restriction which their existence has placed upon wives fail to do their duty, and while keeping themselves within the law, make it very unpleasant for husbands who undertake to entertain them with a tea table account of their woes, or of the means which they would take to put down "monopoly." Bad wives have even been known to feign fatigue and yawn on such occasions, and in the slang of the day suggested that they are entitled to "a rest," instead of listening with respectful sympathy, as they ought.—New York Evening Post.

The Melancholy Third Sex.

The paraphernalia of a pretty woman's toilet-table, and her many visits to her mirror, are subjects of ridicule among the strong-minded of her sex. Men laugh at them as the amiable signs of a not unbecoming vanity. Those who look a little deeper into the life of that butterfly of our civilization, the woman with charms, will perceive that these things are a mere matter of business to her. Every morning when she rises she looks to see if she wakes as fresh as ever: when she dresses she observes herself with anxiety as to whether there is any giving way in her appearance. If there is any, without doubt or hesitation it must be repaired. And, if nature is not strong enough to mend the breach, then art must come to the rescue; and with good reason, for the pretty woman knows better than any one else the intrinsic value of her appearance. Without it she would go under; at the mere thought of losing it she feels like a drowning person. And why? Because, as every one knows, consciously or unconsciously, society consists of men, women and a third class—those unhappy people who have no claim to any part cular distinction, and who do not seem to have much reason for living. This last variety of the human species is generally composed of females. A man is a man, however ignorant and world-worn he may be; he is almost always capable of rising to an occasion; he will find intoxication in the society of a pretty woman though he be a grandpapa; and to her he is a man, and she puts on her pretty manners for him. But a woman, unless she has some attraction, some claim to appearance, some charm at her own, is hardly a woman. She may be a nice person, belonging to a set of nice people; she may be distinguished by rank or talent, or gifts of conversation, but she is of the third sex. Men do not court her or make fools of themselves for her, or feel that their eyes are helplessly attracted to her, or that their feet walk toward her of their own accord. She may be feminine, marriageable, and endowed with all the moderate and winning instincts of her sex; but, if she has no appearance and no charm, she is out of the running. There is something depressing, voluptuous, beautiful in the mere word "woman" when it is used to describe one who is at the dream of her sex. It needs no adjective. The favorite words of the day—"charming," "sweet"—are inadequate. When a man throws his life, his fortune, his reputation away, and it is whispered that it is for a woman, no adjective is needed. She could not be more so one—a mere nobody; yet she must have possessed that power which makes a Queen out of a nobody, and a throne of every chair she may choose to seat herself upon into a throne. She must have had attraction.

Who can wonder, realizing the difference in life to a woman with appearance and a woman without it, that she should use every trick at her command to keep those charms which God has given her? Having known the brilliant life of the butterfly, to become a mere working bee in the garden would be to her insupportable. Instead of taking in its honey and enjoying it to the full, it would all slip past her.—London World.

The Prices of Trotters.

Each blue-grass breeder of prominence has his regularly printed catalogue of sales, every one of which has for sale a would-be of his best stallion on the cover. Some, as Gen. Withers, insert the selling price after the intrinsic value is advertised. In looking over such a catalogue, from $400 up to $2,000 age found to be demanded for the premier animals, with proportionately more for older ones that could be at once made useful. But when a horse has reached the ranks of the great "flyers," there is hardly any limit to his value. One with a record of 2:30 may be estimated as a good way worth $10,000. From 2:30 down to 2:20 $1,000 may be added for each successive second. When we come into the teens, and begin to talk of the record, juggling with gold and diamonds is a coarse occupation in comparison. Mr. Ericsson is said to have paid $25,000 for Dexter, and $26,000 for Rarus, and Mr. Vanderbilt $20,000 for Maud S. But this last mare before she had made her great time; now that she has made it, you are told confidentially that a private stable ready to draw his check will pay or $75,000 to have her. You can get a horse that will lead her, a trial to beat the distance for having the honor to either the one or the other; how does it pay? Well, it pays first in stock-raising; it pays next in the opportunity to take purses and stakes offered by the great system of racing circuits; and no doubt it pays in those gentlemen who subdue from racing, and live their driving in private life, find it pays in a pleasure and improved health from the kind of exercise and extravagant use it is, which they might not be able to procure so well from the expenditure of equal sums in any other direction. W. H. Bishop, in Harper's Magazine.

Henry Life Insurance.

Not very long ago the British life insurance companies were called upon within the short space of one year, to pay the enormous sum of $6,250,000, on policies on the lives of three heavily insured noblemen—viz.: the Duke of Newcastle, the Marquis of Anglesea, and the Earl of Fife; and shortly afterward the same companies paid $1,250,000 insurance on the lives of two noblemen—making an aggregate sum of $7,500,000 insurance paid on five lives. About fifteen years ago the heirs of Sir Robert Clifton received from the life insurance companies of Great Britain $1,250,000, that being the amount of insurance which he carried. Don Pedro II, the Emperor of Brazil, carried a large life insurance in foreign companies. Napoleon III had an insurance of $200,000 on his life, and this was the chief reliance of the Empress Eugenie after his death. One English Earl has his life insured for $1,000,000, partly American companies.

The largest life insurance ever made for any American Prince is that of J. K. Anderson, "the oil Prince," of Titusville, Pa., who is insured for for $5,000,000. The late James Park, Jr., of Pittsburgh, had his life insured for $2,000,000. Among Americans insured for $250,000 or more are Hamilton Disston, of Philadelphia; John Howe, of St. Louis; W. H. Langley, of Gallipolis, Ohio, and J. R. Stetson, of Philadelphia, Pa. Other large insurers are Pierre Lorillard, of New York, $255,000; W. Devoe, New York, $250,000; Cyrus W. Field, New York, $240,000; Frank Jones, Portsmouth, N. H., $205,000; Amos Whitely, Springfield, Ohio, $200,000; B. F. Shurtleff, Boston, $200,000; F. B. Roberts, New York, $200,000; E. P. Allis, Milwaukee, $175,000; John Gibb, New York, $150,000; Charles Pratt, New York, $145,000; S. B. Hyde, New York, $105,000; E. D. Moon, New York, $151,000; E. B. Dodge, New York, $125,000, and W. H. H. Moore, New York, $125,000. Cyrus W. Field, New York, $125,000; Ezra Cornell, W. H. Belknap and John Sherman, of New York, have policies for $125,000 each; Wm. C. Whitney is insured for $110,000; Rufus Hatch for $76,000; William Fullerton, $75,000; B. B. Chaffin, $75,000.—New York Sun.

Bombarding a Scarecrow.

They were two tramps, and they were crossing a cornfield in Flatbush in search of watermelons. The farmer's scarecrow had fallen up against the fence.

They armed themselves with desiccated tomatoes and began pelting the figure. Then they began to make bets of $1,000,000 as to which could plank it in the back or knock the hat off.

As the sport grew exciting they approached nearer and nearer, and presently flung young pumpkins at the nondescript.

"Now is there that last tomato fetched him in the head?" said one. "Let me have a chance at him. I'll make a scarecrow of him that'll make the crows take to pure beets. The peasantry believe that these pest are sent by God as the messengers of his wrath, and they are, therefore, too much inclined to bow before the scourge, and to let what they believe to be the justice of God pass by. In some districts they simply recite in prayer, and the images of saints are placed in the paths of the locusts, just as was done recently in St. Petersburg, when the holy statues were placed in front of the great conflagration. But this year the affliction is so terrible that the peasantry have taken reasonable measures to check it. Men, women and children are busy killing the pests. The insects are crushed, burned, trodden upon systematically by trained horses, and great ditches are dug in which the enemy is heaped up.

An Old Inventor.

Capt. John Ericsson, who, by building the monitor, revolutionized naval architecture, has passed his 80th year, yet he is young, physically and mentally. He gives twelve hours a day to brain-work, and, that too, of a novel wearing kind, invention. His vigor and health prove that the hardest sort of mental labor is not injurious, provided the worker lives temperately and takes sufficient physical exercise.

Capt. Ericsson—he was formerly an officer in the Swedish army, hence his title—rises at 7 o'clock, winter and summer, takes a cold bath, and then partakes generous quantities of tea for two hours. At 9 he eats a hearty breakfast of peached eggs and coarse, brown bread, which last meal he finishes by half-past 10 o'clock, when he eats a substantial dinner of vegetables.

He goes from the dinner-table to the drawing-board, where he works till 10 o'clock. He then walks for two hours and goes to bed at midnight. The moment his head touches the pillow he falls into a sound sleep. He does not eat between the two meals, drinks nothing but weak tea, milk, and lee-water, and neither smokes nor chews tobacco.

Capt. Ericsson, though an octogenarian, is now engaged in perfecting his solar engine, which is to attempt to use the sun's rays as a direct motive power. If successful, he will give a great boon to the tropics.—Brother Companion.

THE JOURNAL

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, MICHIGAN.

EXPERIMENTS have been made near Coblentz with a view of making ravens take the place of carrier pigeons. The ravens have the advantage over the pigeons of being less liable to attacks of birds of prey. Some ravens covered a distance of forty miles, but the London Field thinks it very improbable that they could ever be trustworthy as messengers.

A PITTSBURGH jury gave a verdict against a railroad company for the amount of money stolen from a passenger in a sleeping car. "Since I've decided," the Judge charged, "sold a ticket for $2, in addition to the regular rates of passage, offering the facilities of sleeping as an inducement to pay the extra money, it bound itself to protect its patrons while they were asleep, and for the time being helpless."

A JACKSONVILLE merchant has just shipped North 200 boxes of lemons grown in Florida. They are said to be as fine lemons as can be grown anywhere, their color being perfect, while they are finely flavored, and as juicy as the best Messinas. Mr. Beam, the shipper of the lot, says the fruit-growers throughout Florida are paying very much more attention to growing lemons since a successful experiment was made in curing them last season, and are setting out or budding a large number of trees.

A CINCINNATI man is quoted as saying: "Hitch, I have a scheme. I am worth $2,750,000. My brother is worth the same. That's $5,500,000. We can command an equal backing in Chicago. That's $10,000,000. I can get $5,000,000 in Trieste. That's $15,000,000. With $15,000,000 backing I can get $5,000,000. I propose to take this and buy up the wheat crop of the Pacific slope, load it on vessels at the Golden Gate and ship it around Cape Horn to Europe. I can control the market in the United States and make the market in Europe. What do you say?"

MR. ROBERT LAIRD COLLIER, writing from London to the Chicago Tribune, says: "The Prince of Wales simply amazes everybody by his restlessness, rather, unresting activity. One might ask, with no little reason: 'When does the Prince sleep?' He plays many parts, and plays them all uncommonly well. He is here, there, and everywhere. He is perpetual motion himself. One reads of him at York, at the exhibition there in the morning, and then at the fisheries exhibition, in London, in the evening. He entertains like a prince, and is the most genial of guests in the house of his friends, and one might say these friends are of all classes."

A MAN by the name of Churman, living at Niagara Falls, was so anxious to get rid of a superfluous dog that he clapped the unhappy beast into the rapids from the Goat Island bridge. During the afternoon a man walking across the new suspension bridge descried an animal moving under the bank and informed the gate-keeper on the American side, who with the aid of a boat recognized the dog of his friend Churman. The creature had actually gone over the cataract and escaped with sufficient vitality to wag his tail and frisk about with many demonstrations of pleasure when his master appeared upon the scene the following morning. Churman by his exploit the dog that, a fortnight ago, was only good enough to drown, has become the hero of the village and will be encouraged to pass long his life to the remotest possible limit.

A PARIS journal tells that a New Yorker, whom it names, on coming into the possession of $5,000 from the estate of a dead uncle, devoted it to playing lansquenet; that he enjoyed a most wonderful run of good luck; that he broke bank after bank in the French capital until the doors of those that remained solvent were closed defensively against him; and that a year of this prosperous gambling made him the possessor of half a million. He returned to New York and took fine quarters in a leading hotel. A year passed, and he did nothing except spend money lavishly. He went back to Paris last winter and made a fresh onslaught on the gambling hells. This time the conditions of luck were reversed. His was bad and the gamblers' was good. He lost as rapidly and steadily as previously he had won, and now he is without anything.

"SO ENGROSSED was Judge Black's mind," says the Philadelphia Record, "during his life with the many duties which such a career as his crowded upon his attention that he paid but little attention to his personal appearance. Unless the fact were forced upon him that his wardrobe demanded replenishing he would never notice it. He never ordered a suit of clothes himself, and disliked to change an old and comfortable suit for a new and stiff one. His clothes were made by a Philadelphia tailor, who was compelled to resort to strategy to capture the Judge when a measure was to be taken. A member of the family always looked out for things, and usually the first intimation the Judge had of a new suit would be when it was sent to him, and further persuasion had to be employed to get him to put it on."

LITTLE Switzerland is disturbed about the large increase in its foreign population. Between 1850 and 1880 nearly 60,000 natives of other countries settled within Swiss territory, and about the same number of natives of Switzerland emigrated to other countries. The foreign-born population of the whole republic, as compared with the whole of the native-born population is only about 7½ per cent., but in some districts, especially those near the border lines, it is very much larger. In one canton the foreigners constitute 34, and in another 37½ per cent. of the entire population. A slight increase in the foreign immigration, and the native emigration will place the foreign residents in the majority, a fact that probably would have no parallel in any other country, and might lead at times to serious difficulties. The Germans contribute the largest proportion of immigrants. They number 25,262. There are 53,620 Frenchmen and Italians, and 42,700 Austrians.

THERE are fewer ways in which locusts or grasshoppers do not make their appearance in the southern part of Russia. One first observes in the horizon a black cloud agitated by a peculiar internal movement. Then it appears directly above you, and the rain of the large and heavy insects is so violent that the best thing you can do is to take to your beds. The peasantry believe that these pest are sent by God as the messengers of his wrath, and they are, therefore, too much inclined to bow before the scourge, and to let what they believe to be the justice of God pass by. In some districts they simply recite in prayer, and the images of saints are placed in the paths of the locusts, just as was done recently in St. Petersburg, when the holy statues were placed in front of the great conflagration. THE WATERS OF TRUTH ARE RISING.

Further Confirmation of the Truth of Dorsey's Disclosures.

(From the New York Sun.)

Mr. E. N. Hill, a well-known attorney-at-law, of Washington, now in New York, who is and has been a warm friend of Senator Dorsey, was known to be in possession of many of the inside facts respecting the remarkable canvass of 1880, and also respecting Garfield's relations with Dorsey. Mr. Hill was also a warm friend of Garfield's, and in the winter of 1881 visited Mentor by invitation, spending a number of hours with Gen. Garfield. Until recently Mr. Hill has been no more disposed to speak of what he knew than have others who knew much, but he has now consented to say some things which are of interest.

"You have read the recent revelations of Dorsey, Mr. Hill; what is your opinion of their accuracy?" asked the writer.

"So far as they have gone they are accurate, but he has not yet told one-quarter of what he knows."

"In that he speaks of having been offered a Cabinet place; does that statement come within your own knowledge?"

"Yes, sir; during my conversation with Gen. Garfield I said to him: 'I suppose Senator Dorsey will be a member of your Cabinet?' To my surprise, he said, 'No; I have offered him a place, and he says he will not accept it.'"

"Did Gen. Garfield indicate what it was?"

"Oh, yes. He said he had offered Dorsey the Secretaryship of the Interior."

"Did Gen. Garfield mention any reason why Dorsey declined?"

"Yes. He said he was extremely sorry that Dorsey would not accept, but that Dorsey had said that his private business required his attention, and he could not therefore accept."

"Do you know of anyone else to whom Garfield said that he had offered Dorsey a place?"

"Yes. Two or three other gentlemen have told me that Garfield had told them he had asked Dorsey to go into the Cabinet. One of these gentlemen is a very prominent public man."

"Did Garfield ever report to you that he had made this offer?"

"Oh, yes; in Washington, at his house. I recollect very distinctly that I called with some friends, and just as I was leaving he drew me aside and privately invited me to come back at 1 a. m. I went back, and in the course of conversation about other matters he again repeated that he had offered Dorsey the Interior portfolio, and that Dorsey persisted in declining."

"Did you ever see any written evidence to prove the truth of what Garfield said to you?"

"Yes; I have seen a letter and read it, which Garfield formally offered him a place in the Cabinet."

"Was it a long letter?"

"No; it covered about a page of Garfield's scattering handwriting."

"Do you recollect the terms of that letter?"

"No, not the precise phraseology. I could not quote accurately, and prefer not to do so, as I have no doubt the letter will some day see the light. One offer was formally made."

"Did you see Dorsey's reply to it?"

"No. I saw the substance of the reply. Dorsey did not leave a copy of his declination with him, but repeated the substance of it from memory, which was then written out."

"Dorsey's letter of declination must be in the hands of Garfield's literary executors?"

"Yes, of course."

"Have you seen the statement that Garfield offered Dorsey the place to please him, expecting that Dorsey would decline it?"

"Yes, I have seen that."

"What do you think about that?"

"I think it very good proof that Ananias and Sapphira left descendants who still infest the nation. I believe if such a proposition had been made to Mr. Dorsey he would have resented it by a blow."

"Do you know whether Garfield repeated his request to Dorsey to go into the Cabinet?"

"No! Quy knowledge. Mr. Dorsey told me that after he had declined Garfield urged him to go home and reconsider the matter, because he wanted him in the Cabinet."

"Did you ever hear that Garfield personally offered Dorsey a Cabinet place?"

"Yes. That was the time he was first offered it. That was Mentor soon after the election. There as an amusing side to that, as I have understood. Jewell and Dorsey were at Mentor. About 9 o'clock one evening Garfield wanted to have a chat with Dorsey, so he, to get rid of Jewell, offered him the bed he slept in. After Jewell retired, Garfield and Dorsey went out under maple tree, and, with a lunch of good things to eat and drink, sat there till 2 o'clock in the morning. At that time Garfield told Dorsey that he was going to make him a formal offer to enter the Cabinet, and that he could have any place except the Treasury or the State Department, and, of course, he was debarred from the Department of Justice, as he (Dorsey) was no lawyer. Dorsey at that time told Garfield that if he had all his places into one he wouldn't take it."

"You spoke of believing that Garfield's letter offering Dorsey a Cabinet place would sooner or later see the light. Why do you think so?"

"Because I have good reasons. The letter has not been granted. It is in the custody of some of Dorsey's strongest friends, who have thought that the time has not yet come for making it public."

"Mr. Hill, you know that Dorsey has been called a liar for saying that he was offered a Cabinet place?"

"He is no liar," replied Mr. Hill indignantly. "I am willing to make affidavit that I saw the letter, and," he suddenly added, "I'll do so now, if you wish."

City and County of New York, ss:

E. N. Hill, of Washington, D. C., being duly sworn, deposes and says that the foregoing interview to the effect of a position in his Cabinet by President Garfield to Stephen W. Dorsey is substantially true, and the statement that I saw a letter offering the powers as above is true. E. N. HILL.

The Real Platform.

From time to time the leaders of the Republican party hold conventions in which they formulate certain moral axioms and platitudes which they call the platform of the party.

The real platform of the party, however, is expressed in private and personal letters exchanged between these leaders after the mummery of the convention is over. What that platform is appears more clearly from the abstract we publish elsewhere of the campaign correspondence of the party in 1880. This, the real platform, may be written in one line: We want money.

That is the real Republican platform. On this point the harmony and union are universal.

Blaine writes to Dorsey that in failing to send money to Maine he is "imperiling the whole campaign."

Allison writes to Jewell: "Money must be had and must be sent to Indiana."

Stewart Woodford writes to Jewell from West Virginia: "With $25,000 Sturgiss and Atkinson can make an effective campaign."

John F. Lewis, Malone's lieutenant, writes: "The expenditure of $50,000 will insure the electoral vote of Virginia for Garfield and Arthur. Help us, Cassius, or we sink."

Mr. Henderson, of Iowa, writes to Dorsey: "Put money in thy purse."

Richard Smith, of the Cincinnati Gazette, who has been called the Good Deacon Richard Smith, was alive to the need of money. He writes: "There should be $50,000 judiciously placed in each of these States. Ohio and Indiana within the next ten days."

Charlie Foster, sometimes known as Calico Charlie, says that he has given the question some attention and that one ought to have $40,000—$10,000 of it for Cleveland.

The Massachusetts reformers, through John M. Forbes, sent money to West Virginia and Indiana.

John C. New called aloud for money and gave thanks when it came. Everybody wanted money.

What did they want it for?

The Republican party claims to have saved the nation, to have paid off the debt, settled the finances and pensioned the soldiers. It has held power for twenty odd years. It has taken credit to itself for the prosperity of the country; has had all the support of capital, of protected interests, of the army of officeholders and of all privileged classes.

Yet when a national election came around, when a great national battle was to be fought, the grand old party could find only one battle-cry. Danger of defeat changed all its boasting into abject terror, and its platform shrank to a single line

Political Notes.

"OLD JOE MEDILL," as the Chicago Tribune affectionately calls the editor of the Chicago Tribune, was at the New York Republican State Convention last week. He pronounced it "the funniest convention he ever saw." Whenever you see a "tame" convention in New York of either party it means defeat. Watch it.

IT is true that the Times is not in favor of "high duties on foreign manufactures" as a means of "protection to American industry." A pretty careful study of the question has led it to the conclusion that these high duties are unnecessary and injurious. This will be the view of the Republican party before many years.—New York Times.

EVEN Postmaster and Custom House officer in the land begins to proclaim that his section of the country is calling aloud for the nomination of President Arthur. But President Arthur has been there and knows how it is himself. He used to "whoop it for the boys" in just that style and knows just what it is worth. This is the advantage of having been a "boss" before going into the White House. The Postmasters and Custom House officers ought not to be mistaken for the voice of the people "in my section."—Detroit Free Press.

HENRY L. PIERCE declined to accept the Republican nomination for Governor of Massachusetts. On him the party had staked all their hopes to beat Ben Butler. He would have been defeated in all probability in any event, but is understood to be a very respectable, clever gentleman, representing Boston blue blood and the traditional dollar. He would have staggered under the Tewksbury load. It is a bad mess and weighs a good many thousand pounds. Even puritanism revolts at its atrocities and Plymouth Rock gr- as restless. Old Benhas been a terror to the hypocrisies of Massachusetts. Republicanism and the bogey of Democracy is helping him to the good work. There is progress even for Massachusetts.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

AGONIES OF CRUCIFIXION.

What Caused the Death of Those Nailed to the Cross.

"Dr. Cooper, in New York Medical Journal:

All civilized communities demand that a life to be sacrificed shall be sacrificed swiftly and without needless pain. Time, various nations have different opinions as to how this may best be accomplished; but the American and English governments have decided that hanging is the most merciful. As compared with the Spanish instrument of death—the garrote—it is questionable whether or not hanging is the most merciful. A hanging executioner may, in either case, cause unnecessary tortures. With these subjects, however, this paper has nothing to do. The writer simply desires to set forth the various modes of crucifixion as adopted by the ancients, and to show what terrible sufferings the wretched malefactor had to undergo before death came to his relief. Hours and days of unmitigated torture; a thirst which was unquenchable; a prolonged suffocation; a horrible grasping for breath, interspersed only by a moment's respite; the bites of the vultures of the air and the stings and burrowings of insects; the burning of the ray of the noonday sun, and the cold chamber dews at midnight—tell us, in awful language, of that dreadful fate from a repetition of which the present day is happily delivered. In comparison, our present capital punishments are most merciful, and the vindication of justice most humane.

The most primitive form seems to have been an upright tree, to which the victim was either bound or nailed. In Ezra vi, 11, it is ordered that "whosoever shall alter his word, let timber be pulled down from his house, and, being set up, let him hang thereon, and let his house be made a dunghill for this." Titus had nothing to add a horizontal beam when crucifying 500 Jews a day for months. He simply drove a pole into the ground, to which the victim lashed, and he was left to die.

Slaves were generally punished by having a "furca" (fork) slipped over their necks, to which their arms were tied, and this was hoisted to the top of a pole, and secured there by a rope fixing into a groove. This device evidently suggested the more recent cross, to save time, and as being more attractive.

It was usual to nail the hands, but to bind the feet. It is erroneous to suppose that a single spike secured both feet to the cross, one foot in front of the other. A spike was driven through each foot, sometimes to a support fixed on the cross just beneath the plantar surface of the feet. Additional cruelty was sometimes practiced by the victim being seated on a spike or "horn" (cornu in Martyr). Death at times a piece of wood was so placed that he might rest on it.

The nails, aided by intense heat, soon produced gangrene. Although the culprit writhed in agony for some time, it is doubtful whether any long-continued activity of the body could be maintained. The weight of the intestines, gravitating downward, produced intolerable suffering. The circulation was impeded, the vise in pressing on the veins. The lungs could not be emptied, lose air got into the veins, necessitating death. At night fall the bones of the legs of those still living were broken, ostensibly to hasten death, but, in reality, to g

The October Election.

The JOURNAL'S announcement last week that Ohio had probably gone republican by a small majority, has not been sustained by later returns. Instead of the usual republican majority of forty to sixty thousand, it is democratic by twelve to fifteen thousand, a democratic gain of over fifty thousand. The total vote was but a few thousand less than the vote cast in the presidential election in 1880, and was about eighty thousand more than was ever before cast in an Ohio state election. The fact makes Hoadly's handsome majority significant in its relations to the presidential vote next year.

Iowa is still republican, but its plurality of nearly forty thousand is reduced to less than twenty. In the legislature the democrats have gained thirty representatives and twelve senators. Cook, dem., is elected to congress in the sixth district by one thousand majority.

Every inch of battle ground was contested, and whatever may have been the chief cause of the result, we cannot ignore the fact that the people are awake and appear to have decreed that "the republican party must go."

Notes and News.

The average cost of construction of the P. H. & N. W. (narrow gauge) railroad, as reported to the commissioner of railroads, is a little over $11,000 per mile, and of equipment is $1,700 per mile. Construction of G. R. & I., $36,000 per mile; equipment, $3,600 per mile. Earnings per train mile: P. H. & N. W., $1.00; G. R. & I., $1.49; expenses per train mile: P. H. & N. W., 49 cts.; G. R. & I., $1.00.

At Southbridge, Mass., last Friday, Gen. Butler declared himself favorable to the abolition of all federal internal taxation. He said the government needed to raise $70,000,000 every year for its support, and the custom house must collect that sum. Spanking as a manufacturer, he did not want any more protection than this afforded, and believed the Pennsylvania idea unconstitutional and undesirable. Whiskey was now taxed at the expense of its quality. He believed tobacco was a necessity. He was not in favor of competitive examinations for the civil service because he wanted soldiers' orphans and widows appointed to places when possible. He desired to appoint capable and honest friends.

The elections of November, now very near at hand, will be, like those of Ohio and Iowa, chiefly interesting as indices of the result in the great contest for next year. Connecticut, Mississippi, Nebraska, New York, Pennsylvania and Virginia choose a portion of their state officers and legislatures; Maryland, Massachusetts and New Jersey choose governors, the incumbents in all three being democratic. The chief interest lies in New York, whose verdict this fall will be accepted as a promise of her course in the great contest of 1884, in which her action will be decisive, and in Massachusetts, where the peculiar politics of Butler lead a bizarre appearance to the campaign. Unless the republicans carry New York they can derive little consolation from the November contest. To defeat Butler in Massachusetts and to carry Pennsylvania, Connecticut, Nebraska, or even New Jersey and Virginia, would be but meager compensation for the loss of New York and Ohio. Evening News.

Republican commentators upon the Ohio election appear to be unanimously certain that their defeat was the best thing that could happen, and that it makes Ohio sure for the republican candidate next year. For, you see, says John Sherman, they have carried the legislature, and will have the responsibility of dealing with the liquor question, "and if they fail to meet the advancing state of public opinion in Ohio on that question, they will be defeated as we have been." It was the general impression that the republican defeat was due, very largely, to the attempt of that party to meet "the advancing state of public opinion" on the liquor question. That, at least, is what Hubbard thinks, and was what Sherman said last fall after the defeat of that year. If the democrats are only to be finally and hopelessly ruined by letting them win elections in this fashion, it may be necessary to let them carry the country next year in order to crush them once for all. We have no doubt they would be quite stupid enough to fall into this trap. Evening News.

A Pair of Invalids.

NEW YORK, N. Y., Oct. 11—I congratulate you on your brilliant triumph. S. J. TILDEN.
(signed)

What thoughts must have crowded themselves upon the governor-elect of Ohio, as he tore open the familiar yellow envelope of the Western Union and read this message! No doubt between the lines of this brief telegram he read the history of a presidential canvass, but was his own name or the one signed above more prominent in that history? No doubt this telegram will be regarded as "significant," but every politician will place his own construction upon it, and no two of them will be alike. It is well known that Mr. Tilden has taken great interest in Judge Hoadly's canvass, and some go so far as to say that he will be the "guide, philosopher and friend" of the Ohio man on his way to the white house. This statement is somewhat confusing to people who have heard, on excellent authority, that Tilden will announce himself a candidate at the proper time, and the report, from an equally reliable source, that he will seek to secure the nomination and election of Gov. Cleveland. Amid the confusion of political predictions Mr. Tilden keeps his own counsel with great vigor. It is pretty evident that the country will know very little about what he is going to do until he does it. This much we may be certain of, however, that if he and the other sick man have formed an alliance they will make interesting music in the great political festival of '84, and if Mr. Tilden has absolutely and finally determined not to be a candidate, he will at least be around when the nomination is made.

$4,000 a Year and "Found."

Dr. Loring, who regularly draws his pay at the rate of $4,000 a year as commissioner of agriculture at Washington, has been at his post about three days continuously since June 1. Once when he was wanted to sign a warrant for current expenses he was found rusticating in the country. The costly experiments in fancy horticulture, and the paying for the same, go on like clockwork while the doctor is away.

Last Thursday Rev. W. R. Norton left in our sanctum a basket of potatoes, fourteen of which filled a peck measure, grown on land which will produce 200 bushels per acre.

Last Saturday evening we were visited by a heavy snow storm covering the ground, house-tops and tree-tops with about an inch of the "beautiful". Something unusual at this season of the year.

Capt. Philo Crysler, of Harbor Springs, was in town last Wednesday. He sold the propeller North Star to Capt. Geo. B. Thompson of this place. The Star is a good boat and we are glad so able a captain as Mr. Thompson has her in hand. She is to run on Pine Lake, between this place and Charlevoix.

Doing Him a Favor.

The occupant of an office on Larned street desired to drop 3,000 circulars to as many residents of Detroit regarding a new household patent, and he had just completed the weary work of directing the envelopes, when in came a telegram calling him out of the city for a day or two. He ran into a law office and left his key and explained that he was sorry he didn't have time to mail his circulars before going. When he had departed the lawyer said to his office boy:

"My son, what is life worth without the good opinion of our fellow-men?"

"Nothing, sir."

"Of course not. This afternoon you go over and stamp all his circulars and get them into the postoffice. It will be a favor and a surprise to him."

At 3 o'clock in the afternoon the boy said he had used up all the stamps, and he was directed to mail the circulars and wait for his reward. It came in a manner to astonish him. When the circular man returned he rushed into the law office white with rage, drove at the boy with a cane, and shrieked out at the top of his voice:

"You infernal idiot! You licked 3 cents on each circular.—Detroit Free Press.

The subject for the morning service at the M. E. church next Sunday will be "Wonderful Motives." The evening service will be directed more particularly to young men, and the subject announced. "Jacobs ladder," is doubtless an indication that the instruction will lead young men to rise in the world step by step, as by climbing a ladder.

The following prospective changes in mail service are announced. Route 24,411, Boyne Falls to Charlevoix. From November 1, 1883, increase service to 12 trips per week between Boyne Falls and Boyne, 6 miles, and to 6 trips per week between Boyne and Charlevoix, 16 miles. Route 24,415, Boyne to Undine. From November 1, 1883, increase service to two trips per week.

That competition increases merit was never more fully illustrated than in the case of the Detroit Evening News. Since the Evening Journal was established the News has cut down its display heads, reduced the size of other heads, and made everything as compact as possible, typographically, thus adding to its quantity of reading matter, and without increasing its price. As its name indicates, it is in all respects a newspaper.

Mr. Iddings' lecture at the opera house Sunday evening was well attended. He discussed the necessity of law enacted, without which laws are of no use; reviewed the history of legislation pertaining to the liquor question; and called attention to the necessity of distinguishing between the moral and legal rights of liquor sellers, and educating the people to let the stuff alone.

The historical society met at the parlors of Mrs. John Nicholls on Tuesday evening and enjoyed another of those meetings for which this society is famous. The executive committee have not yet announced a line of historical study but served up a program consisting of readings, recitations, and music. Major Green, not for variety, nor spice, but for instruction, read from the statutes of Michigan the chapter relating to the organization of historical societies. Miss Potter recited in a fine manner "Whistling Jim." Mr. Kane read a piece describing the death of Benedict Arnold, and Mr. Parnacher closed the program with an illustrated lecture on Columbus and his great discovery which brought down the house. The Misses Bennett and Potter rendered two vocal duets in fine style and Mr. Washburn favored the meeting with a song and guitar accompaniment. The subject of incorporating the society was discussed but action was deferred for two weeks. The interest and attendance was good. The society meets next Tuesday evening with Mrs. O. D. Wood.

Another Fire.

About two o'clock last Thursday afternoon fire was discovered in the barn of Geo. Nowland, on Dixon street. An alarm was given, and the department arrived in time to save the adjoining property. There is no doubt but they could have saved the entire lower story and a portion of the baled hay if there had been sufficient good hose to reach. Dr. Lewis' new barn across the alley, was saved without being blistered. Mr. Lewis lost about a ton of baled hay which was stored in the barn that burned. The fire is supposed to have been caused by the careless play of two small boys who were in the barn when the fire was discovered.

This fire demonstrates beyond a doubt that it is necessary to have some more good hose soon, or the engine will be practically useless. The boys worked the brakes well, but a large portion of the water was lost by leakage before it reached the fire.

In this connection it has been suggested that the engine was a bad investment, as Charlevoix never had a fire until she invested in fire apparatus.

List of Jurors.

The following is a list of jurors drawn for the November term of circuit court to be held in Charlevoix commencing Nov. 20th:

M. G. Cook, Evangeline.
Geo. Robb, Eveline.
Levi Lewis, Hayes.
Elias W. Caldwell, Hudson.
James Adams, Marion.
S. Wheeler, Melrose.
E. L. Stafford, Norwood.
W. A. Stone, South Arm.
M. Spencer, Springvale.
J. Newville, Wilson.
W. Kerns, Bear Lake.
Geo. Keyes, Boyne Valley.
Chas. See, Charlevoix.
B. Webster, Chandler.
A. C. Karcher, Evangeline.
F. M. Steele, Eveline.
J. Stanley, Hayes.
J. S. Ackerson, Hudson.
H. Adams, Marion.
F. Welch, Melrose.
A. Vandeusen, Norwood.
P. Winters, South Arm.
Geo. Blair, Springvale.
S. Barley, Wilson.

Hayes.

Muddy roads.

Rain, rainy, more rain, and more coming.

Mr. O. T. Booth is in Hayes once more.

Geo. O. Scott has gone to Barry county, after a car load of sheep. He expects to supply the farmers here with them.

Miss Sophia G. Ross will teach in Evangeline township, the coming winter.

A "logging bee" at Dean Scroggies last week. "Logging bees" are yet in fashion.

Alex. Ross, Jr., Hayes township's jolly sailor, is expected home.

Now is the time the cow boy drives his cattle out of his neighbor's corn and Farmers are nearly done threshing. The grain is good considering the late season.

Oscar Tillotson moves into his new house this week.

S. Minier is improving his residence by building a frame addition, which greatly improves its appearance.

A number of farmers are erecting "root houses" for storing away potatoes, and other vegetables during the winter months. "Jack Frost" will be puzzled when he comes on his yearly rounds.

In our tour through different parts of this township, we noticed the erection of dwellings, barns, out-buildings, and fences; all substantially built; which shows that the farmers are live, and energetic, and that Hayes is bound not to be left in the rear.

POLLY.

BY M. C. FARLEY.

Polly was my bosom friend. Together we stood behind the long counters of Sellem, Cheetem & Co., and measured off dry goods to the various customers who patronized that celebrated firm. Together we spent our annual two weeks' vacation fishing and hunting in the wilds of Wisconsin; and, being adjudged "one and inseparable," we would both have made love to the same girl but for the fact that I had a most unconventional and uncomprehended hatred for the other sex, being, in this isolated exception, the exact opposite to Polly, who doted on girls, and was noted for his gallantry. Indeed, it was his extreme susceptibility to the wiles of the fair sex that had saddled him with his sobriquet; for Polly, mind you, wasn't his real name at all, no more than it was mine. He had been duly christened Paul, after the apostle; and his paternal grandfather had two or three surnames besides; but, nevertheless, when he took up his place behind the counter in the store, and then and there began to lavish his smiles with reckless profusion upon the young ladies, we soon shortened his name down to "Polly"—and so Polly he was called.

It's of no use to say how the soon monopolized all the trade from lady customers. There he was, always attentive, always polite, his cheeks as pink as a girl's, and his hands as white as the whitest. It seemed as if a perpetual smile hovered round his lips, which were parted just enough to show his pretty teeth, and you could even smell the fatuous perfume of hair-tropine that he secured his handkerchief with, as he walked along behind the counter.

But there was more to his flirtations. He had more strings to his bow than I could "shake a stick at" in a week, as the saying is.

I gave him some good, fatherly advice several times, but he only shook back his curly brown locks, and said he "guessed he could stand it a while yet."

But I was older than Polly, and I knew that the first thing he would do some time would be to get entangled in a foolish engagement of some sort—and, once enough, his fine nature became, and sooner than I had expected.

But just then I was suddenly called home by the serious illness of a sister, and, in watching at her bedside, and recruiting for some weeks after her death in settling up her business affairs, all lesser matters were passed over until one morning I was surprised at getting a telegram from Polly announcement his marriage.

A letter came a day or so after, in which Polly explained the reason of his rather hasty action.

"You see, Old Pap," writes he (Polly always called me Pap, though my name is really Pete), "I was obliged to marry Annie, me when I did, or else another girl how would. So I rested in shed, and came off with the spoons. That is, that one Bronson—keep your old maid, and become a count?, and I every year—we became had his heart, and I order boss, and more es candy for me and took at Sunday- feet. And Annie so invited Pease, etc., you see. So I determined to sit at with the old folks, and the very device was to pass all around.

There was only one thing we could do under the circumstances, for Annie wasn't of age so could not. She has come out fine at the corner of the street, and took her in a livery contract of the cost a and we were down to Hickory Grove, my old stamping ground, you know. She expected knew me and he thought it was all right, though he did think Annie looked very young, and he asked her how old she was. She told him she was going on 18, which was true you know, as she had fixed that in her house. So if she was not going on 18, what was she going on. Nothing to beat the old folks. But you should see Brown. It's raining and and Annie's pa mouth open a target we would not than to say.

We are staying at Hickory Grove now. It's a fine old place. I'll meeting it for Luther, and I want you to come and look and come right away. We have a lively time going a nutting. The weeds are all dead, so don't stop to write, but come down.

Yours in haste,

POLLY.

I was fired and sick, being worn down with watching and worry, and it was on the point of returning to the city anyway. I determined to run down first to Hickory Grove and make my friend a short visit. A few days of hickstream woods rose up before me as a real vision. I half pocketed the big Sarpy that naturally accompanied such wanderings. But, reflecting that the newly married pair was in the first flush of their honeymoon, I left Chanticleer a modest crap, that at last would need only a change of linen. When the train rushed into the little station at R—, who should I see but Polly, looking as fresh as a daisy, the same old smile parting his cherry lips, and the same white hands waving welcome at me through the car-window.

"And so you've went and gone and —

"Yes; to be sure," broke in Polly, squeezing my hand affectionately. "Awfully glad to see you; where's your luggage?"

"Oh," said I, feeling a little ashamed now of the diminutive grip-sack that held my belongings. "I didn't fetch anything much. I did not want to make a certain young married pair feel that while Two is a company, three makes a crowd."

"Well, I'll be jumped up!" says Polly shortly, biting off the end of a cigar.

"I'll be jumped up" is a favorite expression of his, when he feels put out of humor the least bit.

"Come along to the house, Old Pap, and I'll let Annie scold you," said he presently, in his usual cheerful manner.

Well, we strolled along the wide, graveled walk, up to the big, old-fashioned house, where Mrs. Polly stood on the veranda to welcome us. She was very pretty. I had to admit that at once, and her manners were every thing that could be desired.

We will be everything we can to make you happy, Mr. Peter," said she. "I'm sure we can find something to amuse you with, so that you won't miss that dirty old city you seem to be so fond of."

From that very instant my friend's wife began to rise in my esteem as he far above the generality of her do- tend-ters. I quickly discovered that Polly and his wife, with the exception of the cook, were the only persons about the place, his parents having gone East on a visit, and I settled down to an after-supper cigar with the firm conviction that in the morning I would telegraph for my trunk. The short October afternoon was drawing to a close, and, engaged in conversation, the cozy twilight was settling over the landscape, when Mrs. Polly suddenly started up and exclaimed:

"Oh, Polly, you are forgetting your engagement this evening. You promised your father to attend to his cattairs as well as if he were here himself, you know. And those cows—"

I glanced at my friend. A strange, uncomfortable look was on his pink and white face.

"Oh, yes, Annie," says he, presently, "don't mind about them; I'll see they are fetched home all right, pretty soon."

"You see," said he, turning to me with a re-ovgus smile, "before father went away, he purchased a couple of Jersey-cattle; they are to be brought here this evening."

"I have already named one of them," said Annie, "it is the Jersey Lilly, and we call her Laugtry."

"I suppose, Old Pap, says Polly to me, carefully avoiding my gaze, "that you will excuse me as I have got to go and milk the cows."

"Well, I'll be jumped up!" says Polly shortly, biting off the end of a cigar.

"I suppose, Old Pap, says Polly to me, carefully avoiding my gaze, "that you will excuse me as I have got to go and milk the cows."

Then there was some swearing done, and it was the very tallest kind of swearing at that. But, as a disinterested spectator of the whole affair, I can admit that it was the cow that did it. A good deal shocked, Annie retired into the house, and, shutting the door, called out to Polly through the key-hole, to come in and let the beast go away if she wanted to.

A groan was the only reply.

Somewhat alarmed, his wife peered anxiously out upon the field of carnage. The cow had disappeared in the friendly shadow of a wooded hill. Polly was limping slowly toward the house—a madder and a wiser man—and the war was virtually at an end.

My unfortunate friend presented a shocking appearance. His tight pantaloons were ripped in every seam; his creamy coat was split up the middle of the back, and the natty hat, upon which he particularly prided himself, was lost entirely. Tears of rage and mortification streamed down his begrimed features.

Unable to restrain myself, I screamed with laughter.

Then Polly forgot his manners again and he muttered something that sounded like "Helen Blazes," as he caressed his lacerated legs and estimated the damages.

"Madam," said he, wrathfully, to his wife, "if this was the sort of amusement you meant when you promised this man here—" angrily jerking his thumb in my direction—"to do all you could to make him enjoy himself, why, all I have got to say is that the performance has been a most successful one. To guard against anything of the sort in the future I shall return to the city immediately, and inform the police for me, madam." And poor, outraged Polly kicked over a poultice pot that his wife was braying herself with, as for me, I quietly picked up my grip-sack, thankful now that it was not the trunk I had first thought of fetching, and made my way to the station in the dusk of the evening, my visit to the country being thus unexpectedly terminated.

We meet often since they came back to town; we must often, I say, but we never speak. Polly never forgives the innocent witness to his memorable defeat in fetching home a cow.—Chicago Ledger.

Cutaneous Perspiration.

The office of cutaneous perspiration is largely to regulate the temperature of the body by evaporation from the surface; the cooling influence of fanning results from the evaporation of the moisture of the skin. The more violent efforts of the arm-pit, when temperatures are seen naturally in warm weather or artificially in the Russian or Turkish bath-house, by which the body becomes more heated, the glands secrete more profusely. All know that if one sweating profusely gets a draught of ice-cold drinking will result. Not so readily understood how, with this vast secreting surface exposed to the changes of the atmosphere, we can resist taking cold from the chilling the surface in a draught, or from exposure too thinly clad, and by a check so suppressing cause congestion of the internal organs. When animals are completely covered with an impermeable coating, as by varnishing the surface, death at once takes place; and the story is current among physiologists that a child who played truant from school, and came to represent an angel in the ceremonies attending the coronation of Pope Leo shouted with laughter as the draught had been applied. The importance, therefore, of the proper care of the skin can hardly be over-estimated, and those who suffer pores through which this vast amount of fluid passes out of the system may not be clogged. Proper bathing and frictions are all essential to health of a healthy skin, and a perfectly-active skin means a great deal toward a perfectly-active general system.—Manufacturer and Builder.

"Providin'."

A man at the Central Market was in need of a boy to assist him at his peanut stand, and in some way it became known to a colored man on Calhoun street. One morning he put in an appearance, accompanied by his boy, a lad of 12, and applied for the place.

"Can your boy read and write?" asked the peanut-man.

"He kin, sah."

"Is he willing and industrious?"

"He am, dah."

"Can you guarantee his integrity?"

"I—I—dat's a leetle mixed, boss. Does you refer to his gittin' up airly?"

"I refer to his honesty. If I should leave him in charge here for several hours, would he abuse my confidence?"

"Well, sah," said the man as he walked around the stand to see how it closed up, "if you shet down de kiver, an' turn de key, an' leave dat boy on de outside wid plenty of apples to eat, I'll warrant his integrity agin de prominentest man in Detroit.—Free Press.

The English sparrows, which are eaten in Philadelphia for reed-birds, are considered as being a great delicacy. The flesh of the sparrow is darker than that of the reed-bird, but the Philadelphia cooks say that only the Philadelphia cooks say that only the so who have never eaten anything but reed-birds can tell the difference.

A Compassionate Politician.

A politician, when he wants a certain place for one of his henchmen, is no more reluctant to turn on a repentant than Cooley Khan of Bengal. was to put a live eel in the breeches of a non-paying tenant. There are, however, exceptions to all rules, and the Autobiography of Thurlow Weed shows that he was an exceptional politician. In 1841, a member of New York merchants asked Mr. Weed to secure a Consular appointment for a veteran clerk, who, being an Englishman, wanted to go home to end his days there.

He says:

Mr. Seward requested his son Frederick, the Assistant Secretary, to find a place for him. I went to the department with Frederick, and in looking over his Consular register carefully his eye finally rested upon Tahiti, where, upon examination, he found that the Consul was an Englishman and had held the office more than twenty years.

It was decided, therefore, that one Englishman should give place to another, that other being an Americanized Englishman.

I reported this determination to the Secretary, who immediately sent my friend's name to the President, and when the messenger returned with Mr. Lincoln's approval, Mr. Hunter, the chief clerk, was directed to fill up the commission and obtain the President's signature in time for me to take it to New York that afternoon.

Between 3 and 4 o'clock p. m., I went to Mr. Hunter for the commission, which lay before him on his desk. He rose somewhat deliberately on was his manners, took the commission in his hand and delivered it to me without speaking, but with evident reluctance.

I said, "Is it all right, Mr. Hunter?" He replied:

"I have obeyed orders."

"But," I added, "you do not seem pleased. Is there anything wrong about the appointment?

"I have nothing to say about the appointment, but I have never discharged a duty since I came into the department with so much regret." He said:

The first commission that I filled out was for a clerkship, twenty-six years ago, was for Mr. Fox, our Consul at Falmouth, who succeeded the then recently-deceased father, who received his appointment from President Washington.

"The Consular accounts of Mr. Fox are as neatly and accurately kept as those of Gen. Washington during the Revolution. I think he is the best Consul in the service of the Government. You will judge, therefore, whether the removal of such a Consul is not calculated to occasion regret."

When he finished, while he stood looking at me with his pen in his hand, I deliberately tore the commission into strips, threw them into the waste-paper basket, and left the department for my cars.

When I explained in New York what had occurred at Washington, it was thought by the gentleman who had asked me to interest myself, but by the applicant himself.

Six Nations Compared.

The following statistics, approximately correct, of the present population, wealth, debt, expenses and production of six leading nations of the earth present some comparative statements of surprising character, and show in a strong light the greatness of our country. The United States is 100 years old; the United Kingdom (dating from the Union with Ireland) 80 years; France (dating from Charlemagne), 1,100 years; Russia (dating from Rurik), 1,000 years; Germany (dating from Charlemagne), 1,109 years:

Society Note.

An old bachelor, who lives in the suburbs of Austin, hires a colored man out of about 18 to clean up his room, fill the lamps, and perform like services. A few days ago the colored domestic, who had been using his employer's blacking, said:

"Boss, our blackin' am done out."

"What do you mean?" growled the sordid employer; "everything belongs to me, and nothing belongs to you. I wish you to understand that nothing belongs to you."

The terrified darkey promised to comply with the request. On the following Sunday the boss happened to meet the colored menial, accompanied by a chocolate-colored female pushing a baby carriage.

"Was that your baby in that carriage?" he asked next day, quite a number of his friends being present.

CHARLEVOIX.

Its Business, Advantages, Resorts, and Surroundings.

Charlevoix, the county seat of Charlevoix county, is a flourishing village of about 1,500 inhabitants is situated on the high bluffs overlooking Lake Michigan, between Round lake and Lake Michigan, and on both banks of Pine river, which forms the connecting link between Lake Michigan and the inland lakes, and is the key to the whole Pine lake region with nearly eighty miles of shore line. The citizens are justly proud of their town, and manifest a commendable spirit of enterprise and liberality. A writer, speaking from eight years acquaintance with the place, has said that the intellectual and moral standard of Charlevoix people is superior to any place of its size he has ever known. There are about ninety business firms here, representing nearly all branches. A few however, are lacking, which could be added, and probably will at no distant day. Some branches are represented by a single firm, and others would make closer competition, more activity, and better satisfaction. And this competition is sure to come as the village grows.

During the season of 1881, all branches of business have been good, but more particularly that of building and improving residences. From the opening of the season to Sept. 30, sixty-five thousand dollars were expended, and fifty-four new residences are completed and they are to be occupied before the coming winter. Large as this may seem, mechanics predict a much larger amount for 1882.

In ship-building, Charlevoix has just made a beginning. In 1882, there was launched the yacht Nora, the first one built here, and the builder of 1883 lies born more than doubled.

Not having at hand the figures for the shipments during the season of 1882, it is impossible to make comparisons, but the following exhibit will show what has been done so far this year. The figures include only cargoes reported at the custom house up to Sept. 30, and not entries to get more fees, carried by steamers in local or coast trade:

Hardwood lumber, feet	2,455,000
Pine lumber, feet	2,567,000
Lath	225,000
Square timber, feet	205,130
Railroad ties	56,800
Cedar posts	60,000
Telegraph poles	500
Wood, cords	11,311
Bark, cords	2,703
Cedar, logs	6,000
Cobble stone, cords	600

The channel between Lake Michigan and Round lake is 1.50 feet wide, and has a depth of forty feet in full length. This gives us a perfectly land-locked harbor where vessels may ride safely during the severest storms. Between Round and Pine lakes the capacity of the channel is nearly less, but still sufficient for the lake traffic.

The fishing business is an important item, and is a ready market for all that can be caught.

On Sept. 28, Charlevoix experienced her first disastrous fire, by which the planing mill of S. M. Sec. Mason & Co., was totally destroyed, together with a large amount of lumber and finished work. During the summer and no other means, the company could not rebuild. Realizing the necessity and value of such an institution the citizens took hold of the matter, and in ten days $9,000 in stock was subscribed, and steps taken to rebuild at once.

Other industries are being quietly worked up, among those a gristmill, and a fruit, vegetable and fish canning business. It is expected that these two will be in operation before the close of another season.

The following industries are not represented here, and we should like to see a part or all of them started:

A dairy now could find immediate sale for the milk of several cows, if delivered at the door regularly and promptly.

A cracker baker would get all the trade, for the best crackers we get here are stale when consigned with fresh.

All in want of mushrooms or any kind of market-stuffing are obliged to send outside.

Among the industries requiring hardwood timber which we have in abundance now at hand that might be successful here are the manufacture of chairs, agricultural implements, and farm wagons.

Handles of all kinds, and wooden bowls could be made here as economically as anywhere.

THE RESORTS.

Between Round lake and Pine lake and south of the main channel which connects being the located the Charlevoix summer resort. The grounds of the resort comprise about 75 acres, and rise by three natural grades to the height of from 70 to lake. The two lower terraces are sufficiently wide for cottage lots, with a broad walk in front, while the upper terrace stretches far away in a level plateau, from which glimpses of Lake Michigan are obtained. More than half the tract is cleared land, other parts being thinly wooded, and the portion farthest from the water being covered with heavy timber which lends [illegible] shade. The [illegible] are [illegible] some distance. A handsome hotel, the Belvidere house, has been erected on an eligible site from which a charming view of the lake waters reaching far to the southeast is obtained, a number of beautiful cottages also stand on terraces overlooking the lake. A music hall 30x50 feet and a bowling alley 40 feet long, have been built and numerous improvements made. The company owning this resort was organized on the 21st day of May, 1878, under the laws of Michigan.

Directly opposite the Charlevoix resort is the Chicago resort, founded by a stock company of wealthy Chicago gentlemen for a private summer retreat for their families and their friends. An elegant club house, a large boat house, and several fine cottages have already been built and extensive improvements have been begun.

As a resort Charlevoix has the superb advantage of lake breezes from both ways and as the winds which commonly prevail in a Michigan summer has the advantage of them all. The landscape surroundings are those of an inland lake, one of the prettiest streets in the west, in this respect it could scarcely be improved. Nature has provided every facility for health recreation and amusement, including unsurpassed bathing and fishing, and the managers of resorts make the most of their delightful location.

The Charlevoix resort has the inside and one side lake. It fronts one way on the bay for, a beautiful sporting ground for small boats and the other, up Pine lake, extending away miles in an ever changing landscape of hill, valley and woods and clearing. The best privileges could not be surpassed. There are two long lines of boat houses, many of them elegant boats.

The place is perhaps not so conveniently accessible as some, but will have railroad connections of its own not long hence. It is reached by four ways, and one of them, the beautiful from Traverse City will always be a favorite however much more direct a railroad line may be.

With these advantages understood, it is a matter of wonder that so large a business has not been built up in the short period since the opening of improvements as was first resumed. The railroad company have pursued a liberal policy in helping the associations to get on their feet. It has come to be an expensive item to the passenger department of the line. It runs from the most valuable quarry of fine limestone in the Rapids & Indiana road, although the business is still in its infancy.

PINE LAKE.

One of the loveliest of all the many beautiful lakes that adorn this fair northern country is Pine lake, it stretches east and south-east miles. About five miles east it divides into arms; extending to its ranse inspires, with the distance on some to 8 miles. Into the head of south arm flows the Jordan river, a famous trout stream. Prof. Winchell pronounces the following analysis of the water, taken: "Far away in the southeast for 15 miles, stretches the placid, sailing surface of the water, its white and pebbly shore and the contour of the hills in all its meanderings sinuosities. The verdant ridges rise on the one hand and the other, and hold the lake in their enchanted embrace, while rocky hill-tops bubble up in rapid succession with the purest spring water. The [illegible] green, purple and blue, dissolve together in blended lines of the distant horizon."

ANOTHER COUNTY.

The surface of the county is every [illegible] rolling, and in some parts decidedly hilly, well watered and is generally covered with [illegible] merable spring brooks of the coldest water. There is some available water power, particularly evening on the Jordan river. The soil varies from a light sandy to a heavy clay, with calcareous matter. The subsoil is of the same nature as that of the surface. The maple, elm, beech, basswood, ash, hemlock, cedar timber is found in great quantities throughout the county. The principal crops are winter wheat, oats, corn, hay, clover, potatoes and root crops. The summer resorts all around furnish an excellent market for the sale of garden vegetables. All fruits do well, and the [illegible] grapes and peaches. The harder kinds of apples are especially successful. Charlevoix county is at the northern extremity of the celebrated Michigan fruit belt. The [illegible] ing averages $20 per acre, although improved, generally pays for the clearing of the [illegible] per acre, while improved farms average from $40 to $60, in the interior and from $25 to $40 in Charlevoix. The timber business is a [illegible] tant enterprise in this country. Wood-[illegible] furnish bark, and logs for the [illegible] during the winter, and are shipped during the summer to Chicago, Milwaukee, Racine and other lake ports. There are several saw mills in the county, and an iron furnace at Boyne City. The scenery is delightful, and the climate is a great resort for invalids afflicted with [illegible] diseases. The schools are [illegible]

A glimpse Into the Family Circle of Ohio's Next Governor.

Gov. Hoadly's home, in East Walnut Hills, Cincinnati, is quite an ideal one—not too splendid for comfort, but luxurious enough to suit a fastidious taste. It is a fine old stone mansion on the Madison pike, set several hundred feet back from the highway, in the midst of a splendid stretch of velvet turf, broken by a few fine trees along the circular drive and a few brilliant flower-beds about the entrance. A Virginia creeper hangs a triumphal garland over the broad porch, but the ivies that used to be the pride of the place and were raised from slips brought from fair Melrose Abbey have succumbed to the winter frosts.

The Hoadlys are pre-eminently a cultured family, and the house within gives ample evidence of this. The tessellated hall opens on the right to the library—a charming room, with a wood fire upon the hearth and its three sides lined with book-cases. One great plate-glass window commands a delightful view of the lawn and Gen. Bates's handsome place in the distance. From this room opens the dining-room, a cosy room, looking southward over a finer stretch of velvet turf than that which gives dignity to the entrance. The dado is of mahogany panels, breast high, and the further end of the room is entirely filled by an arch-d bay window. Here hang two fine oil-paintings by De Haas, and the portraits of Gov. Hoadly's mother (nee Woodsey), and his father—one painted by Eaton, the other by Andrews. There is also a portrait of Hoadly's father, painted in his youth by old Morse, the inventor of the telegraphic alphabet.

The drawing room is rich with wood-carved mantles and tile-places, encircled with pictured tiles that illustrate the famous scenes in Sir Walter Scott's novels. On the walls are some veritable artistic gems a Corot, a Turner, a Horace Vernet, and a superb Rosa Bonheur, for which Mr. Hoadly came pictures by such lesser lights as Rhodes and Escosura. Everywhere are dainty things picked up by the mistress of the house and his charming wife during their frequent visits to Europe.

The Hoadly household consists of the Governor elect, Mrs. Hoadly, Mr. George Hoadly, jr., Miss Hoadly (who is at Washington at school) and Edward Mills Hoadley, still a schoolboy. Your correspondent met Gov. Hoadly yesterday just as his pair of pretty grays waited at his door on Third st.

"If I had anything in the world to say", he observed, "I certainly should say it to the World. I am still very far from well, and hope to be able to take an outing after a few weeks' rest. This I feel is all I need to set me up completely. If anything is to be said for or against it should be the congratulations that pour in upon me by telegraph and post every hour in the day and well into the night.—New York World.

There is a good deal of kicking among prominent Massachusetts democrats against Gov. Butler's re-election. They say that he was an advocate of the right of secession up to the breaking out of the war; that he voted for the secession candidate at the Charleston convention in 1860; that he supported Breckinridge as against Douglas throughout the presidential campaign; that he then turned republican and became one of the bitterest opponents of the democratic party until the tide began to turn, when he again turned his coat and sought honors at the hands of the party he had deserted and vilified. This is, generally speaking, quite true. But the Massachusetts democracy, with these now protesting democrats as leaders, has for years been so conducting the war against republican bossism in that state as to demonstrate that if the republicans in that state are to be rooted different methods and different men must be put to the front, and the rank and file of the Bay state democrats seem to have discovered at least they believe they have—in old Ben the fit instrument with which to bring about a complete republican overthrow. Butler's election as governor last year is strong evidence that the rank and file are right in their estimate of him as an instrument for the overthrow of the Massachusetts republican oligarchy; and, if the work which the Massachusetts democracy has been signally unable to accomplish under the leadership of these gentlemen who are now kicking so vigorously, can be done through the instrumentality of Gov. Butler—as at this distance it appears that it can be—it would seem to be the part of wisdom not to inquire too closely into the antecedents of the man who has been selected by the great major ity of the Massachusetts democracy to lead them to victory. Let the protesting democrats then reconsider the fact and accept the gods they give.—Grand Rapids Democrat.

Significance of the Ohio Election.

It must be remembered, too, that an unfortunate division, caused by petty jealously among some of the leaders, divided the democratic party in Ohio against itself. The "finally fight" within the party was exceedingly bitter, and we confess at one time it looked as if nothing could avert a democratic disaster of portentous proportions. Imbued with this idea, the republicans kindly pointed out the blunders of the democratic leaders, taking this method of infusing military into the breasts of their rank and file. But, notwithstanding democratic differences and democratic "bolters," Judge Hoadly and the rest of the Ohio democratic state ticket were triumphantly elected by a majority that threw consternation into the ranks of our political foes.

The significance of Tuesday's election is, then, that the people are determined to oust the republican party from power. The victory of last November was but the beginning of a revolution of political sentiment in this country, and the sustaining of the fixed determination of the majority to have our public affairs administered economically and in a democratic spirit. That this may be accomplished the people are turning to the democratic party, as the sweeping victory in Ohio and the largely reduced republican majorities in Iowa clearly prove. The Ohio election is the first gun of the national campaign, and the first of a series of democratic victories which will result in the election of a democratic president.—Bay City Call.

One of the singular features of the election is the different ways in which the prohibition vote affected the republicans. The rural counties, where they pushed the defeated prohibition amendment strongest, responded with big majorities for the amendment, but with hardly the average republican vote. In the cities' where the republicans were afraid to push the amendment, they made their chief gains from the democrats. Yet the beaten republicans are at a loss to explain their defeat owen to their own satisfaction. Deacon Richard Smith thinks the wool-growers did it. Field Marshal Halstead thinks the wine-growers did it. John Sherman believes Foster did it; and Foster probably hasn't recovered from his dazed condition sufficiently to do anything about it. At any rate, it is done, brethren, and well done. We imagine that you will find that you have all contributed to it unawares. The people have simply registered their decree that the republican party must go. That is the meaning of a democratic governor and a democratic legislature in Ohio.—New York Sun.

The Civil Rights Bill.

The recent decision of the United States supreme court declaring unconstitutional the laws passed by a republican congress for the ostensible purpose of protecting the colored race in the enjoyment of their civil rights, emphasizes the conviction that has forced itself upon the minds of so many patriotic citizens that the republican party must go. Its past record has shown that it is wholly incapable of dealing fairly and intelligently with the great questions which affect both the material and political interests of the country. It has subordinated everything to the shameless greed for spoils. Corrupt and unjust legislation for purely partisan ends has chiefly distinguished its course.

When the famous civil rights bill was before congress the republicans took especial delight in denouncing the democrats as enemies to liberty and the free enjoyment of the rights guaranteed by the constitution because they opposed this pet stalwart measure. The best lawyers in congress contended that the bill was plainly in violation of all law and all considerations of a wise public policy. Why should the negro be invested with greater opportunities for protection against wrongs perpetrated by individuals than those enjoyed by his white brother? The civil rights bill was a flagrant piece of class legislation that clothed a portion of our citizens with privileges and immunities not accorded to all. But for the sake of corralling the colored vote, and making it the pliant tool of its base designs, the miscreations republican majority passed the bill in spite of the cogent and unanswerable constitutional objections raised against it. It was a triumph of might over right.

The decision of the republican supreme court is a splendid vindication, however, of the wisdom and patriotic foresight of the democrats in opposing the law. It gives the lie to the old republican charges of democratic unfaithfulness to the principles of American liberty. It is also a welcome assurance that the country is returning to the simple ways and constitutional methods of the fathers of the republic. But above all, it will be hailed as a grand exemplification of the pregnant lines of the poet:

"And the truth shall ever come uppermost,
And justice shall be done."

—Lansing Journal.

Returns have been gathered from each of the eighty eight counties in Ohio on the prohibition amendment, showing that it received about 320,000 votes and that the measure is defeated by over 30,000 votes, the total vote being between 710,000 and 730,000. Taking out the votes of Cincinnati, Cleveland, Dayton, Toledo and Columbus, the measure was lost by about 14,000 votes.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

EX-Senator Jerome B. Chaffee says that twenty-three years ago, when he entered Denver, he invited his tired fellow-passengers of the stage coach to take a drink, and laid down a $20 gold piece, concerning which, the bar-keeper said, "All right." That transaction made him a temperance man.

Mr. Jay Gould might reduce the speed of his yacht and increase that of his railway trains with advantage both to himself and all others concerned. By the recent running down of a tug in the North river, it is shown that his yacht is entirely too fast; but no one has ever made an accusation of that sort against his trains.

Ocean steamers from New York to Europe have taken more than 31,000 passengers since May 1. If there, on an average, spent $2,000, a low estimate, the total is $62,531,000, or a twelfth of our exports during the last fiscal year, and one-half larger than the so-called "balance of trade" during the first seven months of the present fiscal year.

A remarkable case has just been decided in South Carolina. Two years ago W. S. Hook was murdered by a negro, and the body placed on a railway track. Three trains ran over it before it was discovered. The heirs brought suit against the company for mutilating the body, and have recovered $10,000. If dead men are worth that amount down South, what must be the value of a real live Carolina person?

Mark Twain and W. D. Howells are to unite in writing a book on "American Humor." The New York Tribune thinks that this is the harnessing of the dromedary and the mettled courser. Mark is certainly a humorist, and we now know that Mr. Whiteław Reid thinks the dromedary the most comic of animals as a fact in natural history that was not generally appreciated before.

John Bull, a heroic engineer, died recently from injuries received in a railway collision at Talmadge, Ohio. Perceiving a disaster to be inevitable, he reversed his engine and applied the air-brakes, which slowed the train greatly. Then, putting on full steam, he broke the couplings which attached his engine to the train and dashed into the obstruction, receiving fatal injuries, but rendering the impact of his train with the wreck comparatively harmless. No passenger was injured. He lived at Dalton, Ohio, and was the oldest engineer on the new Pennsylvania and Ohio railroad.

Henry A. Wise, in the Zachary Taylor campaign, declared that Taylor was so ignorant he could not write his own name; that all his dispatches, letters, and even his letter of acceptance, were written by his Chief of Staff, Maj. Bliss. The late Beverly Donglas rose to reply. "Mr. Wise," said he, "tells us that Gen. Taylor is so ignorant that he can't write his own name, and that Maj. Bliss has to write it for him. Well, fellow citizens, if this is true, which I deny and shall prove why show to be untrue it is of another illustration that

"Who to accuse is this—
Two rights to do."

William Shaue was arrested for owing $1 board money in Red Fork, Ark. The Judge having imposed $10 fine, the prisoner had to go to jail. Thence he was taken out by Alfred Werner, who had a contract to work the county prisoners on a farm. Werner whipped him to death in six days. A Coroner's jury made a verdict of will ful murder, and Judge Merritt of Desha county admitted Werner to bail in $1,000, and permitted him to go out of the county to get two respectable bondsmen. Werner is at large, and the best people of Red Fork have organized in the application until the future life is entered upon. He says: "I was standing in the main hall, engaged in conversation with the Deputy Warden, when I observed an old man advancing through the corridor who was dragging his right leg behind him. He was perfectly useless, and hung like the mass of lead. I asked the Warden about his history, and he told me that he had been sentenced for life for Kicking his wife to death, and that soon after he entered the prison the leg which he had used for that purpose began to grow useless, and till now it was entirely dead of life."

The highest steam engine that we can find is the Cornish, to whom her first letter was sent, was in the act of throwing it into the waste-basket, when he was struck with the name, "Miss Grundy." remembering, doubtless, the oft-quoted line, "What will Miss Grundy say?" The letter was published, and Miss Grundy became the mouthpiece for fashionable society gossip. Miss Grundy's real name is Miss Lettice Stencil, and her mother, who has a clerkship in one of the Government departments, is "Fay," of the Louisville Courier-Journal. They are Kentuckians by birth, but have become Washingtonians by adoption, having lived here for many years. Both are indefatigable in their pursuit of society intelligence, and both are fond of society for its own allurements as well. They go everywhere and find out pretty much everything. In winter they are tireless devotees of society, and never weary, apparently, of the endless rounds of balls, germans, receptions and calls. In summer they make a tour of the principal watering places, writing letters from Long Branch, Saratoga, Greenbrier White Sulphur Springs and other resorts. In short, as society ladies are payer than this mother and daughter, who live by criticizing and commenting upon the foibles of their society which they themselves so much enjoy. "Miss Grundy" says: "I believe there are no two happier people in the world than my mother and myself, and I have no reason to dislike her. Mrs. and Miss Stencil appear more like sisters than mother and daughter, and I have even heard the latter spoken of jocularly as "the youngest oldest one." The daughter is quite accomplished, but this does not prevent her seeing more than is visible to many stronger eyes. When she puts on her eyeglasses you may rest assured that nothing escapes her vigilant glances, from the trimmings on one's dress to the minutest details of a party supper-table.—Washington letter.

One Way Left.

Page, who has an idea that he is carrying on my education ever since I left school in a kind of a broad, general way, pounces upon me occasionally with a set of absurdities which he calls practical questions.

"Elinor," he said, suddenly, the other morning, as he laid down the newspaper, "what would you do if you were left penniless and alone in the world?"

"I should carry my own living," I returned promptly, and feeling quite convinced that my answer was the correct one.

"My dear child," he said, benignantly, "you remind me irresistibly of Marie Antoinette. Of course you would earn it, but how?"

I must confess I did not know which of the 50,000 ways that I would like to take care of a baby, and I once learned to make an omelette, but every one can do that things. Besides, I do not choose to be either a nurse or a chambermaid, or a cook, and I know that it is cowardly to say, "In what lady-like manner would you win a livelihood?" There is field enough for women every where; it is the ladies that are looking for something to do, in which they will not lose cast.

Of course I have read all the impracticable suggestions of those fellows who write books for such people, for I, an an omnivorous reader. The funny thing about them is that they never tell you any one can. They are lectures to the lucky ones.

I was something the other day about women studying architecture, and I thought that would be rather a good idea to spring upon papa. But I suddenly thought of the Jack Howells' new story of "Woman's Reason." I had left her last month, very sore of heart over the rejection of her decorated jars. That scheme had failed; but I knew Howells to be a man of wonderful resources, and I felt quite sure he would set her up in some nice, aristocratic business in due manner. It came that very afternoon, and I looked Helen up immediately. She was always broke and had touched her principal. I had always been led to believe that that was a very terrible thing to do. What she would have done if she had not had any principal, the mayest can guess not. He knew her every mood. Her lower is wrecked on a desert island, but I feel quite sure the money will not be long enough to pay her expenses and buy her trousseau when he comes home. All the same the story did not help me to any answer. So when papa repeated his question at dinner time more plainly there was nothing left for me to answer but the truth.

"Papa," I said, "there is but one thing the world allows a lady to do to earn her own living without losing caste."

"And what is that, Eulana?"

"To marry a man."

Overheard Our Judge.

The voice of the old Judge was choked in his motion as he went on speaking.

"Miserable creature, six times have you appeared before me at this bar. Drink has drowned in you all sense of shame—made you insensible not only to the disgrace but to any feeling of humanity. Your children are branded with the stigma of a drunkard's name, and starved in a drunkard's appetite. Rum shows itself in your trembling limbs and in your bleared and watery eyes; it has made of your nose a warning beacon."

"Clodge, tould you pull no names to de nose. Dot nose vas a pig, high-bored nose as you ought see, mit, Clodge, dot nose vas vearful ashame of me. Chust you vatch him plush."—New York Sun.

GOSSIP FOR THE LADIES.

An Architect's Assistant.

Dennis met Moll at Nantasket,
Where out he'd a lot of a lark;
And, after a day rather frisky,
Accompanied her home after dark.

Now the guy wasn't by this time tight jolly,
No, he under fat Dame Love's spell;
He calmly informed his dear Molly
That he was an "architect's clerk."

As Molly, a sly, perfect sifter,
Was out for a spree in a cart,
She says, with a look of wee meaning,
"Den, my a tall ladder, quick start.

At first she knew into fond laughter,
Then said, as she tipped him a wink,
"You'll do nicely, you darling, and I worry
Be excited, as I can self the ink."

What Use Never Had.

"Anyhow," said a young lady, who had just returned from a woods picnic, "I've may not have been frightened at a snake in the Garden of Eden, but she never had a nasty hairy caterpillar crawl down the neck of her dress. And we don't suppose she ever had. Norristown Herald.

A Woman Almost Roused.

Once there was a delicate little lady who did not keep house for several years to her regret. Being at length allowed, under protest, to reinstate herself as a gracious figure upon the lonel housekeeping of the descendants, a pretty home, she got on well till the inevitable moment came. Disorganization in the servants' department threw the little lady for once out of her serenity. She turned to her husband foolishly to confide these only distresses which these women still not confide, except to a fellow housekeeper, at seasons too frequent then, and carefully chosen. He, equally foolish, attempted to reason, and finally descended to an inquiry "I told you so." Quick rose in irritation that first display of unlovely temper which the poor lady had furnished to her husband in all the years of their married life.

"Do you say," she almost hissed, "after all the comfort we have had in our home, that you wish we had not gone to housekeeping? If ever you say so again, James, or hint such a thing to me, I warn you, I shall be roused."—Boston Courier.

Why Widows Win.

Are widows really so fascinating? The popular impression seems to be that single women are placed at an extreme disadvantage when brought into competition with the matrimonially tried; with those of their sex who have once worn the orange blossoms and who have been compelled to wear faded tears some the habiliments of woe. Strange to say, widows themselves do not share this disadvantage in their opinion. There is no one of them who does not believe that she is heavily "handicapped," so to say, in the contest, and who would gladly exchange places with the single, with her single sisters. The attractive widow, nevertheless, carries off a few degrees further on it is warmer, leaving her spinster rivals pale with envy and wild with rage. Her conquests, however, are rarely much exaggerated. Widows who have not a remunerative bank account or a corner lot find it as difficult to effect a proposal as other dowerless members of the sex. Whom we first love we rarely marry has become a truism, and herein lies the advantage of the widow in a large dower right. The old admirers return and the old flame is easily rekindled. Beauty in widowhood, and good-sized package of Government bonds is something quite irresistible. New York Sunday Journal.

New York Fine Rooms for Women.

The annual house of guests in the Indian at Shoshone Agency took place a few days ago, under the supervision of Lieut. Guy Howard. The Indians are well satisfied with their gifts. Good bed and bed received one suit of clothes, one flannel shirt, one fancy shirt, one hat, one pair of shoes, two pairs of stockings, one scarf, one handkerchief and one blanket. Each woman and girl received one pair of shoes, two pairs of stockings, one hand kerchief, six yards of calico, eight yards of drilling, eleven yards of calico, one blanket or quilt, one shawl, five yards of flannel and eight yards of linsey-woolsey. Each family received one axe, one coffeepot, one coffeemill, one knife, one paper of pins, one paper of needles, one ounce of thread, seven yards of fishing line, nine yards of cord and a variety of chucking and one tin cup.

For Kicking His Wife.

A newspaper correspondent who made a visit to the Massachusetts State prison at Concord, relates an interesting incident which many will be inclined to look upon as illustrative of the fact that Roman retribution is not always confined to the application until the future life is entered upon. He says: "I was standing in the main hall, engaged in conversation with the Deputy Warden, when I observed an old man advancing through the corridor who was dragging his right leg behind him. He was perfectly useless, and hung like the mass of lead. I asked the Warden about his history, and he told me that he had been sentenced for life for Kicking his wife to death, and that soon after he entered the prison the leg which he had used for that purpose began to grow useless, and till now it was entirely dead of life."

THE CROCODILE.

Terrors of a Mysterious Reptile—A Letter in Natural History.

Half the crocodile's terrors lie in mystery. To see one floating in a stream, all its length disclosed, would no doubt, be dreadful enough, but there is a refinement of horror in the recumbitude of the reptile; for all that is of the brute above the water are the eyes, and, some distance from that, the nostrils, and by the space which separates the eyes from the nostrils you judge the total length of the submerged crocodile. Again, when rising upon its prey, it would, doubtless be a paralyzing sight if the crocodile came along the street with all its armament of teeth displayed, gnashing its jaws and lashing its tail. But conceive the horror, of seeing what it sees upon the end only the ripple of the advancing unseen monster! Its fate is just certain as if the thing came on. Andromeda's enemy, in full view, there is the awful horror added of invisible approach. There is a way on the water—nothing more; but the sign that a crocodile is advancing swiftly. And it was this mystery of attracted the priests of Ammon, the brute. Like evil, it always came out from darkness; like the human, it was from the river. Egypt, the lifeless half-revealed monsters of the Nile were held in reverence as typifying the powers of darkness and irrevocable catastrophe; and the priests, taking advantage of the kind they could fly per, ectual disturbances of nature, fed them with jewels, piercing their ear membranes so as to hold rings, or putting bracelet upon their feet, and thus beguiled, brought them up in front of the reeds and obscurities of the sacred river and showed them to the people as the emblem of fate, terrible, pitiless and incomprehensible.

In the natural history of the crocodile there are some points of singular interest, which it would not be unsuitable to have illustrated at the Zoological Gardens, for instance, a crocodile would be a surprise to all who saw it for the first time, inasmuch as to reptile which grows to thirty feet length and is armed in maturity with such pendulous scales, begins life as such a perfect miniature of that of a goose. Again, a young crocodile preserved in a bottle of spirits is a notable illustration of the law of deviation that, later on, "lungs are shaking of a spear." Indeed, the crocodile's troubles are crowded together at the commencement of its pilgrimage through life. By and by has encamps had it need fear, and the unquestioned Autocrat of all the Rushes. But at first there is nothing that moves, be it fish, fowl, or foal, which the tiny crocodile is not attacked. As if conscious of the future power the insignificant lizard, everything that comes in its way, it fights. The egg shelled whenever found by creatures the weasel kind, and, where snakes lay their eggs, there they are. When it is hatched, fish swallow it, birds prey it up, the scimetrum eats it. Yet, despite of such a universal conspiracy against it, the species always manages to maintain a sufficient number alive to people the covering temperate waters it haunts, and by and by asserts itself by ruthless and omnivorous destruction upon each and all of the orders of creation that had variously and greedily combined for its extinction. infancy. Reptiles lacking on the land, birds floating upon the surface of the water, fish swimming, animals drinking at the river, or waiting in it; all preying upon it in one way or its birth, the crocodile was safe from nothing but death, so now nothing that is death is safe from the crocodile. egg and a baby alligator would, therefore, be curious commentaries upon the principle of the dangerous aspect of the full-grown monster. Let us take a glance a whole page of natural history.—London Telegraph.

Didn't Go Out the Gate.

A little girl's mother told her she went out of the gate she would be run over by a cow, and in an hour the cow was picked up in the gutter in a state of mulpipe making.

"I thought I told you if you went that gate I'd whip you," said the mother angrily.

"Well, I didn't do out the gate; I thun o'er fence, an' ou can't whip me 'is mamma." Merchant Traveler.

A Woman's Experiment.

A lady entered a ticket office in Toledo and bought a ticket for Milwaukee. She told the ticket seller that she had never traveled alone, and that her husband had always told her that she could not without trouble. She desired to disprove it by making this trip alone. Accordingly she asked her and got the information as to the departure of her train, the change of cars in Chicago, checking baggage, etc., and went from the office smiling at the manner in which she would surprise her husband. A few minutes later the ticket seller found on the counter the bill he had sold her, with the change. New York Sun.

THE JOURNAL

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

A certain case was postponed in a New York court, an attorney stating that his little dog had eaten up necessary papers and affidavits.

A letter received from Gen. Sherman mentioned that Justice Gray had ridden over 300 miles on horseback on circuit days without fatigue. As Justice weighs about 275 pounds it would be interesting to know how the horse got along.

One of the New York papers says that Gen. Grant is taking a great deal of interest in religious matters of late, and is a constant attendant upon prayer meetings as well as Sabbath services at Dr. Newman's church.

The late Nathaniel Thayer, of Boston, left an estate, in stocks, bonds, land, &c., valued at more than $16,000,000, and all his household furniture, horses, carriages, plate, etc., at both his city and country homes, were only worth $3,000.

England supplies the 250,000,000 people of India with salt and charges them 25 cents a pound, equal to a tax of $62,500 per cent. A poor native must work two days and a half at hard labor to earn enough money to purchase a pound of salt.

Georgia fathers do things differently. Recently a daughter eloped and married a man whom her father did not favor. A telegram followed them, not to have them arrested, but to have them come back and enjoy a regular old-fashioned wedding feast, which they did.

There will be 325 members in the next House of Representatives, instead of the 293 of the last House. The Eastern States have the identical number they had in the last House, the Western States have 10 instead of ninety-two; the Southern States 121 instead of 103, the Democrats will have a majority of over one twice the number of new members. The East sends forty-two, the West fifty-one, and the South ten.

Pardon me for interrupting you, but there is a dollar bill on the sidewalk you have dropped." These were the words addressed to Mr. Mann, Brooklyn, at the First National Bank. He thanked the stranger who had spoken, stooped down, picked up the bill and went on with his memorandum.

When he came to deposit the check to-day in the pocket-book on the desk $500 were missing. While he and the stranger scooped.

The merchants of Laredo, Texas, are clamoring on the nickel. A writer in relates the cause: "It is all very well in small change, but when a man has with ten or three dollars loaded in his pocket to pay a debt, and all hands in the house lose their undemeeded siesta and spend a day in counting the stuff, the patriotism of Mexicans—who are highly value time—wanes in the degree."

Gen. Frederick Freeman, known the History of Cape Cod, who died recently at his home in Sandwich, at the age of 81 years, was the seventh child of twenty children of Rev. Gen. Nathaniel Freeman, who was also the father of twelve sons by three wives. He was the author of two large volumes of "The History of Cape Cod, or the Annals of Barnstable County," which came out in successive numbers between 1858 and 1862. He is also the author of other works.

As a well-filled stage was being driven over the dim Crow trail toward Crocodile Cañon, the iron which held the whiffletrees to the doubletree broke, letting the former fall upon the backs of the horses. The frightened beasts sprang forward, and in a second the whole outfit was off the grade and on its way to the river, some sixty feet below. There were in the stage at the time seven persons, beside the driver and seven people and three children. The stage rolled over several times, and by dint of much scrambling the terrified passengers got out. Strangely enough, no one was seriously injured.

A Boston correspondent with the Grand party wrote from Livingstone, Montana: "Livingston is less than a year old—but it lies at the gateway of the Yellowstone valley, at the junction of two railroads, and intends to be a great city. It has lots of saloons, dance-houses and gambling places that keep open all night long, and it has already two banks and three newspapers. The regular frontiersman wants three things—a bank where he can keep his earnings, a gambling place and saloon and dance-house combined where he can spend them and a newspaper in which he can read the names of those who were slaughtered the night before. Livingston, however, is toning down and becoming respectable. Capital is a good police force, for it demands protection and if the law does not give it the law-abiding mob will."

Newcomers in the city of Mexico are surprised on finding so many of the conveniences common to large cities at home, such as the telephone, the electric light, a police force, and an excellent street-car service. The electric lights are on the tops of iron rods running up from the gas lamp posts. The police are far more sobberly than the regular army of the country. They wear a blue flannel suit, the coat buttoning up, and their cap has a covering of white, which, with the standing linen collar, is always immaculate. In their belts on one side they carry a club and on the other a large revolver. If one wishes to see a policeman he has only to go to the nearest corner, and he will surely find one standing there, for he has no beat to walk over. The speed at which street-cars go is astonishing. They dash along as fast as mules can pull them, and as they approach a corner the driver gives a loud toot on a horn for the purpose of warning people at the crossing to get out of the way.

The party conventions, which usually view a great many things "with alarm," says the Chicago Herald, have not as yet taken up the question of English landlordism in America. There is reason here for a political party to make a point in favor of leasing public land in the United States going for a song, many English noblemen have made extensive purchases. A dozen of these gentlemen own 100,000 or more acres, and a score of others have holdings running all the way up into the enormous total of 50,000 acres. These enormous tracts of land, it is fair to assume, have been permanently withdrawn from the market so far as the present generation is concerned. Their wealthy and aristocratic owners are known to appreciate the manifest rights of the American republic. At some future time, certainly not now, the available public lands will all have been disposed of. The investments of the British landlords have doubtless been made in anticipation of that day. Whether it will be their policy to dispose of their property is a small farmer, or to hold and lease it remains to be seen. The danger of a land monopoly is, of course, not immediate, but, in view of the enormous immigration and the fact that the annual rate for the purchase of whole townships by British capitalists seems to be steadily increasing, the serious attention of American statesmen may well be drawn to this newest phase of the land question. English landlordism has not been such an unmixed blessing at home that its extension in our own country can be viewed with much pleasure. The people here, however, have the remedy in their own hands, and if they do not apply it, it will be their own fault.

The Old Rush Light.

Young, and even middle-aged, people, accustomed to the convenience of the modern lamp-chimney, can hardly imagine the time when the tinder-box, with its clumsy flint and steel and broad brimstone matches, was the only means of striking a light. Many people were more skilful than others in striking a light and blowing the spark and match to a flame; but often on a wintry morning it was weary work with the servant who had to kindle the fire if the tinder happened to be damps or worn out, or the flint and steel "in a temper." Indeed, in many houses a rushlight was in some bedroom or other always burning, so that in case of sudden illness or any disaster there might be light readily. The rushlight, having, as its name implies, a rush wick, was about fifteen long, and was burnt in a large perforated shade; it was the "farthing rushlight," which very poor people were said to use for other purposes than a night light. The picture of a half-starved seamstress or lace garret would, in those days, have been incomplete without the thin rushcandle; but it flame was so feeble that I can hardly fancy any eyes could have served to thread a needle by it.—London Sunday.

THE NEXT HOUSE.

The Influence of the West and South.

[Washington Cor. Detroit Free Press.]

The influence of the West and the South in the next House of Representatives will undoubtedly attract a great deal of attention and excite very general comment. The following table shows the effects of the last apportionment of Representatives by giving the number of Congressmen from the various sections in the Forty-seventh and Forty-eighth Congresses:

	Forty-seventh.	Forty-eighth.
Eastern States	86	75
Western States	92	100
Southern States	125	120
Totals	293	325

So far as the sectional divisions are concerned, the thirty-two additional Representatives created by the new apportionment are divided between the West and the South, the former receiving seventeen and the latter fifteen.

The political divisions of the Representatives of the three sections in the Forty-seventh Congress were as follows:

	Dems.	Repub.
Eastern States	47	39
Western States	39	53
Southern States	123	2
Totals	149	144

This analysis gives the Democrats the two Greenbackers from Maine and the Republicans all the other Greenbackers and the Readjusters, and makes account of the Republicans seated in place of Democrats unseated during the Forty-seventh Congress.

The political divisions of the Representatives in the Forty-eighth Congress are as follows:

	Dems.	Repub.
Eastern States	42	33
Western States	52	48
Southern States	134	2
Totals	228	83

This table gives to the Republicans all the Readjusters, Independents and Greenbackers.

By comparing the two tables it appears that the Democrats gain fourteen Representatives in the Eastern States, and thirty-two in the Western States—a total of sixty-four. The Republicans lose fourteen in the Eastern States, fifteen in the Western States and three in the Southern States—a total of thirty-two.

The Republican loss represents just one-half of the Democratic gain, thus showing that practically the Democrats in the Forty-eighth Congress have the benefit of the entire increase in the representation resulting from the new apportionment. The number, thirty-two, is the increase of Representatives in the Forty-eighth Congress; it represents the Republican loss at the Congressional election, and it happens that the Democratic gain by the apportionment.

With a full Democratic caucus, ninety-eight votes will be necessary to nominate a candidate for Speaker. The majority of these ninety-eight votes must come from the West and South, inasmuch as the total of the Democratic votes from the Eastern States is only forty-two. Just What It Means.

The cry the Republican party appears to says concisely what thinking men feel.

It means more than at first appears.

At the outset, observe. Not Republicans, but the Republican party, must go.

Not intolerence of men, but of methods; not hatred of principles, but of power abused; not prejudice against a party for what it has been, but contempt for what it is, is the meaning.

Is it not vindictive it is not narrow-minded. It expresses a truth.

Long continuance in power is fatal to any party. We do not attempt to trace the decay. We do not seek that this decay of a mere party shall by no means corrupt the body politic. We find disease. We seek health.

There is no hope for the Republican party in itself. It must go. The salt has lost its savor. Is there a Sumner, or a Greeley, or a Phillips, or a Lincoln, or a Garrison, or a Seward to-day give the life of his great spirit to party councils? The "grand old party" has outlived its vigor. Oh!, but no longer grand, it must go. Bureaucrats and Bradleys, Rollmags and Dudleys, Hewitts and Shepherds, Kelloggs and Malones, Robesons and Chandlers are the men who, in spirit or in person, rule.

For what does it exist?

The great cause of its own nominal adherents have lost faith in it. Thousands whose lives have been spent in the service see that its usefulness is past.

Well for this party, if its story had closed since 1876. In the eight years past who will sum up the losses of the Republican party? Moral conscience, men of honesty have been compelled to leave it. Parts men has ceased to be a virtue. Blue-coated rags call it progressation, vindictive, unmeaning prejudice. The war-horse style of orators may begin their charges as of old, but the times have changed and the people with them. Hyperesy must go.

Whoever is deceived is deceived willingly.

The Republican party must go.—Albany Argus.

Political Notes.

The worst features of Mr. Randall's candidacy for the Speakership lies in the fact that the Republican press is supporting him with unexampled unanimity. That is a weight he cannot carry, and it should defeat him, even if there were no other reasons.

What the Democracy will do when they come into possession of the Federal Government we are willing shall be judged by what the Democracy have done for the people of New York by the control of the Legislature of that State. Cleveland.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Senten e was passed on the Republican party in 1874, says the Albany (N. Y.) Argus. Execution has been stayed twice. Perhaps the next time they will let the prisoner escape, and then it will be so long that he will be trying to deny his identity and prove an alibi.

Mr. Ayer, the representative of Massachusetts cotton, nominated for Lieutenant Governor by the Republicans, is the richest man in politics in the State, and it is expected that he will shovel $25,000 into the canvass to "beat Butler" and save the honor of the Commonwealth. The Republican party is a party of high aims.

MR. AND MRS. SPOOPENDYKE.

He Works at a Car Window and Tells His Wife What She Lacks to Become a Summer Resort.

"My dear," said Mrs. Spoopendyke, fanning herself vigorously and looking anxiously around the car. "My dear, don't you think it is awfully warm here?"

"Open the window, then," suggested Mr. Spoopendyke. "Press your thumb on the catch and then raise the sash. Give it a hard jerk, that'll loosen it."

Mrs. Spoopendyke followed instructions, split her glove, knocked the skin off her knuckle, and then sat down in a high state of perturbation.

"That the best you can do?" demanded Mr. Spoopendyke. He gave the window a wrench, but it firmly resisted.

"Won't, eh?" he growled. "Got some kind of a notion that this is the Fourth of July and the right season of the year to manifest independence, haven't you? Come up!" and his finger slipped off the lock, leaving a piece of bark behind. "Oh, hoo!" he roared. "Bite, do you? Praps you think some woman with a wax thumb is working this hoist! It ain't, I tell ye, nor it ain't any man! This is Spoopendyke who is engineering this particular lift, and you're going through the top of the car."

With which ex-clima Mr. Spoopendyke planted his hat firmly on his head and tugged at the window until his face looked like the danger side of a switch target.

"Never mind, ag dear," pleaded Mrs. Spoopendyke. "It isn't as warm as it was, and I don't care about having it up."

"It ain't, eh?" growled Mr. Spoopendyke, bracing himself for another attack. "I s'pose you've got some kind of an idea that this is a sort of refrigerating process I'm using through! Maybe you think this exercise is calculated to precipitate an early frost and ruin the peach crop," he continued.

"Perhaps it is stuck at the top," suggested Mrs. Spoopendyke.

"No doubt of it!" scouted Mr. Spoopendyke, turning suddenly on her. "Smash dy's been here and screwed it fast to the roof! Praps he's up there yet, holding on to it, but if he is, he'll think a steam jack machine is working and reach him! Look out us there, she's coming. Brace yourself for your flight to the spheres, for Spoopendyke has got a grip on now that'll last till something gives way!" and the worthy gentleman took hold once more and tried, while his wife dodged suspenders buttons and back strap buckles.

"I think I saw it move," she remarked, encouragingly.

"Did, did you?" howled Mr. Spoopendyke, whose hands were numbed by his exertions. "Did ye notice which way it went? Which'd ye do to that thing when ye tried it? A man's idea occurring to him. 'Hold on, there's a broke it when ye were feeding around here! Come up, will ye? Oh, finger nail, but come, oh, come, come up, come up with me!' and throw a time set into his job with a despairing one-slanchi. Mr. Spoopendyke missed his hold, fell over backward into his seat, wheeches sat, glaring at his distressed wife. He no time of light to emerge.

"Can't what ye wanted?" he hissed between his teeth. "Have ye accomplished your design? Got any more exercises ye want done before they begin to measure me for a shroud?"

"Don't look so rabout it, dear," turned Mrs. Spoopendyke, patting his head tenderly. "I'd rather have it shut than open, for it isn't half as warm as I supposed it was."

"Then what'd ye want to make such a fuss about?" howled Mr. Spoopendyke, still writhing under the sting of defeat. "If you're cool enough whatd ye shout me up there like a lured man for? Oh, you're cool enough? If I had your temperature, I'd fit myself up with a kind of missle and a bar room and blow myself out as a summer resort."

"I don't care," soliloquized Mrs. Spoopendyke, as a brakeman stopped up and opened the window with a little jerk: "My husband may not be very strong, but he's willing. And the next time I want a window up and I'll have it done before we leave home," and Mrs. Spoopendyke arranged her hat and dusted the soot off the dog to the cinder in her hands and eyes.—Detroit Tribune's Mother Goose.

Keeping Hotel in Jerusalem.

Jerusalem is Brunton left this State for less attractive scenes and he made a considerable property. In 1875 he became convinced that he was insensible to God to open an inn or tavern near Jerusalem, to prepare for the resurrection of the Holy City, and, although unmarried but with bachelor friends and no family, he determined to make the journey to Palestine and do as he had been directed. He first divided his property equally between himself and his wife, and sailed for the Holy City. Upon arriving there he purchased several acres of land near the city and erected a hotel. Strange to relate, the scheme proved a great financial success, and the old gentleman is now making a fortune from his inn. Recently he sent over for his family, and they are now with him and highly delighted with their new home and the golden prospects. Hundreds of English and Americans stop at the hotel, and it has become one of the institutions of Jerusalem. Cincinnati Star Record.

The New York Democracy.

Upon invitation of the democratic state central committee, representative democrats and editors of the democratic press of the state, numbering 250 persons, met the candidates for state offices last Friday. The object of the meeting was for the consultation as to the best means of organization. The result in Ohio, it was claimed, gave assurance of a democratic victory in New York. A majority of 50,000 was predicted. The chairman of the county committees explained the prospects in their counties and thought that victory depended to some degree upon the local nominations. The editors gave their experiences. It was agreed that the present schemes of organization are satisfactory.

In the evening a democratic jubilee serenaded the governor, candidates, and members of the conference. Gov. Cleveland, in a speech, said: "We celebrate to night a victory in a most important field, and a victory which gives its earnest of one much greater yet to come. We look with pride and joy to the achievement of our brethren in our sister state, and yield to them all the praise and admiration which their gallantry and courage claims. The first battle in the great campaign of 1884 has been fought and won. Ohio in the van calls us to follow."

Notes and News.

The next session of the grand lodge I. O. O. T. will be held at Lansing.

On one train of the Grand Rapids & Indiana Railroad going north Wednesday were 113 hunters from Ohio.

The circulation of the Kalamazoo daily and weekly Telegraph is larger than any other paper in the state outside of Detroit, being over 4,200.

The propeller City of St. Joseph, formerly running between St. Joseph and Chicago, carrying passengers, is now running from Muskegon to the lumber trade.

David Preston of Detroit, has purchased a village site about five miles east of the Rifle river, and is platting and laying it out into lots, so as to secure a bounza when the Detroit & Alpena engine passes through.

The October crop report of the state shows the average yield of wheat, as far as threshed, to be 14.74 bushels for the southern counties and 14.10 for the northern counties. The aggregate yield will be about 23,000,000 bushels.

The late Judge Black is said to have received the largest fee ever paid to a lawyer. He argued and won a cause in the U. S. Supreme Court for the New Almaden Quick-silver Company, and was paid a fee of $250,000.

A stock company with a paid up capital of $2,500 has been formed at Roscommon for the purpose of developing indications of oil and to ascertain whether or not it is in paying quantities. The probabilities are that Roscommon will have a "boom."

Reports from the wheat crop of the Manitoba district show a bad state of affairs, the crop having been frozen in the milk and ripened unthreshed. It is doubtful whether the country north of the Canada line can be depended on for permanent crops.

Three hundred Russian dows have been imported to work in the Baltic mills at Norwich, Conn. Their condition is most deplorable and deaths are exceedingly numerous among them. This is but one of many, examples of "protection to home industry." in theory.

At Middleville, Mich. Sunday morning, four persons were buried beneath the ruins of a brick wall and burned to death. Their names were S. B. Smith, owner of the burned property, Silas Geer, Charles Bundy, and Thomas Welsh, the latter a lad aged 14.

About the first deerment which came to light when the burglar chest of the county safe was opened by Coffman was a bill made by E. E. Hartwell against W. E. Parker for "drinks," "billiards," "poker," etc., amounting to over $118. Petoskey Record.

Charley Foster, after Ohio had been declared lost by the republican state committee, telegraphed to several parties that Foraker was elected by a small majority. If Apollo should visit this planet again and manifest any disposition to strike a lyre, Foster would probably be the first one to dodge.

C. S. Hampton of the Independent, has gone to Massachusetts to "stump" for Butler. In his last paper before starting eastward he said: If Ben Butler fails of re-election the public will make land that it is because we talked too many dollar supporters to death, and not encouraging. And if we [illegible] time after election our friends will please search for our hide on some Massachusetts fence, the republicans of the Old Bay State having a cheerful custom of skinning paupers and tanning their pelts."

"There is only one way to build up a town, and that is to have faith in it, and work for its prosperity, present and prospective. To these ends every citizen ought to lend a helping hand. If it is not what it ought to be, make it as near right as you can, but stand up for it, its business enterprises and its people with an unfaltering zeal. This is simply the citizen's duty, and if he fails in that, he does not deserve public inducement. All that is only what a reasonable herd pride demands of every citizen. And if the citizen has that local pride he will not hesitate to make present sacrifice in the faith that it will make his town better in the future. Let all remember this."

The Evening Telegram published by Samuel F. Cook & Co., made its appearance at Lansing, Saturday. It is printed from the old Kalamazoo Commercial material, and it is to be republican in politics. It comes behind a model of typographic excellence, and must display a great deal more energy in its local department than was exhibited in the first number if it expects to lead the Tri-Weekly Republican of that city. Its general telegraph news are apparently "set up" in Chicago, and shipped by express, while its "specials" are all dated the day before, and were evidently confessed from the Detroit morning papers.

The following officers of the Grand Lodge of Michigan, I. O. of G. T., for the ensuing year, have been installed by P. G. W. C. T., Charles P. Russell: G. W. C. T., D. P. Sagendorph, of Charlotte; G. W. Conn., R. W. J. Gulick, of Montague; G. S. J. T., Mrs. B. A. Grimes, of Detroit; G. W. M., G. R. Malone, of Big Rapids; G. W. D. M., Miss F. B. Newell, of Saginaw City; G. W. I. G., Mrs. F. E. Brantingham, of Northville; G. W. O. G., A. J. McDermuth, of Cass City; G. W. V. T., Mrs. T. B. Knapp, of Howell; G. W. S., John Evans of Bellevue; G. W. T., Thos. P. Bellonley, of Calpue; G. W., Miss F. J. Bauer, of Schoolcraft; P. G. W. C. T., Caleb S. Pitkin, of Detroit.

Hayes.

Cool days trying to snow.

Farmers and other persons should pay pare for old Bowers. He is now giving us a hint that winter is near at hand.

John A. Baird is on the sick list.

Somebody start a debating society. We will count now.

Where are your sportsmen? Foxes are plenty in some localities, in this township.

Lorin Hamlin broke the concave in his threshing machine, but purchased a new one, and is finishing his fall threshing.

Several Bayesites have been down near Lake Hagels the past week, looking for something new, but they say Hayes suits them best. So say we.

Sunday school still continues at Earl Grove.

Geo. C. Scott arrived home last week, from the south part of the state, with a fine lot of sheep.

J. E. Chew will teach school at Lake View the coming winter, commencing Dec. 3.

Several mortgages the past week, in this locality, names too numerous to mention.

S. W. Soutter, one of the lively "path masters" who lives on the state road, is doing a creditable job of grading the road in the neighborhood of Burgess's mill ditto.

Wild mad boys disfigure sign boards, and lay obstructions in the highway. The application of a No. 10 bungon would be a good remedy to make them look out. Avegers.

South Arm.

Our rain last Saturday night changed to snow. So we current our first snow storm, but Sunday's sun took it all away. Weather has been cool but pleasant since, so deer hunters will be obliged to wait a little longer.

Potatoes are nearly a failure, among some of the farmers in Echo. Some that have been dug have raised three or four hundred bushels, have scarcely enough for their own use.

Threshing machines are again heard in our midst, and it cometh to pass that what the farmer doth save from the insects, birds, and fowls, is used to feed the threshers and their teams. "Such is life."

Mrs. Norman Beal and Mrs. Edgar Wilson have gone to Capac, St. Clair county, to perform the sad duty of burying their mother, Mrs. Stoker.

Miss Ella Hobden, of Capac, is visiting friends in Echo.

Isaac Vance commenced teaching the Sisson school last Monday morning.

Mabel Schofield had an attack of remittent fever which lasted several days. She is recovering.

Babies are plentiful. Boys at Byron Holmes', George Murray's, John Daly's and John Lighty; girls at George McKay's and Hiram Benedict's. Next?

J. B. Yates took the job of building Mr. Shaw's house and he has commenced erecting it, with Peter Murray, of Echo, doing the carpenter work.

James Evans boasts of capturing a live coon. It is an ugly snarling animal but James thinks of making a pet of it.

Mrs. Marshall and son, who have been living in New York state, have come back to live on the old place in Echo. P. A. N.

Chandler.

Farmers are still digging potatoes. The crop is not as good as hoped for. Some will not dig enough to pay for digging.

Mr. Embury and wife were brought by warrant before Justice Reigle, on Saturday for disturbing the public school in district No. 2, Springvale, but the matter was settled.

A. J. Booth has rented his farm and is moving to Battle Creek.

Some of the "boys" are "on their ear" because of the action of the board of supervisors relative to stock running at large.

Mr. McKinley, of Petoskey, is preparing to get out square timber, in the southwest part of town.

STATE OF MICHIGAN, Thirteenth judicial circuit, in chancery. Carl G. Von Platen, petitioner, vs. William H. Condon, defendant. Suit pending in the circuit court for the county of Charlevoix, in chancery, at Charlevoix, on the eighteenth day of September, A. D. 1883. In this cause it appearing from affidavit on file that the defendant William H. Condon is not a resident of this state, but resides at the city of Chicago, in the state of Illinois, on motion of Lamoreaux & Grier, petitioner's solicitors, it is ordered that the said defendant, William H. Condon, cause his appearance to be entered herein, within four months from the date of this order, and in case of his appearance in pursuance thereof, and his failure to perform the decree to be made in this cause, that the same be taken as confessed by the said non-resident defendant, and that the further service of a copy of this order be dispensed with, and that service of a copy of this order to be published in the Charlevoix Journal, a newspaper printed, published and circulating in said county of Charlevoix, be deemed sufficient service thereof upon said defendant.

And it is further ordered that within twenty days from and after the date of this order the petitioner cause to be published in the Charlevoix Journal, a newspaper printed, published and circulating in said county of Charlevoix, a notice to the said non-resident defendant, stating the substance of this order, and requiring him to appear and plead, answer or demur to the bill of complaint herein filed within twenty days from and after the date of this order, or in default thereof, the said bill of complaint will be taken as confessed by him.

And it is further ordered that within twenty days from and after the date of this order the petitioner cause a copy of this order to be personally served on said non-resident defendant, at least twenty days before the time above prescribed for his appearance.

CHARLES J. STRANG,
Circuit court commissioner.

FRED C. SHANK & GRIER,
Solicitors for petitioner.

STATE OF MICHIGAN, ss. At a session of the probate court for the county of Charlevoix, held at the probate office in the village of Charlevoix, on the first day of October, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty three. Present, James A. Mont, judge of Probate. In the matter of the estate of DAVID SHERMAN MOSIER, deceased. On reading and filing the petition, duly verified, of Lewis Mosier, administrator of said deceased, praying for a license to sell the real estate of said deceased, as set forth in said petition. It is ordered that Monday, the 29th day of September next, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon, be assigned for the hearing of said petition, and that the next of kin of said deceased, and all other persons interested in said estate, are required to appear at a session of said court, then to be holden in the probate office, in the village of Charlevoix, and show cause, if any there be, why the prayer of the petitioner should not be granted. And it is ordered that said petitioner give notice to the persons interested in said estate, of the pendency of said petition, and the hearing thereof, by causing a copy of this order to be published in the Charlevoix Journal, a newspaper printed and circulated in said county, for three successive weeks previous to said day of hearing.

JAMES A. MONT,
Judge of Probate.

Messrs. Jos. LeClair and Felix Cook, of Atwood, gave the JOURNAL a call on Monday. They report everything lively in their town

A report is current that Boyne will have a railroad before the first of next July. We hope this is true. It will place Charlevoix so much nearer to a road, and "boom" the traffic of the Pine lake steamers. We understand that a gentleman by the name of Beardsley has said that if the citizens would take hold of the matter in earnest they could have the road where they want it; if they did not, he would build one to accommodate himself. It is not stated whether it is to go further east than the G. R. & I. road.

Nash & Gaylos are building a general supply store, and a saw mill for hardwood timber on Lake Le Clare's place, one mile east of Atwood, and quite a village will doubtless be built there soon. Their mill is now ready to run, as soon as water is restored, and the store is about ready for the goods. Everything will be moving lively in a few days and continue all winter. There is plenty of first class timber near at hand, which will keep the mill running for some years. It is proposed to call the village Nash Mills. A number of residences are already under way, and more will follow soon.

Some weeks ago we mentioned that it was thought that oil could be reached on the farm of Eugene Spaulding, of Norwood. On Tuesday S. S. Spaulding the former's brother living at this place informed us that from all appearances he was positive that oil could be found there in paying quantities. The farm of Mr. Spaulding is situated on Grand Traverse Bay, and in the particular spot, where the evidences that oil exists are found is a belief of black shale extending from the bay as far as Boyne City, a distance of twelve miles. The shale is the log as the point is of a reddish color, which Mr. Spaulding believes to be an evidence that there is oil in there too. In several places shallow wells have been sunk, and the oil and water rapidly fills the well. Mr. Spaulding says that if a stake is placed in the water and then withdrawn a coat of that is taken out with many brightly, and steadily. Some of the oil has been brought to this office which when mixed with a chemical shows. Nearly seven years ago Prof. Winchell of the state geological survey visited the farm and pronounced it a good indication, and said that there was evidences of oil in this particular locality, and a gentleman down at Norwood now, who claims to have lived in the Pennsylvania oil regions, says that the appearances of the country are much the same as in the above state. As oil has been struck in Roscommon county, it certainly is not far from our county, and we hope that it will be struck in Spaulding's farm. Petoskey Record.

Stockholders' Meeting.

Last Friday evening the stockholders of the Charlevoix Manufacturing Co. adopted by-laws and elected the following gentlemen as directors: W. J. Bradley, S. S. Spaulding, C. W. Crozier, O. D. Wood, C. E. Allen, D. C. Nettleton and A. Draper. On Saturday evening the directors met and elected the following officers:

President, M. L. Spaulding.
Vice President, D. C. Nettleton.
Secretary, H. Lee Hilding.
Treasurer, A. Bowers.
Superintendent, S. M. Soo.

At two o'clock yesterday morning the stables had not yet been selected, but a majority of the stock is in favor of the Clifford and Cook lots, and there is little doubt but they will be the ones chosen. We understand the main building is to be 50x60, two stories, with stone foundation. The lumber room will be 24 feet square, built of brick, and the engine room 16x28 feet, also separate from the main building.

THE MOTHER OF A FAMILY.

A HOUSEHOLD CANTATA.

Characters—Mother of the family, children, servants.

SOLO—MOTHER OF THE FAMILY.

Recit.—At length my work is over and done!
It is time the bustling it surely grew,
But still there's a half-hour left, I trust,
So now I'll sit down and improve my mind.
I'll write that letter I've owed so long,
Set right those accounts that would come wrong,
I'll prep into Northmore and Harper, too!
Oh, in this half-hour what won't I do?

Aria—Sweet it is when the dishes are washed!
Sweet it is when the children are dressed,
Pleasant the time when the stockings are darned.
Hail to the hour of moonlit rest!
Hail! hail! hail!
What though a lounger be apt to trim,
Fix bits out fringe, for my slumber best!
Time for that when the daylight's dim!
Hail to the hour of moonlight rest!
Hail! hail! hail!
To the hour of moonlight rest!

SEMI-CHORUS I.—CHILDREN.

Oh! please, mamma, my father is born!
Oh! please, mamma, my kitten is gone!
Oh! please, mamma, look where I will,
My cap and mittens are missing still!

DUET—MOTHER AND HOUSEMAIDS.

Cook—Oh, madam, 'tis my duty to inform you
That empty stands the flour-bin to-day,
You haven't any left to warm you,
And the re-luctant dog has stole the beef away.

Housemaid—Oh, sorrow and grief!
The beautiful beef!

Cook—The beautiful beef!
Oh, sorrow and grief!

Cook and Housemaid—Oh! powder and slop for the children's food!
Why stole the beautiful,
beautiful beef.

The beautiful beef!

Housemaid—Alas! mum, here's your vase of china,
The way of it I cannot un-derstand,
You'll find no fingers carefuller than mine are,
For here-to-fo all to pieces in my hand!

Cook—Oh, please mum!
The china vase!

Housemaid—'Tis all past vase!
Oh, pardon case!

Cook and Housemaid—Oh! dagger and knife for the inherent base
Who took the thieving,
Hanging thing,
The ill-fated vase!

SEMI-CHORUS II.—CHILDREN.

Oh! please, mamma, I want some cake!
Oh! please, mamma, my teeth do ache!
Oh! I pray, mamma, what shall I do?
My tooth will fall-a-broken in two.

This last chorus—Shouting, noise, mischief, and END OF CHILDREN.

Mother—Save! in the hour—
Cook—In the hour—Oh, sorrow and grief!
Mother—When the children are asleep!
Cook—Yes, 'tis the beautiful hour!
Housemaid—'Tis the hour!
Mother—When the children are dressed.
Both speak—Here comes the time!
Children—Mamma, mamma!
Mother—When pretty feelings are darned—
Children—Say! what shall I do?
Mother—And—
Call them, you!
Mother of many loves!
Chorus—A, e, i, s, broke in two.

Labor to please your little people feel,
Away to the heart of motherless steal!
Away! away! away!
With the best of gentle zeal
For all the glorious thing, to-day
The mother of families,
Or an humble one!

A LESSON FROM A WOLF CHASE.

Rube Wexford ought to have been a happy fellow. He was certainly considered so on the day when Kate Wilde became his bride. He was the envy of every young man in the rural Western hamlet where she, a country took place, and many were the good wishes showered on the hands of the newly wedded pair for their future happiness and prosperity. Still there were those who not only insinuated, but boasted that the lucky choice of her choice was unworthy the woman he had won. Kates father and mother were partners large supposed to the match, and did all in their power to prevent it, but the girl, beside her unwavering love, possessed a determined will which, when once made, carried all before it, and Rube Wexford was never accounted a strictly temperate man. Indeed, there had been times before marriage when he was far days under the influence of liquor, and Kate had seen him in this state, and dreaded to see him fall into it of his weakness. But the woman loved the man, and within herself resolved that his reformation should be her duty. That success had crown her efforts she little doubted.

Autumn drifted away, the crops had been gathered in, and all the harvests of Kate pointed to an early and severe winter, but the season continued. No sad was heard of Rube, nor was he seen to keep his from Washington, and this put Kate in. On evening in the latter part of December, as she sat by the log fire and was thinking of her husband, Rube went in, looking as though he had not slept for days.

"Kate, I'm in trouble!" he exclaimed, as he sank into a chair.

"Why, what is it, Rube?"

"What is it, Kate?"

A look of relief lighted her face. Whatever it was, and no matter how serious, she could bear it, if Rube was not to blame.

"Why, I thought, from your manner, that you had committed some crime, and I was afraid you were going to tell me of it."

"No, not exactly that, but I've been drunk. I was coming home on the train, and—"

Kate's face again fell, foreboding; "I could not advise anything now."

He glanced at the couch and said:

"Kate, I must go."

"How can you think of going before you leave, when I command it?"

"No, no, not for child."

"Then you shall not go." His resolve was firm as he dredged through the snow. It would be after 2 o'clock when he reached home. One thing reminded him that he was not quite sober. But he would make he on the other when he up and called on Kate. Of course, she need be, for he was not a confirmed drunkard. Liquor had been the cause of his downfall, but he would be master of it. He would not be conquered by it. He would not be a slave to it. He would not be a slave to it. He would not be a slave to Crop Statistics.

From the October number of the crop report sent from the office of the secretary of state, we take the following paragraphs:

The number of acres of wheat reported threshed in the southern four tiers of counties is 261,421; number of bushels 3,852,618, an average per acre of 14.74 bushels. Acres reported threshed in the northern counties 37,265; bushels, 413,766, an average of 11.10 bushels per acre. These figures together with the acreage in May, as returned by the supervisors, indicate an aggregate product in the state of 23,147,135 bushels. The statistics of wheat threshed are from records kept by threshers.

Of the whole number of answers received in September and October to the question which variety of wheat has given the highest yield per acre, 218 correspondents in the southern four tiers of counties answer Clawson, 198 Fultz, 111 Egyptian, and 50 Lancaster. To the question which variety has given the second highest yield 224 answer Clawson, 188 Fultz, 83 Egyptian, and 57 Lancaster. To the question which variety is third in order of yield 170 answer Clawson, 114 Fultz, 63 Egyptian, and 59 Lancaster.

The total number of bushels reported marketed in August and September is 2,327,295.

The number of acres of oats threshed in the southern four tiers of counties as shown by threshers' records, is 74,005; yield, 2,317,394 bushels; average per acre, 31.32 bushels; acres threshed in the northern counties 13,735; yield, 359,234 bushels; average per acre, 25.94 bushels. The canvass made by correspondents shows an average of 33.11 bushels per acre in the southern counties, and of 28.07 bushels in the northern counties.

Had the weather during the fall been exceptionally favorable the corn crop would not have exceeded one-half of an average crop. Inquiries made since the severe frosts of September 8 and 9 have elicited the following information: In the southern tier of counties possibly 14 per cent, and in the second, third, and fourth tiers 10 or 12 per cent of the crop has fully ripened. In the first, second, and third tiers of counties only one-fifth to one third, and in the fourth tier about one eighth, of the crop may be safely cribbed. In the northern counties possibly three per cent of the crop has fully ripened, and ten per cent of it will do to crib. In the first tier 10 per cent, in the second 5, in the third 15, and in the fourth tier and counties north, about 30 per cent of the acreage planted has been plowed up or abandoned.

Partial returns indicate that on a reduced acreage potatoes in the southern four tiers of counties will yield 67 per cent, and in the northern counties 73 per cent of the yield in 1882.

Winter apples promise in the northwestern part of the state 36 per cent; in the northeastern, 28 per cent; in the central, 23 per cent; in the southwestern, 17 per cent, and in the southeastern 17 per cent of an average crop.

Late peaches promise in the northwestern part of the state 43 per cent; in the northeastern, 30 per cent; in the central 31 per cent; in the southwestern, 40 per cent; and in the southeastern, 13 per cent of an average crop.

Michigan for Young Men.

The generation of men who are just entering on the business of founding a future is constantly on the watch for the field that promises the greatest chances for growth. If there is one that offers inducements above all others, or that appears to, they seek it earnestly. Immediate acquisitions are of less moment than the choice of circumstances conducive to the largest prosperity in the long run. Nothing is so satisfying as to know that one is ever growing in the respects that are prized. Hence it is that the new states are most commonly sought by those just getting their start, in the belief that in them is the best prospect for the desired results.

Contrasted with any of the new states the field in Michigan is better than all. If it is new and cheap lands that are desired, the stage has been, rich, adapted to a wide variety of crops and in immediate command [illegible]

"I drink to make me work," said a young man, to which an old man replied thus: "That is right. You drink and it will make you work. Harken to me a moment, and I will tell you something that may do you good. I was once a very prosperous farmer. I had a good, loving wife, and two as fine lads as the sun ever shone on. We lived a comfortable home and lived happily together. But we used to drink ale to make us work. Those two lads I have laid in drunkard's graves. My wife died of broken hearted and she lies by her two sons. I am 72 years of age. Had I not been for drink I might have been an independent man; but I used to drink to make me work and work, it makes me work now! At 70 years of age I am obliged to work for my daily bread. Drink! Drink! and it will make you work." There is a powerful warning in this incidental anecdote that ought to be heeded by every boy or young man. And it is forced home as a true outcome of imbibing in liquors. They will beset you in the end.—Lansing Republican.

The Bay City Press thinks that the refusal of the legislature of Georgia to pay the funeral expenses of the late Governor Stephens, a man who served his state grandly for nearly half a century, should be a warning to politicians to leave unpaid money to bury them, and save the humiliation to their friends and relatives of seeing how soon they were forgotten. Governor Stephens was a democrat and an honest man, but we have yet to hear of a republican who has been in office any length of time who did not have money to bury him and set his heirs to quarrelling.

Old Mother Hubbard went to the cupboard to get her poor dog a bone, but when she got there the cupboard was bare and so the poor dog had none. She was in a great stew to know what to do, for of money she had not a cent, so she sold her last suit to buy meat for the brute, and up town in her night gown she went. All the ladies who saw it and the string to draw it, declared it the nicest thing out; so now on the street, looking ever so sewed, in their gowns they go raving about.

Pilfered Paragraphs.

Jay Gould has abandoned his yacht, and is now cruising around Wall Street.

An informal poll of Michigan democrats shows very little opposition to Tilden.

The Ohio contest being over, patriots can now turn their attention to Massachusetts.

Has anybody as yet suggested Jay Gould as a republican candidate for the presidency?

The printing of the pension list is causing anxiousness in the breast of many an injured veteran.

The democratic party of Massachusetts is a political bicycle. It is unnecessary to say that Butler has his feet on the treadles.

General John M. Palmer has been interviewed by the Chicago Daily News. He is for Tilden and a tariff for revenue only.

President Arthur lifted an eighty pound bass off Newport a few days ago. If this is not record enough on which to run for president, it would interesting to know what the public require.

Now is the time your horses and cattle need attention. To prevent disease and loss up the system you will find Parmelee's Condition Powders unexcelled. Full pounds 40 cents. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co. 8-40

Two cent postage will increase the number of letters sent and the chances are that after a short period the postoffice will be earning as much as ever. The next step ought to be onecent letter postage and one ounce the limit, instead of half an ounce.

The Colorado republicans are trying in to patch up a peace. They do it by calling each other liars, renegades, cut throats, thieves, lobbyists and other pet names. All the harmony in the United States is not centered in Ohio and Massachusetts, by a long shot.

No Scrofula

Can be so deep-seated, so malignant and stubborn, that Parmelee's Blood Purifier will not be found helpful. It will effect a cure, if cure be possible. And if you are troubled with boils, salt-rheum, pimples, roughskin, or any humor whatever, just give the Purifier a thorough trial and you cannot fail to receive benefit from it. Price $1 per bottle. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co.

There is one dangerous point about secretary Folger's view of a new bond issue. It might be all well enough to issue 2 per cent bonds to replace those at a higher figure. The danger is in the suggestion that the government might pay a premium for the 4 per cents. The democratic platform ought to be millions for revenue, but not one cent for premium. No bond house boring of gambling in government bonds. No premium. This country is not rich enough to afford betting government officials buy its bonds in at a premium.

Has the lake air, and wind spoiled your complexion? you long for a preparation that will completely remove moth, tan and pimples, and keep the skin clear and soft? If so, you have but to buy a bottle of Hamilton's Arterial Balm, which is simply magical in the effect and perfectly harmless. It is used in all the best families and gives unbounded satisfaction. Price 50 cents per bottle. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co.

The superior court of New York has decided that marriage licenses and the services of the minister and the justice, in fact, all ceremonies, are unnecessary in that state. A couple living together and openly acknowledging to their acquaintance that they are husband and wife, are made so by that fact, as under the Scotch law. In Philadelphia, a judge holds the same to be law. The New York court drew a distinction. Where the statement made by the parties was not intended in good faith by either, but only to deceive others and for mercitrious purposes, it was no marriage.

The Keys.

The kidneys and liver are the keys to woman's health. If these organs are in a healthy condition no fear need be entertained of sickness, for the system will cleanse itself of impure matter. CHARLEVOIX, MICH.; HARBOR AND SUMMER RESORTS.

CHARLEVOIX.

Its Business, Advantages, Resorts, and Surroundings.

Charlevoix, the county seat of Charlevoix county, is a flourishing village of about 1,500 inhabitants is situated on the high bluffs overlooking Lake Michigan, between Round lake and Lake Michigan, and on both banks of Pine river, which forms the connecting link between Lake Michigan and the inland lakes, and is the key to the whole Pine lake region with nearly eighty miles of shore line. The citizens are justly proud of their town, and manifest a commendable spirit of enterprise and liberality. A writer, speaking from eight years acquaintance with the place, has said that the intellectual and moral standard of Charlevoix people is superior to any place of its size he has ever known. There are about ninety business firms here, representing nearly all branches. A few however, are lacking, which could be added, and probably will at no distant day. Some branches are represented by a single firm, and others would make closer competition, more activity, and better satisfaction. And this competition is sure to come as the village grows.

During the season of 1881, all branches of business have been good, but more particularly that of building and improving residences. From the opening of the season to Sept. 30, sixty-five thousand dollars were expended, and fifty-four new residences so far completed that they are to be occupied before the coming winter. Large as this may seem, mechanics predict a much larger business next year.

In sub-building, Charlevoix has just made a beginning. In 1882, there was but one ship-yard. Now, there are three, and the business of 1882 has been more than doubled.

Not having at hand the figures for the shipments during the season of 1882, it is impossible to make comparisons, but the following exhibit will show what has been done so far this year. The figures include only cargoes reported at the custom house up to Sept. 30, and not packages of fish, etc., carried by steamers in local or coast trade:

Hardwood lumber, feet	8,435,000
Pine lumber, feet	2,567,000
Lath	225,000
Square timber, feet	250,000
Railroad ties	56,000
Cedar posts	60,000
Telegraph poles	500
Wood, cords	11,111
Bark, cords	9,594
Shingles	6,000
Cobble stone, cords	44

The channel between Lake Michigan and Round lake is 150 feet wide, and has a depth of 13½ feet its full length. This gives us a perfectly landlocked harbor where vessels may ride in safety during the severest storms. Between Round and Pine lakes the capacity of the channel is slightly less, but still sufficient for the up-lake traffic.

The fishing business is an important item, and there is a ready market for all that can be caught.

On Sept. 26, charlevoix experienced the first shock from fire, by which the planing mill of S. M. Sec. Mason & Co., was totally destroyed, together with a large amount of lumber and finished work. Insurance was in force and other means, the company could not rebuild. Realizing the necessity and value of such an institution the citizens took hold of the matter, and in ten days $10,000 in stock was subscribed, and steps taken to rebuild at once.

Other industries are being quietly worked up, among these a grist-mill, and a fruit, vegetable, and fish-canning business. It is expected that these two will be in operation before the close of another season.

All in want of tombstones or any kind of marble cutting are obliged to send outside.

Among the industries requiring hardwood timber which we have in abundance near at hand that might be successful here are the manufacture of chairs, agricultural implements, and farm wagons.

Handles of all kinds, and wooden bowls could be made here as economically as anywhere.

The Resources

Between Round lake and Pine lake and south of the main channel which connects them, is located the Charlevoix summer resort. The grounds of the resort comprise about 75 acres, and rise by three natural and well-defined terraces from Pine lake. The two lower terraces are sufficiently wide for cottage lots, with a broad walk in front, while the upper terrace stretches far away in a level plateau, from which glimpses of Lake Michigan are obtained. More than half the tract is cleared land, other parts being thickly wooded, and the portion farthest from the water being covered with heavy timber, while in the rear of the whole the dense woods extend to some distance. A handsome hotel, [illegible] here house, has been erected on a [illegible] from which a charming view of the [illegible] reaching far to the southeast is [illegible] number of beautiful cottages also [illegible] terraces overlooking the lake. PINE LAKE.

One of the loveliest of all the many [illegible] lakes that adorn the fair northern part [illegible] Pine lake. It stretches east and south [illegible] miles. About five miles east it divides [illegible] arms; extending as its name implies, [illegible] end of south arm flows the Jordan [illegible] famous trout stream. Prof. Winchell [illegible] gave the following graphic description [illegible] lake: "Far away in the southeast [illegible] miles, stretches the placid, smiling [illegible] the water; its shores rise gradually [illegible] the contour of the hills in all its [illegible] sinuosities. The verdant ridges rise [illegible] the forest, the shining shore line, and [illegible] lake in their enchanted embrace, while [illegible] hill-tops bobble up in rapid succession [illegible] the retiring landscape, till all, save [illegible] green, purple and blue, dissolve together [illegible] blended hues of the distant horizon."

The surface of the county is everything, and in some parts decidedly [illegible] well watered and is generally covered [illegible] mirable spring brooks of the coldest [illegible] There is some available water power, [illegible] ly on the Jordan and Boyne rivers. The Detroit House of Correction.

This house of correction illustrates in itself many of the worst features of prison manufacturing monopoly. The labor of the prisoners is employed in the manufacture of chairs on a large scale. The institution has been a kind of boarding house for convicts from all parts of the United States, so that a large number of prisoners are brought together there. The entire amount of labor is manipulated in the interest of certain individuals, and the goods can be produced so cheap as to give these interested parties almost the full control of the market. They are enabled to depress prices to almost any extent and have the power to crush all competition whenever they choose. This subject is of vital interest to northern Michigan, as this important branch of hardwood manufacture has already been greatly injured by the forced and unnatural production in Detroit. An effort was made at the last session of the legislature to effect a change in this matter, but the selfish interests of a few prevailed against all considerations of public good, and the movement was a failure. The private pecuniary interest of certain individuals in the present system is sufficient to command a powerful lobby and to control legislation directly against the most pronounced public sentiment throughout the state. We hope the time will come when cheap prison labor cannot be employed to enrich a few favored individuals to the injury of our general manufacturing and industrial interests.—Eagle.

Political Notes.

The silver dollars in the United States treasury amount to $114,000,000. Of this $79,000,000 are held as a corresponding amount of silver certificates, and the other $35,000,000 the government may be called upon to disburse at any time.

If you think people are poor and hard up, just try to get a little work done, for cash. Men will loaf, and drink whiskey during the summer and fall, and when dreary winter comes, petitions will be circulated to gather up money and provisions for their families. Such cases are by far too common.—Exchange.

The New York Herald has donned the newsboys and the Herald is on sale everywhere in New York for 2 cents. The Times at 2 cents has a circulation of over 100,000; the Sun has lost about 10,000 of its circulation, and the circulation of the World continues to increase. New York journalism is now substantially on a 2 cent basis.

An exchange states that a late order of the postmaster general provides that no parcel or letter will be forwarded upon which the postage has not been fully paid. This is an important order and ought to be fully understood. If the card of the sender is on the package, such packages will be returned; otherwise, the addressed will be notified and required to furnish the requisite amount of postage.

The recent failures in the woolen goods and clothing trade, though limited in their influence, indicate over production not less surely than the collapse of Shaw Brothers in the leather business.—New York Tribune. The Chicago Tribune which, as a republican campaign organ, did what it could defeat the free trade movement in Iowa, now that the election is over concedes the statement of its New York manufacturer to be true and adds "Over production is the cause of over production. Too much tariff bounty has lured an excess of capital into the woolen, leather, iron, steel and glass manufactures, which in turn have produced artificially dear goods far beyond the consuming power of the country, and the failure and bankruptcy of manufacturers is the natural result. Under the handicapping of a high tariff the goods cost too much for exportation and sale in foreign markets, and the over-stimulated home market is choked up, and the manufacturers go to smash, and the workmen are turned out into the streets to search for other employment. A little less protection would have averted these evils."

The wise republican editors are now engaged in wrestling with the vote in the Ohio election. As far as we can make out from the calculations of these mathematicians, the democrats were badly defeated in Ohio. They elected their candidate, but they were substantially beaten. It was a great republican victory. The more sinful victories the crushed old party has the better. But any republican editor who wants a full list of the injured can probably get it of Mr. Chas. Foster. New York Sun.

The state board of charities, who were empowered by the last legislature to decide on the location and plans of the proposed new asylum for insane criminals, met at Detroit and selected plans prepared by Gordon Lloyd of that city. The new structure will be erected on grounds [illegible] feet in area, taken from the southeast corner of the present house of correction premises at Ionia, and will accommodate about 70 inmates. Work is to be begun at once. It is expected to have the building ready for use by April 1, 1884.

Now navy yard frauds have come to light in the Brooklyn navy yard. At an auction sale held September 25 and 26 large amounts of condemned cable, shackle and chain were sold by the pound, the catalogue showing the amount in each lot. The bids were far above the market value of the material per pound and it was ascertained on investigation that the lots sold weighed in some cases more than double the amount indicated by the catalogue. By the exposure of the scheme the bidders were nipped badly, as Commodore Upshur ordered that only the number of pounds indicated by the catalogue should be delivered.

It is well known that the republicans confidently claimed Ohio before the election, and in view of the local democratic dissensions, it was generally conceded that their claim was well founded. Even democrats quietly admitted that the state would go against them. But look at the result! Nearly 10,000 majority for Headly outside of Hamilton and Cuyahoga counties, in which he was expected to run the strongest! The surprising democratic vote in the state at large shows unmistakably that the rural voters have lost confidence in the republican party and are willing to entrust the governmental affairs into the hands of the democracy. They prefer the latter with all its dissensions to the corrupt and unscrupulous republican leaders. The day has passed when either party can count for its own success on the blunders or even the sins of the other. The people are not only critical in mind, but they are keen in perception. Their moral scent has been quickened by the mass of corruption thrown to the surface by the Dorsey revelations and the sickening exposures of republican hypocrisy and wrongdoing, and they are determined to take things into their own hands and restore if possible the government to its pristine purity and simplicity. Louisville Journal.

The following from the Evening News, will give our friends who are interested in the tariff question a pointer of some interest:

A protectionist journal speaks of the repeal of the duty on quinine as an outrage. At the time the duty on quinine was repealed, the wholesale price was $1.01 to $3.25 per ounce. Since we have had free trade in quinine the price has fallen to $1.80 per ounce. So the outrage was not committed against the consumers of quinine. Since the duty was repealed the production of quinine has largely increased in this country; two new factories have been established, giving employment to a much larger number of men than ever before. So, the repeal of the duty was not an outrage on the men employed in its production. If the placing of quinine on the free list was an outrage it must be the manufacturers who have the victims. With a duty of sixty cents an ounce we have no doubt the manufacturers' profits were much larger than at present, but the fact that the two firms, that have become millionaires by taxing the sick, still continue to manufacture quinine is sufficient proof that there is still a profit in the business even at a reduction of $1.20 per ounce. Even protectionists should be able to see that the outrage consisted in taxing the sick man's medicine for the benefit of two firms who had become millionaires.

Hope for the Drunkard.

If inebriety is curable, as the Boston Traveler asserts that it is, by the following method, then is there hope for the victim of this base passion—drink. That journal makes the following assertion: "Any intemperate person can easily supply himself with the remedies used at all the inebriate asylums, and he has his own physician, at his own home, without the necessary expense and publicity of visiting the Washingtonian home or any other public institution. His laboratory need only contain a small quantity of cayenne pepper, a pot of concentrated extract of beef, and a few grains of bromide of potassium. When the desire for alcoholic drink recurs, make a tea from the cayenne pepper (as strong as can be taken with any degree of comfort; sweeten it with milk and sugar and drink. This tea will supply the place that a glass of liquor would fill and will leave no injurious effect behind. Repeated daily as often as the appetite returns, it will be but a few days before the sufferer will have become disgusted with the taste of the pepper, and with the appearance of this disgust disappears the love of liquor. The fact is proved every day. The extract of beef is to be made into beef tea, according to the direction on the pot, in such quantities as may be needed for the time being, and furnishes a cheap, easily digested and healthy nutriment.

If being made to stay on the stomach when meaner articles of food would be rejected. The bromide of potassium is to be used carefully, and only in case of extreme nervousness, the dose being from fifteen to twenty grains, dissolved in water. This is a public exhibit of the method of treatment adopted at the inebriate asylums. In addition thereto the drinking man should surround himself with influences which tend to make him forget the degrading associations of the bar room and lift him upward. He should endeavor, so far as his business avocations will permit, to sleep, bathe, and eat regularly, and obey the laws of health. By the adoption of this course energetically and sincerely, no man who has the will to reform can fail to do so. Hundreds and thousands can attest the truth of these statements.

THE new English Illustrated Magazine is not only going to give Harper and Scribner a tussle in the old country, but will board them in their native den. It will be published in England for 12 cents and in America for 15 cents. Harper's sells for 18 cents in England and Scribner for 24 cents. All magazines there sell by retail for 25 per cent. less than the published price. A thoroughly-good illustrated magazine for 15 cents will be a novelty in this country.

THERE are about thirty blind newsdealers in New York city. Most of them own their own stands and are doing a good business. Some of them are so active and dexterous that many of their customers do not suspect that they are blind. It is said that nearly all of them are experts in detecting bad coin, and, what is more wonderful, can determine almost instantly the value of most foreign silver coins presented to their customers in payment for newspapers.

AN improved ice-creezing apparatus is the subject of an invention for which a patent was recently granted to Mr. John Hawes, of Halifax, Nova Scotia, Canada. The invention consists of an apparatus for freezing water by natural cold, the water being fed into shallow pans for that purpose. Steam-pipes are provided for thawing the frozen blocks free from the bottom and sides of the pans, after which the pans are refilled up and the blocks of ice are discharged into the ice-house by gravity.

A REMARKABLE feat was recently accomplished by John Macdonald, of Dundee, Scotland. His brother-in-law had was passing through a field when he was attacked by a bull, and, being a cripple, attempted to defend himself with his crutch. John ran to the rescue, and, having no weapon, caught the beast by the horns, and with one supreme effort gave a smart twist to the head, dislocating the neck and the ox fell, and killing the bull. Mr. Macdonald was at one time champion athlete of Scotland.

SITTING BULL is in poor health. He says: "I have never offered mine money to travel and to be present at the Centennial Exposition, but I have made about on the cars, and I fear that to do so would make me sick. I now have a hunting license, and fear that in a shop, while I stand and go before fathers, before the little time that is spared me I want to spend with my children, whose sight delights me. I have ten children and many relatives, who want me to stay with them. I also fear if I trusted myself from home that the white would starve me, or that I would like to keep returning."

A VERY little story is going the round of the English press about Premier Gladstone's experience with a wide-awake detective who was detailed to guard him during his stay at Hawarden Castle. The candle-pedlar fence had a few minutes before dressed before the Premier arrived there, and the "Grand Old Man" in his hearing thus "took stock" of their next experienced detective there, who, he soon took up private quarters. Shortly after midnight of the first day of his arrival the board and soft footsteps in front of the outside, and, after listening some time, satisfied himself that it was a regular trader. Having prepared himself for a fierce struggle with a conspirator or a diabolic plotter or some villain of that sort, the gallant Victor rushed out on his unsuspecting prey, but was surprised to find that no resistance at all was offered him. He was more surprised, however, when, holding his lantern to the face of the midnight prowler, he discovered that he had pounced upon the Premier himself, who was just on the point of calling for help. The detective has been recalled to Scotland Yard.

YOUTHFUL crime is not winked at in New Jersey by the stern representatives of law and justice. At Paterson, the other day, a 7-year-old boy, while engaged in cutting some cake, was approached by Master Leonard Fobben, a 9-year-old sinner in petticoats, who demanded a piece of the tooth-some viand. The demand being refused, the hardened youth in kilts whacked the 7-year-old over the head with a stick. He was promptly arrested and taken before a magistrate on a charge of assault. On account of the tender years of the prisoner, the Justice did not impose the full penalty of the law, but contented himself with boxing the urchin's ears and bound him over to keep the peace. Next time that boy may be depended upon to take the cake.

CHARLES O'CONOR is said to have recently endured half an hour or so of undiscriminating praise of John Howard Payne. The dreary dissertation led up to a particularly painful recitation of "Home, Sweet Home," with interjected comments and ejaculations of praise. "Don't you think that is a masterpiece?" the cheerfulness inspired quite rapturously. "I do not," was the blunt reply; "it is dogged, and you would know it if you had any judgment at all about poetry." There is nothing more nonsensical in the whole history of literature, the venerable lawyer is represented as saying, than the fame given to Payne for those rhymes. "There isn't a thought in them worth preserving beyond the old and world-wide one of the sweetness of home. There isn't any excellence of language or structure. The piece as a whole is on a par with the sentimental songs of the negro minstrels. The tune is all that keeps it afloat from oblivion, and that was an old Sicilian air, stolen by Payne. Unrewarded genius? Paysch-haah! any; and if he was able to make a fair living, as he did, out of his common piece writings, he got all the reward that he deserved."

In the number of deaths caused by recent earthquake and volcanic eruptions in Java should prove as great as it is stated—a hundred thousand or the residents—it is doubtful if history records any equally-calamitous convulsion of nature. The earthquake of Lisbon, on Nov. 1, 1755, caused the death of 250,000 persons; and the great earthquake which occurred in Sicily in 1693, killed just double that number. Another formidable earthquake was that of Riobamba, in 1797, which swallowed up fully 40,000 human beings; and the earthquake resulting from the two shocks in Calabria, in 1783, was exceedingly great, though there seems some doubt about the exact figures. The most formidable volcanic eruption mentioned in history is beyond all doubt the great eruption of Vesuvius, described that the Younger Pliny, whose uncle and Pompeii made the latter his death. Herculaneum and Pompeii made the latter's ashes and Lava which covered them for centuries. The fact that the volcano and the earthquake combined their forces to heap ruin upon the unfortunate people of Java explains the exceptional mortality caused by the recent terrible visitation, which in a single night swept away 36,000 souls, despite the fact that wolves howl around at night and spoilers play hide-and-seek through the streets like rats.—Boston Advertiser.

A Good Stayer.

"Dear Charley wear a corset, Mary?" asked a fond mother of her darling daughter.

"Why, no, I guess not," was the response.

"I thought he did," said the mother.

"Thought so? What in the world made you think so, mother?" asked the bewildered girl.

"Because he's such a good stayer," was the response.—Carl Pretzel's Weekly.

The Modern Son-in-Law.

The son-in-law. What is this? This, darling, is the son-in-law. Oh, he is the section of a mother-in-law? Yes, dear, or a cold modern Indian, who supports him. That is what makes him so frightful to-day? Partly, my precious. And the other cause? Well, he has been to dinner at the club. But why does he go home in that condition? Because all the other places are closed. Gracious! what will he be another time do? She will help him upstairs and assist in removing his boots. Then the poor mother-in-law will be enabled with a sandwich, lectured for two hours, and scalded half to death with boiling tea? Oh, no. But if he is so dissipated why does the poor mother-in-law put up with him? Because he gives her daughter a position. How position? Well, before marriage she is cherished as was very rich, but was not known in society. Well? Now she is not quite so rich, but she is "known." Through the son-in-law? Exactly. But is the poor girl happy? Her daughter? I cannot say with her. Are they satisfied? Quite so. But is getting into society so dreadful that a girl will marry such a man to accomplish it? Dear, my precious. My! but how for the poor girls who cannot marry such nice men? Unfortunately. Have they any consolation? A meager one. And that? They can die and go to heaven. —Punch.

Others who live nearer, as in Iowa, or Minnesota, or Dakota, make monthly pilgrimages to their ranches, or more likely, go once in two months and remain two nights, endure this sacrifice to their country, and at the end of their nerves a few times, and become owners of valuable real estate. A Dakota girl that said Dakota was no place or two is a curiosity. The only drawback to the Eastern girls is the fact that they have to "prove up" before they can get their application. A hundred and sixty acres is a large farm, and not much of an inducement to a Boston girl for such an admission. But only her it is altogether different, for at only lasts a few months, and at the end of that time the young ladies are right back to Boston. Thomas and Charles: "Good evening, lads."

Kate: "How do, Charley, Tom? Where have you been this age?"

Josephine: "Sure enough. Henry Brown was in just now. Did you meet him?"

Thomas: "Hen is a great fellow, ain't he? Did he give you a lecture on metempsychosis, or a dissertation on Bree's legs as a remedy for the unsettled condition of the labor market?"

Kate: "Oh, Tom! you're too hard on Henry. You shouldn't have said that before natures. But his conversation is a little tedious sometimes."

Charles: "Tedious! Oh, he is awful."

Josephine: "What's the news?"

Thomas: "And any, Charley, who was that girl you was so sweet on in the car's afternoon?"

Charles: "Didn't I mash her, though?"

Josephine: "Oh, you naughty boy!"

Thomas: "Charley gets the bridge on of us."

Charles: "Where did you get those cigarettes, Tom? Boss ones?"

Thomas: "Got 'em in New York. Can't get a decent cigarette in Boston. Have tried 'em all. By the way, Charley, you want to try Squigglefritz's beer. Beats anything in town. Drank six glasses there last night."

Charles—"Who beat this afternoon?"

Thomas—"The Long Stockings—six to nothing—regular whitewash. Catch-em-naps an awful muffer, and Slick pounded the Cedar Legs all over the field. But we must be going, Charley. Goodbye, Joe; goodby Kate."

Charles—"Good-by, girls."

Kate and Josephine—"Goodby. Should think you might stop longer, though."

"Mothers' Children."

"I am heartily tired," said a brilliant New England girl, "of hearing so much of the Pilgrim fathers. Why not say something about the Pilgrim mothers? They bore their share of the trials and hardships of those early days, and in addition had to endure the Pilgrim fathers; not a very light burden, I fancy. The idea thus suggested admit, if it does not demand, a much fuller application. The fathers everywhere receive vastly more attention than the mothers, when, in one very important relation, at least, it ought to be just the other way. Some years ago a large party of ladies and gentlemen, embracing eleven representatives of both sexes from all parts of the country, was detained over night in the middle of one of our Western prairies. After exhausting their stock of conversation and amusements in efforts to brighten the dull hours, they were fortunate enough to enlist the services of a famous phrenologist who happened to pass through the sleeping-car. His examinations and comments were the more interesting from the fact that he was personally unacquainted with the subject of them. In every case, according to the testimony of the persons themselves and their friends the descriptions were unexpectedly full and characteristic and peculiarities with wonderful correctness. One point in the mental diagnosis was invariably significant. The first remark, as he pounded a masculine head, was, in the majority of cases, "How much was the father worth?" Well, before marriage the husband was very rich, but was not known in society. Well? Now he is not quite so rich, but she is "known." Through the son-in-law? Exactly. But is the poor girl happy? Her daughter? I cannot say with her. Are they satisfied? Quite so. But is getting into society so dreadful that a girl will marry such a man to accomplish it? Dear, my precious. Women in Brazil.

It would be difficult to imagine anything more dreary and monotonous than the life of a Brazilian señora in the small cities and towns. In the North Provinces, especially, the Portuguese notion about shutting women up and making their home life as colorless as that of a cloistered nun, without all the element of religious enthusiasm, to give it zest, still prevail. Many Brazilian lady passes day after day without stirring beyond her four walls, scarcely showing herself at the door or window, for she is always in dishabille, unless she expects company. It is sad to see these stifled existences. Without my contact from the world outside, without any charm of dress or life, without books or culture of any kind, the Brazilian señora either sinks contentedly into a vapid, empty, aimless life, or frets against her fate, and is as discontented as she is useless. The education of women is disregarded in Brazil, and the standard of the instruction for girls in the public schools is low. Even in the private schools, where the children of the richer classes are taught, it is the complaint of all teachers that they are taken away from school just at the time when their minds begin to develop.

The majority of girls in Brazil go to school at all are sent at about 6 or 8 years of age, and are considered to have finished their education at 12 or 14. The next step in life is marriage. Of course there are exceptions. Some parents wisely leave their children at school, or direct their instruction at home, till they are 17 or 18 years of age, and others send their girls along but usually, with the exception of one or two accomplishments, such as French or music, the education of women is neglected, and this neglect affects the whole tone of society. It does not change the general truth of this statement that there are Brazilian ladies who would be recognized in any society as women of the highest culture and intelligence; but they are the exceptions, as they inevitably are, even under the present system of instruction, and they feel its influence upon their social position only the more keenly. Indeed, many of the women we have known most here have studied in secret. Their existence is one of repression and restraint. She can not go out of her house, except under certain conditions, without a chaperon. Her education leaves her wholly ignorant of the most common topics of conversation. She has not even a considerable knowledge of French or music. The world of books is closed to her, for the Portuguese literature into which she is almost forbidden to look, and that of other languages she rarely encounters. She has little of the intellectual activity, therefore, nothing of that of others, and she is hardly aware that there are religious faith except the nominal one of the Church. She has, probably never heard of the Reformation, and does she dream that there is a single thought surging in the world outside? Their aunts-maids are as ignorant as the mothers, and the nieces grow up in the same ignorance.

Among my own acquaintance never such sad lives as became known to me there—lives deprived of healthy, stimulating happiness, and even of the autonomous, a negative suffering, but its source, it is true, in the absence of any positive evil, but all the more deplored because so stagnant and inactive.—Journey in Brazil.

How to Save Boys.

Women who have passed over a year dread the demoralizing influence of associates, ought to understand the nature of young manhood. It is easily restless. It is disturbed by vague ambitions, by thirst for adventure, by excitement, by any possible excuse to break the old, fold ways. If you, mothers, rear your sons so that their homes are associated with happiness, and that you will be sure to throw them in society that in some measure engage the best of their hearts. They go to the public schools at first for love of higher very few people in the taste of liquor—they go for the sake of being with companions they find there, which they dislikes so much to repress the affection and fondness in their breasts. So then, that their homes compete with public places in attractiveness, and your thinks by any means and light fires at night. Illuminate your home. Hang pictures upon your walls. Let books and newspapers upon the tables. Have music and entertaining games. Banish clouds of dullness and apathy, that have so long ruled in households, and bring in mirth and cheers. Invent occupations for your sons. Stimulate their ambitions by worthy directions. While you keep home their delight, fill them with higher purposes than mere pleasure. Whether they shall pass boyhood and enter upon manhood with refined tastes and noble ambitions depends on you. Believe it possible that, with early and right means, a mother may have more control over the destiny of her boys than any other influence whatever.—Appleton's Journal.

The managers of the Ionia prison recently attempted to so construe a statute regulating that institution that they would force contractors to pay a price for convict labor sufficient to make the prison self supporting, but Auditor General Stevens overruled their construction and published the correspondence, thus giving the whole thing away after the competing firm had filed a bid high enough to cover the deficiency, but before the contract had been signed. The firm took advantage of the ruling of the auditor general, withdrew their bid, and the state is the loser to a large amount. Affairs About Home.

Rev. G. Daniels is in town for a brief visit.

E. H. Whitney, of Lansing, was in town yesterday.

The new Congregational church is nearly enclosed.

Miss Florence Cole went to Cross Village last Saturday.

Rev. Peter Gallagher, of St. James, was in town this week.

The storm on the lake some what reduces the shipments this week.

L. L. Carr is building an addition to his boat and vegetable store.

A. D. Cruickshank arrived home from Lansing last Saturday night.

Read the announcement of the Detroit Free Press in another column.

The disabled propeller Fountain City has been taken to Detroit for repairs.

The line card of the G. R. & I. railroad will be found in another part of the paper.

E. B. Lapham and wife stopped in Kalkaska a few days on their way to Rockford.

Kalkaska is just completing a building 22 by 60 for manufacturing purposes, 12,200 feet.

The propeller Fountain City was disabled off Cheboygan on her last trip to Buffalo.

Messrs. F. A. Scandling and L. B. Pearl, of Norwood, were among our callers last Saturday.

The firemen's ball last Thursday evening is reported to have been a very enjoyable affair.

The Gazelle is making quick time now a days, frequently getting back an hour ahead of time.

An addition is being made to J. F. Wood & Co's. harness shop, to accommodate their increasing business.

A new Boynton furnace has been erected for the M. E. church, and will be put in place in a few days.

A child of Mr. Nowlan, three miles south of town, was buried on Monday, Rev. J. T. Iddings officiating.

Mrs. W. J. Bradley has a business card in this paper. When in want of anything in her line give her a call.

Services at the M. E. church Sunday morning at 10:30; Sunday school at 12:30; evening service at 7 o'clock.

The bids for removing the wrecked schooner Parsons were all rejected, and the work is to be advertised again.

The timber and rubbish opposite the Fountain City house has been removed, and the place much improved in appearance.

The Charlevoix JOURNAL improves with each issue. Business men in that town should do more advertising in it.—Elk Rapids Progress.

The Detroit Free Press should be read by every body who desire to keep thoroughly posted in the affairs of the world. Weekly $1.00 per year, eight pages.

During the fog last Wednesday night the barge John Orr got aground while trying to get into the harbor, and became disabled in some part of her machinery. The next day the tugs pulled her off and towed her up to Detroit.

Piles have been driven for the planing mill dock, and work has been commenced on the foundation walls for the building. It is to be pushed as fast as possible.

We have been promised the particulars of the "sail haul" on Mr. Spaulding's farm in Norwood, as soon as its quality and probable quantity is decided. It is evidently a big thing for Mr. Spaulding.

The Charlevoix JOURNAL seems to grow better with each issue. The merchants of the place should not allow its politics to prevent them from liberally supporting the paper. Manistee Herald.

The JOURNAL had an interesting paper in its last issue on "Charlevoix, its business, advantages, resorts, and surroundings." We know of no town anywhere, that nature has done so much for as it has Charlevoix.—Elk Rapids Progress.

Notice has been given by order of the light-house board that a steam whistle will be sounded at Wango-chance light station during thick and foggy weather, giving blasts of five seconds at intervals of twenty-five seconds.

W. E. Scandler & Co., of Detroit, have been making a canvass of Charlevoix during the past week for a business directory of northern and eastern Michigan, particularly the towns along the line of the G. R. & I. and F. & P. M. railroads, to be issued about February first.

As the season is not over we can only give a portion of the shipments made from this place. So far this season the shipments are as follows: Lumber 3,000,000 feet, mostly of lime 1,000,000 pounds, alcohol 17,000 gallons, iron 10,000 tons. Receipts: Limestone 1,500 tons, ore 25,000 tons.—Elk Rapids Progress.

The schooner Experiment owned by D. W. Morton, of St. Joseph, laden with iron ore, went ashore at Saugatuck, last week. A tug and lighter have since been at work trying to save her, but at last accounts she was being stripped, and will probably be abandoned as a total loss.

The Detroit Free Press says that Cleveland tugs have so little to do that they tow each other around the river for amusement. The James Amadons and American Eagle had a pulling trial a few days ago in which the latter was worsted. The latter, it is to be remembered was here a few weeks ago, but was evidently not satisfied with the business.

There is a wood engraver at Charlevoix, Mich., finding fame and fortune by staying there. His work shows that he has talent of a high order and if opportunity offers he will no doubt be turned into rank in some large city.—Detroit Post. Which probably refers to Mr. F. S. Blanchard, the engraver of the birds' eye views of Charlevoix, to another part of this paper. Mr. B. has shown us samples of his work on copper plate, and on jewelry and silverware, all that is demanded by the above item is fully sustained.

Just as we go to press we learn that a horrible accident occurred at Ironton last night. The facts as near as we can learn are that three young men brother-in-law passed through town yesterday en route for South Arm, where they intended working in the woods. On their way they stopped at Ironton and while going through the furnace one of the boys fell from a car on the railroad and had breaking his neck, causing instant death. The body will pass through town to-day on its way to Petoskey from this county, where some relatives reside.

You may depend upon it that if the publisher of the JOURNAL in northern Michigan does his work satisfactorily he will find enough to do at home without scouring the country in search of job work. Charlevoix is one of those fellows who run around from town to town in search of customers can never find any at home because they are dangerous, and no one who knows them will trust their work in their hands. We say let every town in northern Michigan organize its own printers and help them live. It is perfectly natural for people to look to their home printers for puffs and it ought to be natural for them to give them all the support in their power.—Boyne Statesman.

Mr. Blanchard informs us that in working the details of the view of Charlevoix, he took the large lithograph, marked in new buildings and improvements, had it reduced by photography to the size desired, and then transferred the design to the block of wood with a pencil. This last is a slow and tedious work, and in the manner in which it was done shows the artist to be in possession of a good stock of patience, as well as other very desirable qualities. We have been shown letters from professional engravers, praising his work, and offering desirable situations; he would go to the city. One piece of work received special mention in Scribner's magazine, at a time when they were offering prizes for specimens of wood engraving. On the whole his work is well done, and we have no doubt he would easily find a place "over the top" if he chose to follow the business.

J. Milo Eaton is agent for a mutual sickness and accident society, which provides an indemnity against loss of time in case of sickness or accident. Its hazards are divided into classes, the preferred class receiving $15 per week, ordinary $12.50, medium $10, hazardous $7.50, extra hazardous $5.00, and ladies' $5.00. To become a member of the society, an admission fee of four dollars, and an assessment of one dollar is required with the application. After admission, an assessment of one dollar for men and fifty cents for ladies is made on the first of every month. This assessment covers all the expenses and benefits of the society. Members are assessed to provide only for accidental injuries and sickness, and whenever the accumulation of funds are equal to two assessments upon each member, no assessment will be required for the next month. All indemnity claims are to be paid upon receipt of sufficient proof, that being the time when assistance is most needed. Any further information desired will be furnished by the agent.

"Holy Island."

Thirty years ago this island boasted in the south arm of Pine lake, a few miles above Ironton, was selected as a sort of picnic ground, and an annual feast was held there, in the latter part of summer. The remains of an arch or stone oven in which meat was roasted can be found to day, in excellent condition considering age, on the west side of the island, a few feet above the lake. This island was probably selected on account of its excellent location and beautiful surroundings, as no finer place for such a purpose can be found in this whole region, and during the summer season now parties of resorters go there for a day of pleasure, and never fail to find it.

It is perhaps well known that Col. O. F. Wisner, of this place, and Mr. Nelson Daniels of Waccousta, Clinton county, are now joint owners of the island. It contains eleven acres, and they have had it platted into 52 lots, with a street through the center, 80 rods long and 30 feet wide, each lot having a frontage of 101 feet on this street, and running back to the lake. There is room on the beach for an ocean front walk around the island, which will probably be built at an early date. This plat has been made with special reference to the accommodation of the modern resorter, and it is the hope of the owners to get a good start next year before the close of another summer.

Ten lots have been reserved near the center of the island for a club house and surroundings, and a pier extending to deep water is to be built on the east side. The price of the lots runs from $25 to $100, and several have already been spoken for. When the improvements are completed it will make a handsome place to spend a pleasant season.

Evergreens and hardwood timber make beautiful surroundings, and trees grow in abundance on the island.

THE KITCHEN FRACAS.

BY THOMAS DUNN ENGLISH.

Said the Poker at the jamb to the Kettle on the hobs:
"Silly cuss!
While I labor at my hot and grimy job
You do nothing more than sit content and sing.
While with dirty coals I mull you,
Those your thoughts about getting full;
Or you're busy as a general at dream,
With your nose the steady drooling stream.
I despise a tea-and-toast sot so!
Ah! if I were only not
But in this kitchen drudgery
Most don't wish to stay.
Here's not spoon it, what an opportunity she has!
Just I'll strike, I like!"
Said the discontented Poker to the jamb.

Said the Kettle on the hob to the Poker at the jamb:
"Crusty thing!
Will the engineer like being hustled I am
Or, to give the matter candid, prosaic I sing
While I natter, I'm not idle,
Never grumbling, tuneful I purr,
Thus you fill my mind and heart,
Love, culture, with sad I comfort;
Oh, I'm the cook's friend!
Active sent, that's my kind.
All I know, more to come,
Singing, I'm as cool as a bee,
Nerve, I'm sure he will agree as to the job
Yet may strike, I'm mine."
Said the Poker, and took up his job at the hob.

Said the Mantelpiece Timepiece to the parlor-maid below:
"Silly cuss!
Do you really fancy, when you engage so,
That I care a copper for your mistress's whims?
In a vast lethargy I'm plunged,
Incessantly, each hour ever,
I'm stricken at her call,
Or wake or sleep, I'm the same,
Forever, and never varied
Warning as to the time,
Tapers and lights I'm the boss,
Yours, in fact, is but a menial's duty,
Mine is the office of a gentleman."
Said the Mantelpiece Timepiece to the parlor-maid below.

Then the Poker at the jamb and the Kettle on the hob
Were struck with admiration
At the lofty style of the Timepiece,
And they ceased their jarring,
And they ceased their jarring,
And they ceased their jarring

At last we are out of the woods. After the first of February next we are to receive two mails daily from the south and north, while the route between this place and Charlevoix has been increased from a tri-weekly to a daily, and a semi-weekly from here to Horton Bay and Ludington. Good enough for us.—Statesman.

The railroad company are thinking quite strongly of running the chair car on day trains and the sleepers on night trains to Traverse City, instead of up on the main line, through here and on to Mackinaw. The reason for this is that the greater part of the patronage received by these cars comes off of that line.—Petoskey Democrat.

One day last week L. John A. Mitchell is just finishing up his second survey for the proposed Ludington harbor of refuge under orders from Washington. That Ludington is to have a harbor of refuge is virtually settled, and the only difference that may be made in regard to the matter, is in regard to the plans and amount of appropriation. The Ludington petition called for improvements which would cost $1,500,000, and this amount seemed too large by the department, yet the amount of $250,000 is now spoken of to complete the proposed improvement.—Ludington Telegraph.

It is generally understood that the Michigan Central people have vainly tried for one or two seasons to make some arrangements for exchange tickets with the G. R. & I. management. Perhaps that will account for the report that a corps of engineers will this week commence a survey from some point on their line into Petoskey. Whether that be the reason or not, the report is certainly well founded, and the survey is certainly being made. Record.

Last Saturday morning a Star was discovered approaching our town, of which we are sure astronomers have taken no note (the Star, not the town), and though it does not excel in brilliancy the famous north star so dear to the heart of the mariner, yet to us it is a star of the first magnitude, as our town is included in its orbit. Long may it twinkle on the bosom of Pine Lake and prove a source of pleasure and profit to her brave captain and his patrons.—Statesman.

The Michigan Central railroad company have made preparations for safe transportation across the straits this winter on the Mackinaw division by improving and greatly strengthening the transfer Algomah, which has but recently returned from Detroit, where she has been in dock for some time undergoing extensive repairs. The heavy iron plate with which she was encased originally was, during the terribly severe weather of last winter, discovered to be too light for service, and much of the damage she sustained was due mainly to this cause. This season she is fitted with much heavier armor and her engineers express their confidence in her ability to navigate in the severest weather.—Bay City Press.

The amount of the shortage in the accounts of Elias Palmer, the discounting county treasurer, is estimated at $1,254.57. This amount his bondsmen are compelled to make good, and the county will lose nothing. No word has been heard of Mr. Palmer, and his whereabouts is a matter of conjecture. Although Mr. Palmer has disgraced himself and those who trusted in him, we cannot help feeling compassionate towards him. Of a plaintive and accommodating disposition, he has been lead into transactions that have proven his ruin. The prime cause of his downfall was the wine cup. And the same causes which led to his ruin have been, are now, and will be the ruin of thousands of good men.—Independent.

A hundred men or more are still at work on the asylum. Before winter the entire foundation walls will be laid, and for two thirds the length of the building the brick work of the first story is well advanced. But little more brick work will be done this season, the entire force being put upon the completion of the stone foundation work at the south end. This is already laid out and well defined, and the stone gang now begins to show what it will be when completed. As far as the work has gone both the brick and stone work make a very handsome appearance. There will be no handsomer fixed brick building in the state than this, made as it is from Grand Traverse brick, manufactured within three miles of the asylum grounds. Should the weather remain as fine as now, for three or four weeks longer, the season's work will be completed in a most satisfactory manner. Another year will complete the walls and the roof.—Grand Traverse Herald.

Waugoshance Light.

The last of the working party employed in repairing the light-house and erecting a fog signal house at Waugoshance Pier, Straits of Mackinac, have arrived in Detroit, having been on the pier two months. There were thirty-nine men in all employed at the work, though not all for the whole time.

This pier is on the most exposed point on the whole lakes, a southwest wind throwing spray twenty feet over the lantern which is about ninety feet above the lake. In freezing weather the ice envelops the whole pier and in winter the only thing visible is a great mound of ice, with nothing but the upper half of the tower in sight, the house, pier and boat house being covered. The action of the ice cut into the brick work throwing down large pieces of mason work, and by crushing in the crib threatened the distruction of the structure. Sixteen years ago the foundation was renewed by sinking a caisson and building up with cut stone from fifteen feet above the lake. On this was built the dwelling house. The old pier, 100 feet square and ten feet high, still surrounds the stone work, though a few seasons will see the last of it so hassened that it strikes against the stone work in a heavy sea.

It was decided to repair the tower and dwelling by building a casing of three-eighth inch boiler iron around the whole, leaving space enough for holding on the rivets and filling the space with concrete. The job was done by contract, the bids being opened July 1, the Buhl Iron Works being the lowest bidder at $23,000. Accurate measurements were taken and the sheets of the boiler plate were all punched and bent at the shop in this city. There were about 24,000 holes punched, only four of which had to be repunched, at the pier.

The materials used in the job were 136,000 pounds of iron, 120 barrels of patent cement 350 barrels of sand, 300 pounds of stone, 20,000 brick, fifty barrels of lime, two boilers 42x12, two fog signals, engines 4x6, with all the valves, pumps, pipes, whistles and other tools and appliances for erecting the work, beside the large amount of provisions consumed by the men. The difficulties of the work were great, every rain or heavy sea driving the men from the pier, and as the scaffolds were sixty feet high, work could not be carried on in a high wind. At one time the weather was so bad that two weeks elapsed during which no communication could be had with the shore a mile and a half distant, from which sand and stone were obtained, and no mail or materials could be brought from Mackinaw. But in spite of these obstacles and a large amount of sickness on the pier, six men having to be sent home on that account, the job is at last completed three weeks before the specified time. The fog signal house is of three-eighths boiler iron, tightly riveted and calked. It is in a radius of twenty feet, the center of which is the tower, being fifteen feet wide and two-thirds of a circle, the coal bunpers occupying the corners.

The whole structure is painted with a coating of brown mineral paint. The boiler iron casing of the tower is sixty-two feet high from the stone foundation. The fog signals are duplication with boilers set in brick work. They are so arranged that they make two blasts of about four seconds duration in a minute. The whistles are ten inches in diameter, a duplicate of those used on the lake. The fog bell which was heretofore used, has been removed. It would seem that the light-house on this more exposed situation was now completed for generations, as nothing but an earthquake or tornado can effect it, and it would be safe to give the light-house the odds against an average tornado.—Detroit Free Press.

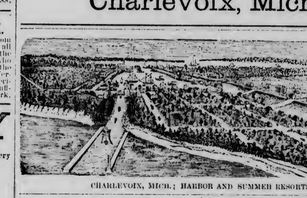
Charlevoix, Mich.



CHARLEVOIX, MICH.: HARBOR AND SUMMER RESORTS.

Charlevoix, the county seat of Charlevoix county, is a flourishing village of about 1,500 inhabitants situated on the high bluffs overlooking Lake Michigan, between Round lake and Lake Michigan, and on both banks of Pine river, which forms the connecting link between Lake Michigan and the inland lakes, and is the key to the whole Pine lake region with nearly eighty miles of shore line. The citizens are justly proud of their town, and manifest a commendable spirit of enterprise and liberality. A writer, speaking from eight years acquaintance with the place, has said that the intellectual and moral standard of Charlevoix people is superior to any place of its size he has ever known. There are about ninety business firms here, representing nearly all branches. A few more, we are looking, which could be added, and probably will at no distant day. Some branches are represented by a single firm, and others would make closer competition, more activity, and better satisfaction. And this competition would be to some as the village grows.

The channel between Lake Michigan and Round lake is five feet wide, and has a depth of fifty feet in full length. This gives us a harbor by land-locked harbor where vessels may ride in safety during the severest storms. Between Round lake and Lake Michigan the channel is slightly less, but still sufficient for the up-lake traffic.

The following industries are not represented here, and we should like to see a part or all of them started:

A dairyman could find immediate sale for the milk of several cows, if delivered at the door regularly and promptly.

A crockery baker would get all the trade, for the best crockery we get here are stale when compared with fresh.

All in want of bonbonnieres or any kind of materials cutting are obliged to send outside.

Among the industries requiring hardwood timber which we have in abundance near at hand that might be successful here are the manufacture of chairs, agricultural implements, and farm wagons.

Handles of all kinds, and wooden bowls could be made here as economically as anywhere.

THE RESORTS.

Between Round lake and Pine lake and south of the main channel which connects them, is located the Charlevoix summer resort. The grounds of the resort comprise about 75 acres, and rise by three natural and well-defined terraces from Pine lake. The two lower terraces are sufficiently wide for cottage lots, with a broad walk in front, while the upper terrace stretches far away in a level platean, from which glimpses of Lake Michigan are obtained. More than half the tract is cleared land, other parts being thickly wooded, and the portion farthest from the water being covered with heavy timber, while in the rear of the whole the dense woods extend to some distance. A handsome hotel the Belvedere house, has been erected on an eligible site, from which a charming view of the lake waters reaching far to the southeast is obtained. A number of beautiful cottages also stand upon terraces overlooking the lake. A music hall seats feet and a bowling alley 80 feet long, have been built and numerous improvements made. The company owning this resort was organized on the first day of May, 1874, under the laws of Michigan.

Directly opposite the Charlevoix resort is the Chicago resort, founded by a stock company of wealthy Chicago gentlemen for a summer retreat for the families and friends. An elegant club house, a large hotel, several fine cottages have already been built and numerous improvements made.

As a resort Charlevoix has the superiority of lake breezes from both waters, the winds which commonly prevail in Michigan summer has the advantage of the landscape surroundings are those of lake, one of the prettiest sheets of water in this respect it could scarcely be improved. Nature has provided every facility for recreation and amusement, including boating and fishing, and the numerous resorts make the most of their facilities.

PINE LAKE.

One of the loveliest of all the numerous lakes that adorn this fair northern land is Pine lake. It stretches east and west three miles. About five miles east it widens out, extending as its name implies, for the distance of some 12 miles. Its shores are covered with a dense growth of the famous trout stream, Prof. Winchell gave the following graphic description of Pine lake "From the south the lake, stretches the placid, sunlit surface of the water, its white and pebbly shores, the eastern hills in all their sinuosities. The verdant ridges rising side from the shining shore line, while in their enclosed embrace, the hill-tops bubble up in rapid succession the retiring landscape, till hill, and green, purple and blue, dissolve into the blended lines of the distant horizon."

AROUND THE COUNTY.

The surface of the county is rolling, and in some parts decidedly hilly, but watered and is generally considered remarkable spring brooks of the purest. There is some available water power on the Jordan and Boyne river, but the county varies from a light sandy to a heavy clay with calcareous matter. The soil is varied a nature as that of the whole state, but, generally pays for the labor bestowed upon it. The principal timber is found in great abundance throughout the county. THE JOURNAL

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

THE fashionable society of New York is in mourning because Mrs. Bonanza Mackay is to remain in Paris another winter, instead of coming there as promised. The latest news of Mrs. Mackay is that she has rented two boxes at the Theater Italien for the season at the moderate price of $40,000.

JONATHAN C. BOWERS, who recently died poor and friendless in the Cleveland Ohio city infirmary, at the age of 79 years, was twice worth $100,000, it is said, and lost both fortunes in real estate speculations. Among his few effects was found a copy of Will Carleton's poem, "Over the Hill to the Poorhouse."

JOHN LEWIN, of Yarmouth, England, says the London Athenæum, has had the inscription over the tomb of the grandfather of Abraham Lincoln, at Norwich, photographed for friends of the family. The inscription is as follows: "In memory of Mr. Abraham Lincolne, of this parish, who died July 13, 1783, aged 74 years; and Hannah, his daughter, who died September 23, 1760, aged 6 years.

From Thee, great God, we spring, to Thee we bend:
Path, motive, guide, original, and end."

F. R. BAETER, owner of Longfellow and Ten Broeck, said a few days ago: "Longfellow is now 16 years old and Ten Broeck 12. I always keep a guard over them both night and day. I have been offered $50,000 for Longfellow, but I wouldn't sell him for $100,000, nor would I sell Ten Broeck for the same money. I will keep them as long a they live or until I die. I am not married, but I have some poor kin down in Woodford county who would like to have them."

CAVEATE earthenware should never be used for domestic purposes. It is a safe rule in good housekeeping to break any fractured stoneware to pieces and render them quite unfitted for any employment as utensils. In a paper read before the Academy of Science at Paris, M. E. Peyresson demonstrated very clearly how the germs of cholera, typhoid fever and similar diseases may be preserved and communicated by even the slightest crack or fissure, which may be caused by very trifling accidents to crockery and kitchen.

TWO YEARS ago two Cincinnati politicians found on their beat a little black dog with one of its legs broken and unable to walk. They took the animal to the station and splinted up the broken limb, and in a few days he was all right again. Ever since then the dog has clung to the officers, running with them on their rounds all night long and taking lunch with them. During the day he puts up at a shoemaker's shop on the floor, but when darkness comes on he starts out and soon finds his friends, and no knows them until morning.

BUTLER, the deceased lunatican, was very fond of cakes. Speaking of his shoe and pace clique player, he says: "The slowness of some is hard to bear, but the slowness of incapacity is intolerable." His opinion of one of the lesser stars was this couched: "He is no pedigree. He charges just about the leaves of." If these specimens of caustic and meaning repartee! The bodies of a knight stronger than he can pile." It could not two qualities were essential to a good chess player, the memories and a faculty to calculate it. It was the same sort of gift that a pianist or a landscape painter possessed, and was no criterion at all of intellectual capacity.

THERE is a well-defined and growing belief that the timber supply of the United States is soon to succumb to the saw mill, and those who have thought the matter at all must feel sorry or two years before will see all our great forests sawed away. And now the agitation are at work to mathematically determine how long our coal supply will last. The is a very little cause for alarm in the part either. Nature has provided plenty of fuel for all time, and when the supply runs out the million now on hand have to go over and all of us will have gone to one or the other of two places, or neither of which is fitted on a basis for the progress of a people on the crossing to get out of the way.

NEW CONSTITUTIONAL machine ever invented has surpassed the cotton gin in value to the South. Another machine, the Allegheny mountain is which has not millions of acres of coal underlying its soil.

KATRINA and Sophia Schmidt have arrived at Castle Garden under peculiarly distressing circumstances. Their father came to America some months ago. Recently his wife, left in Germany, found herself unable to support her children, so she concluded to forward these twin—aged 6 and 9—to their father. She put them on board the ship, giving in charge of the older child, as she thought, a purse containing the name and address of the father. When the paper was inspected at New York it was found to be blank, the mother evidently having put in the wrong lot of paper. The case is complicated by the fact that the children do not know their father's first name, nor his whereabouts, except that he is "in America."

THE Lake Superior Sentinel says: Will Hendrick, while out fishing last week, near the head of the bay, captured a 170-pound deer, with large horns. The young dentist had no shooting-iron with him at the time; but, on seeing the animal enter the water, he cautiously pulled his little row-boat between his buckship and the shore and drove him out into the bay, where, after a hard and long spell of rowing, he managed to catch him. He hooked into the deer's neck with a couple of fish-hooks, and then with his fish-line he managed to steady the boat until he could lasso it, which he did by throwing the boat's painter over its horns. The buck was not to be lagged so easily, however, for he turned upon his pursuer, and a lively tussle was had. An old buck will fight hard at such a time. If there is any one who has any doubt in the matter, let him ask Hendrick. At one time he struck the boat a blow with his fore-feet which nearly capsized it. Will hung on to the rope like grim death, and by the dexterous use of an oar he finally knocked the buck out and brought him in.

MR. BRUCE, a New York farmer, had a great deal of faith in his fellow-men, but his feelings have received a shock. Four years ago a stranger with crippled hair and forbidding face applied to him for work. The man explained frankly that he was just from Sing Sing, where he had served a term for burglary, but wanted to lead an honest life. Mr. Bruce was pleased at this appearance of true repentance, and allowed him to remain on the farm, where he proved to be industrious and gave good satisfaction. After remaining three years he went South. A few days ago Mr. Bruce received a letter from him, written from Texas, in which, after saying that he had struck it rich in a North Texas town, he instructed his old employer to look in a certain place in his chimney, where he would find a package of jewelry which he might dispose of as he thought best. It had been taken from people on the streets. It explained, and could not be returned to the owners, as he did not know who they were. As the man had brought nothing with him from the prison, the horrified farmer can only suppose that his ounce called forth need unused himself by acting as pickpocket during his sojourn in prison. This is only reasonable, however, neighboring farms while in his employ. Many $1 and worth of rings, watches and other jewelry were found in the designated spot. No watching to have anything to do with the stolen property. Mr. Bruce hastened to ship it to the thief from whom it had come, under the condolences of his neighbors for having read his judgment, trusting the knave in thus disposing of what was not his own.

In the Mexican Capital.

News comes in the City of Mexico are surprised on finding so many of the conveniences common to large cities at home, such as the telephone, the electric light, a police force, and an excellent street car service. The electric fields are on the tops of from 100 to 200 feet, and the gas lamp posts. The police are far more soldierly than the average army of the country. They wear a blue flannel suit, the coat buttoned up and their cap has a covering of white, which, with the standing line of collar, reaches somewhere. In their belts on one side they carry a club, and on the other a large revolver. It so wishes to save a policeman he has only to go to the nearest corner, and he will surely find him standing there, for he has no beat to walk over. The speed at which street cars go is astonishing. They dash along as fast as mules can pull them, and as they approach a corner the driver puts on a loud whoop; but it is a very poor, comfortable, pressed brick house, well furnished, and worth, perhaps, $10,000. Beside having amassed much of her earnings in the support of her parents, Mrs. Dodson is and always has been fond of the good things of life, which each night.

GOSSIP FOR THE LADIES.

How Well She Knew Him.

Time sat alone—no matter where,
On this there's no need to care,
Each one knows the place he is there,
But as I say she was alone,
He knew her case and knew her pain,
And kissed her over and over,
And swore that he never left
So left a fond lover.
Then all alone, the sweet delight
He'd to confess he'd
She crept close to the Lover's side,
And gently to him said,
"I know what you mean by me,"
Then her lips a smile was set,
And pointed full at her eye,
"I know you don't love me!"
But no, can judge of that,
And then over her head in his,
The sweet lips of the maiden
Then he said "I'll be waiting hand
And kissed her on his head.

A Remarkable Case.

An old man was arraigned before an Arkansaw court for some trifling offense, and pressing the witnesses was an old woman, who, in giving her testimony, made such efforts to shield the old man that the Judge asked:

"Madam, have you known this man very long?"

"Yes, sir," the old woman replied, "I have known him a very long time. When I was a young girl this man used to visit me. In fact Judge, we were sweethearts," and she twisted her apron and looked down.

"Ah, I see;" the Judge replied, "used to be sweethearts, and think so much of each other you thought you did not marry each other then?"

"You are mistaken, Judge, for we did marry each other then, and have husband and wife now."

"Indeed;" the Judge exclaimed, "this is a remarkable case. Warn at the old fellow Mr. Officer. Arkansaw Traveler.

A Tired Woman's Epitaph.

"Yes," she sighed; "the world is hard, especially to the poor. I often think that the good people who enlarge work so tightly should know much of overwork." "Quite true," assented Mrs. Sotheran. "Poor Sarah Dempster's tender she looked down a neighboring tombstone, was of your opinion. Her epitaph, unlike those of most of us, paints life as it really was. If you never read it, it is worth your while to do so. The tombstone stood in a neglected corner of the churchyard, overgrown with nettles and long grasses, but its inscription was still legible:

Here lies a poor woman who always was tired,
Who lived in a house where help was required,
Her hours were long, her work was hard,
Till death released her poor heart.
She's where washing ain't done, nor sewing nor mending
Where cooking pots don't need scouring,
Where there's no dishes to wash, nor floors to sweep,
Where grates don't need blacking,
Where loaves don't have to be baked,
Where she'll be free from worry and toil,
And where all her days will be holidays.
But kissing no more, nor even a crumb
Will ever be eaten in that house.
Then she added, as she turned away:
"That may be the poetry," observed Mrs. Sotheran with unconscious asperity, "but it's true. The rest is nothing much worse than overwork."—James Fraser, in Leamington Spa Courier.

Some Dance Wall Pockets.

Of course, these pockets are for ornamentation more than use, yet you can show off pretty cards from them very nicely. For one kind take a flat fan, say six inches across at the widest part, with straight stick handle, modest value perhaps 5 cents. Tie around the handle about the middle, in a pretty bow, any shade of rubber you may wish, leaving short ends remember of a yard or No. 7 or 9 will do. Pin by these ribbons to the wall in a fluted way, of course, with fan part down. Across the lower half put a pocket of silk, shade to harmonize the bow. This pocket may be gathered on each side drawn across the fan, or it may be fitted plain over pasteboard the same shape as the fan, and a little cockle at then neatly finished at the edge with a small lower cord. In case it is a gathered pocket, run a piece of pasteboard shape and finished in the same manner as the plain one. Some persons use pasteboard in each, but I think on one or other side and at the point, put a ribbon bow, leaving the loops long enough to hang it up with. This pocket is much larger, of course, than the other two mentioned.—Cleveland Herald.

Mrs. Clemmer Hudson.

Next to Mrs. Southworth, Mrs. Clemmer Hudson has probably earned more money by writing than any other novelist in Washington. All, or nearly all, of her money has been made from her letters to the New York Independent and the Brooklyn Argus, for, though none of her books have been even specious failures, none of them ever created any special sensation in the literary world, and her remuneration from them has been small. She has earned as much as $6,000 a year, but her regular income is by no means so great as that. Like Mrs. Southworth, Mrs. Clemmer Hudson has bought in installments to stay for her every penny she owns; but it is a very roomy, comfortable, pressed brick house, well furnished, and worth, perhaps, $10,000. Beside having examined much of her earnings in the support of her parents, Mrs. Dodson is and always has been fond of the good things of life, which each night.

reconcile good livers to the manifold ills and drawbacks common to this vale of tears. She likes pretty brica-brac in her rooms, has a weakness for dining off fragile, expensive China, has her own carriage, clothes herself in silk attire and takes a real feminine delight in the dainty French bonnets, or confections, as the milliners call them, with which she crowns her fresh, matronly face. Her eyes are of that clear, porcelain blue rarely seen except in young children, and she likes to wear robes and bonnets of the same certain hue. If she has a back account it is not because she lacks generosity, for she is a deserful giver as well as a good liver. An old friend of Mrs. Clemmer Hudson, commenting upon the remarkable firmness and self-reliance of that lady's character, says she only developed those traits after scores of years of buffeting with the world and some hard struggles. "When she first began to write letters for the press, she would correct, re-write and ery over them, just like a nervous school-girl over her first compositions. I have known her to destroy a letter after it was all ready to post, just because she suddenly decided that it wasn't worth reading and consequently not worth printing."—Washington letter.

No Trouble in the Choir.

"I think you treated us very unkindly in saying that we had a fight in our choir," remarked a lady contralto, during the choir the religious editor placed for her and straightening her hat. "You hurt the feelings of everybody, and I don't see any good of it."

"But didn't you have a fight?" protested the religious editor. "Don't the tenor say the soprano don't know any more about music than a logarithm does about the doctrine of infant baptism?"

"I know that," conceded the contralto; "and he was right. She don't, but she is a cross-grained old maid, and the sooner we get rid of her the better."

"And didn't the bass take the soprano's side and hit the tenor on the nose?" continued the religious editor.

"I know he did," replied the contralto. "And he was all in the wrong. That tenor is perfectly lovely, and the soprano's mad because he was to sing a duet with me, but I don't see why you wanted to pitch into him. Why don't you say the soprano had been during with twenty-four for six months in spite of his being a married man. What did you want to put it all on the poor boy?"

"I didn't know anything about that," retorted the religious editor. "Somebody told me that the tenor took you to the church picnic, and that all the row grew out of the fact that the soprano could not ride in a buggy."

"So she did, the meddling old maid! It was none of her business. He didn't take her, and he don't likely to. We never would have had that choir row if all she got to picking her nose into everybody's business. Say, I wish that you would come out and state that the choir is perfectly harmonious, and the paper was mistaken in its report about the fight."

"Of course I will, if there is any truth in it," responded the religious editor, "is the difficulty all over?"

"It will be so soon as the tenor gets his hands on the organist. He has been giving his mouth a holiday and saying that the organist wants to get the soprano out so he can get another one who need rooming in the same church up in the country. As soon as I rubber you may wish, leaving short ends remember of a yard or No. 7 or 9 will do. Pin by these ribbons to the wall in a fluted way, of course, with fan part down. Across the lower half put a pocket of silk, shade to harmonize the bow. This pocket may be gathered on each side drawn across the fan, or it may be fitted plain over pasteboard the same shape as the fan, and a little cockle at then neatly finished at the edge with a small lower cord. In case it is a gathered pocket, run a piece of pasteboard shape and finished in the same manner as the plain one. Some persons use pasteboard in each, but I think on one or other side and at the point, put a ribbon bow, leaving the loops long enough to hang it up with. This pocket is much larger, of course, than the other two mentioned. Cleveland Herald.

Mrs. Clemmer Hudson.

Next to Mrs. Southworth, Mrs. Clemmer Hudson has probably earned more money by writing than any other novelist in Washington. All, or nearly all, of her money has been made from her letters to the New York Independent and the Brooklyn Argus, for, though none of her books have been even specious failures, none of them ever created any special sensation in the literary world, and her remuneration from them has been small. She has earned as much as $6,000 a year, but her regular income is by no means so great as that. Like Mrs. Southworth, Mrs. Clemmer Hudson has bought in installments to stay for her every penny she owns; but it is a very roomy, comfortable, pressed brick house, well furnished, and worth, perhaps, $10,000. Beside having examined much of her earnings in the support of her parents, Mrs. Dodson is and always has been fond of the good things of life, which each night.

ANGLO-SAXONS ABROAD.

The Careless American and the Dressed Englishman—Two Englishmen Lady and Her Saucy American Cousin.

[Robert Laird Collier.]

The American gentleman travels and walks and thinks in the same suit of clothes, and those of the older sort in the everlasting broadcloth. Much wear has made it shiny, too. He is also careless—that is, unpretending in his walk and bearing. Mind, an not describing my friends—as an meeting, but a great lot of Americans whom I am daily seeing in places. On the other hand, when an American affects dress he rarely does it. He makes a point of it. It centers his mind so much upon it that he lets the cut out of the bag and to the beholder: "This suit is the result of thought, not unconsidered."

The English gentleman is also well dressed. He is dressed unobtrusively, but he is dressed for the occasion, and this is certainly commendable. But, if that has been his only virtue, it is apparently coming to be so. For instance, two Chinese gentlemen, very sawdish, recently came to London and, in attempting to astonish with mothers, wives, cousins and sereants, rented a house; assumed the costume of the English gentleman; boasted that the highest nobles were their sworn brothers, and named Lindsays among their relations. A few days ago the two Chinese swells were arrested, and it has been discovered that they were great frauds; that their clothes were not their own; that their jewels were imitations, and that their boasted connections were accomplices. Shop-keepers had been swindled out of $50,000 beside private loans and money collected by false pretenses.

A pony got into Boston and up in a store in Worcester street, the other morning, and everybody stopped to see it. That part of Boston, for two or three blocks around his courtship, was really jammed. How to dislodge the pony was the question. There wasn't room in the multitude who didn't know how to get him, but every man declared some one else to try his particular plan. One fellow, however, climbed a tree and thought he would take the animal down gently, but teeth and nails were too much for him. Then it was proposed to knock him down with a brick, but some tender-hearted woman protested. He could not be shot, for there were policemen at hand to arrest anybody who might violate a corporation ordinance. A man climbed to the roof of a building and tried to drive the pony down with a pole, but he was quickly repulsed; and a like fate was that of another who went up with a bucket of carpeting to throw over the animal's head. Finally a ladder was sent up to the top of the tree, and in an unwary moment the coon deserted his branch and clung to the ladder, as affording better protection. The ladder was moved from the tree and gently lowered toward the ground, a strip of carpeting was thrown over the coon, and he was captured.

MR. TALMAGE intimates that "the dime sermon" will be between seven and eighteen minutes in length. This smacks much absenteeism. The people loathing the innovation.

THAT portion of Pennsylvania where Mr. Blaine passed his boyhood days is now being taken for his "early Years in Congress" at a rate which makes book agents dizzy. One Shoe has taken orders for 100 copies in a town ship having a population of 40. At the rate of fifty to every 100 population the anxious citizen will have the edition of 1,000,000 will easily satisfy the first demand.

IT is said that the results of the recent examination of women students at Cambridge, England, are satisfactory, they having obtained honors and two degrees. In the mathematical tripos, the Parnell, of fifteen College, occupied a position of wrangler. In the natural science tripos, five women students obtained degrees; in the moral science tripos, three; in the historical science tripos, four; and in the classical tripos twelve women students obtained honorable degrees or honors. All the young women had been prepared at Girton or Newnham Colleges.

AN English clergyman in Berkshire recently rebuked Sabbath-breaking in a way that some people might resent. The peaceful village was startled in the middle of his Sunday afternoon quiet by the loud and rapid tolling of the church bell for twenty minutes. The town crowd itself inside out trying to find out the matter. It was finally discovered that the rector while engaged in a pastoral visitation had been chilled by the sight of a lawn tennis party in the grounds of one of the principal houses in the parish, and he had taken this means to remind the other members of his flock of the imperatives of the fourth commandment.

PRESIDENT TANNER, of the Illinois College, says that Illinois is not rich enough to support two colleges, and that Illinois College will be between seven and eighteen minutes in length. This smacks much absenteeism. The people loathing the innovation

The Elections.

New York elects the democratic state ticket except secretary of state, by 40,000. Hendrex, dem., is elected mayor of New York city by a small majority. Brooklyn also elects a democratic mayor. The republicans claim the legislature.

Butler is defeated in Massachusetts by 9,000. The canvas has been very exciting, and the total vote is 30,000 in excess of any previous year. The legislature is republican.

Mahonism is repudiated in Virginia by 10,000. The democrats sweep everything, and have good working majorities in the legislature.

In Mississippi the election was quiet, with a sweeping democratic victory.

Abbett, dem., is elected governor of New Jersey by nearly 5,000, and the legislature is democratic.

Maryland elects a democratic governor by 6,000.

Pennsylvania is claimed by the republicans at 16,000.

Minnesota is republican as usual.

In Detroit the returns up to 3 o'clock a. m., give Grammond rep., 434 majority for mayor, and Snengerrep., about 800 for city clerk.

In Chicago, Shepard, dem., was elected judge of the superior court, and the entire democratic ticket is elected except one county commissioner.

Thanksgiving Proclamation.

In conformity with a time honored custom, endeared to us by many sacred associations, I, Josiah W. Begole, governor of the state of Michigan, do hereby appoint Thursday, the 27th day of November, 1883, as a day of public thanksgiving and praise to almighty God.

It seems proper that at the falling of the leaf, when the ripened fruits of labor are gathered, we should reverently pause, and from our hearthstones and temples of worship offer our grateful thanksgiving to the giver of every good gift for the blessings of the crowned year.

Industry and frugality have been rewarded; the interests of religion, temperance and education have been advanced; our marvelous increase in population and wealth has not affected the integrity of our free institutions; the sens indicted by civil war have been healed, and a growing sentiment of fraternal concord and loyalty to the flag prevails among all the states of our once imperiled union.

Let us observe this thanksgiving day with such social festivities and religious observances as tend to cement the ties of family and of friendship, and foster a spirit of brotherly kindness toward all men. Let it be a day for the exercise of the broadest charity in thought and deed, remembering the words of him who said: "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand, and caused the great seal of the state to be affixed at the city of Lansing, this first day of November, 1883.

JOSIAH W. BEGOLE, Governor.

By the governor:
HARRY A. CONANT,
Secretary of State.

"Hallowe'en" was celebrated by the students at Ann Arbor in a very boisterous manner. They had a collision with the police, and several of them had sore heads as a result. Among other devilries, they took a bronze statue of Ben. Franklin and painted it yellow and green.

Dorsey is sending large quantities of cattle from his ranch in New Mexico to New York, and has given $5,000 to a university in that territory. That Star Route bonanza was bigger than was reported. It seems to have left Dorsey with plenty of money, even after he had paid his lawyers and bought two juries.

Vast Railway Stations.

The centre of London will before long be turned into a collection of vast railway stations. From north to south, from east to west, there is but one desire on the part of a railway director—to increase the size of the terminus of his line. The enlargement of Euston Station has been brought prominently before the public through the destruction of an open piece of ground adjoining the Hampstead road. The accommodation at Liverpool street has already been pronounced insufficient for the traffic on a bank holiday. A new bridge across the Thames and a new station are contemplated by the managers of the Chatham and Dover Railway, and, if their attempt to obtain a fresh outlet for the Londoner through Croydon to Surrey and Sussex should prove successful, they will be urgently required at once. At Waterloo station the work of patching and increasing has been recommended after the briefest of intermissions, and within a short time 55,000 square feet will have been added to one of the most inconvenient stations in London.—Pall Mall Gazette.

A Rabbit with Snow Shoes On.

The snowshoe rabbit is a small animal that has exceedingly-large hind feet, the toes of which are covered with long, fine hair. This peculiar formation enables the creature to travel, in search of food over the lightest snow without sinking. The snowshoe rabbits are a little smaller than the cottontail rabbits of the Eastern States. They are excellent eating, after you have lived on rusty bacon for a few weeks. I know of no more deceptive tracks than these animals make. Judging from the size the animal should weigh at least thirty pounds. It really weighs about two.—New York Sun.

The Daily Democrat from St Louis, Mich., J. V. Johnson, publisher, is our latest exchange. It is a neat little three-column folio, with an excellent local department, and an appearance of having come to stay. Good luck to you, J. V.

This may be a poor time of year to start a milk wagon, but we hear frequent demand for one. Those who have cows, have little more milk than they want themselves, and they who have no cows are compelled to do without milk.

The Charlevoix JOURNAL publishes a "cut" of the village in its last issue. The engraving was done by F. S. Blanchard, of that place, and is a credit to him, as the work is first-class and shows much natural ability and skill.—Mancelona Herald.

A judgment of $5,000 has been given against the city of Charlotte in the suit of Geo. E. Preston, for injuries resulting from a defective sidewalk. Our council should remember this, and avoid a similar suit by repairing broken and defective side and crosswalks. There are several places where a man's foot would go through, and throw him down, possibly breaking a leg.

At the M. E. church next Sunday morning the subject of discourse will be, "Will the American of the future acknowledge the religion of the Nazarine?" "Is liable religion on the decline?" Sunday school and evening service as usual.

The paint and oil for the new Congregational church was furnished by friends in Chicago, through the efforts of Mr. S. F. Gates, one of our popular summer-resorters. The gift amounted to over $100, and will be appreciated by the society.

Some people seem to think the young trees and shrubbery in the park are of no value, and frequently destroy what will require years to grow again. All this is wrong. That tract of land can be made very beautiful, and should be protected.

A late number of the Detroit Commercial Advertiser printed nearly a column for the benefit of Charlevoix, a large part of it being from the JOURNAL'S article. Other state papers are also helping along the work of advertising our resources and advantages.

There are two holes in the crosswalk near the JOURNAL office which needs attention before someone gets seriously hurt. A member of our family got her foot in one recently, causing her to fall, and in a dark night the injury might have been serious.

Arthur E. Martin who has been with E. A. Foote for some time, has about completed arrangments to move to Boyne City, where he will locate in his profession. Charlotte Leader. We welcome Mr. Martin to this country, and think he will soon be identified with the growth and development of that thriving village.

The fire department are preparing to give a dance and supper on thanksgiving night which will probably eclipse anything in that line of entertainment ever held in Charlevoix. It is to be an all night dance, and those who attend will probably get their money's worth, besides the credit of helping a worthy cause.

Arrangements have been made for warming the opera house, and Congregational services will be held there next Sunday morning and evening, and thereafter until the new church is completed. It is expected that Rev. W. R. Seaver, of Traverse City will preach next Sunday morning, and Rev. Leroy Warren, of Lansing, in the evening.

The following from an exchange will apply with equal force here: Almost every week we are asked, "why didn't you publish such and such a local item." Simply because we heard nothing about it until after the paper was printed. Some people are very close mouthed about such things, and yet they expect we will give all the news. "Consistency," etc.

This is conceded to be as good a wheat growing country as there is in northern Michigan. Mr. Al. Richardson, from 4½ acres of winter wheat, threshed 156 bushels, and from 12 acres of spring wheat 48 bushels; he also had on a piece of land 17 rods square, (or 1½ acres and 9 rods) 291 bushels of corn. Other farmers can make as good a showing. Why should not our town grow with such a farming country to support it? It will.—Eastport cor. Elk Rapids Progress.

The schooner Monitor, with ore for Cleveland ran ashore during the late storm near Manistique and went to pieces on Saturday. The tug Leviathan was sent to her relief, but returned to Cheboygan on Sunday and reported her all broken up. The crew are saving all they can, and will probably secure her entire outfit. The Monitor was owned by Capt. Riordan, of Buffalo, and valued at $12,500. There is an insurance of $5,000 in the Boston Marine and $2,500 in Crosby & Dimick's agency on the hull, and her cargo is also fully insured.

The schooner Ketchum went ashore near Gill's pier last Thursday, and the latest advices are that she will go to pieces. She was partially loaded with hardwood lumber belonging to Gill, and was bound to Milwaukee. Gill's pier is a lumber mill located on the Michigan shore of Lake Michigan, a few miles north of Leland, and abreast of the North Manitou island. The Ketchum was there loading lumber, and the heavy western winds made her position alongside the pier dangerous. She ran out a short distance from shore and cast anchor. The anchors did not hold, and she dragged on the beach. She was valued at $8,500, and insured for $4,000, cargo not insured.

A gentleman in this vicinity remarked the other day that he had cows and all the appurtenances necessary to deliver milk, and would do so as soon as he thought it would pay. Later on in the conversation he suggested that if anyone from the outside undertook to establish himself here, he would give him all the competition he could stand. This kind of "dog-in-the-manger" policy will ruin my town. If this sum starts a wagon first we will give him our patronage, but if he omits until a stranger comes here, and then tries to run him out, we will use all our influence to sustain the stranger. We represent but one family, but we know other families who want milk, and express similar sentiments.

FATAL STABBING.

The Murderer Still at Liberty.

Last Wednesday evening, Thomas Barrnes, second engineer of the propeller John Ohls, was stabbed in the abdomen, during an altercation in a saloon in Ironton. As near as we can learn, there had been some feeling between Mr. Barrnes and a Kentuckian who had made himself obnoxious about the boat, and the latter had been advised that he better keep off. On this evening he had just liquor enough to feel able to avenge the fancied insult, and took the first opportunity to plunge a knife into Barrnes' abdomen. The tug Rob. Stephenson was despatched to Charlevoix for a surgeon, but was detained some time by running aground near the channel between Round and Pine lakes. The tug was finally released, and returned to Ironton with Drs. Preston and Carlstein.

The doctors found the man with his bowels protruding, and somewhat strangulated. Anæsthetics were administered, the incision made larger, the intestines put back in their place, and the abdomen sewed up. The next day the patient was brought to the Bridge Street house, Charlevoix, and made as comfortable as possible. He was given careful attention by the physicians, but died yesterday after noon about 5 o'clock.

After the stabbing, Barrnes' friends gave the Kentuckian a terrible beating and bruising, but in the later excitement of getting a physician and caring for the wounded man, the villain escaped, and has not since been seen. It has been said that the bruises and gashes on his face and head will make him easily recognized for some time.

Historical Society.

The parlors of Senator Buttars were filled to overflowing last Tuesday evening at the meeting of the historical society. At the usual hour President John Nicholls called the society to order, and announced, as the first piece on the program, a piano solo, by Mrs. O. D. Wood. Mrs. C. P. Cook then read a carefully prepared paper on the causes leading to the American Revolution. The spirit pervading both the new world and the old in 1775 was ably depicted, and the steps in the conflict between the spirit of liberty pervading the American colonies and the spirit of tyranny characteristic of England, were concisely traced. After a short intermission the society were favored with a vocal duet with guitar accompaniment by Miss Loveday and Al. Washburne. Miss Dame, of Northport, being present was prevailed on to render a vocal solo which was thoroughly enjoyed and heartily applauded. Ed. Parmelee gave another of these illustrated lectures on American history which created much laughter. Miss Potter rendered very acceptably a recitation entitled "The Vision." Mr. Parmelee and Miss Essie Buttars closed the program with a vocal duet. All went away well pleased with the evening's entertainment. No business of importance was transacted. Mr. and Mrs. Byron See will entertain the society next week at their new house on State street.

Lake-Strip Wood-piling Contest.

Last June a bet of $50 a side was made between Richard Lake and W. S. Strip on the time required to put wood over the rail of a vessel from a dock or from the beach over a dock. Mr. Lake to load from the dock and Mr. Strip from the beach. Mr. Lake's wood was piled four tiers deep, and 50 cords were put on the schooner Lafayette by six men in 1:31; Mr. Strip's load four men to load, two teams and drivers, and two men besides the drivers to unload. He put 50 cords on the schooner Three Bells in 1:56. This left Mr. Lake the winner by 25 minutes. Messrs. Lane and Brown were judges. The contest was a exciting and was witnessed by over 50 citizens.

THE ORCHARD AND THE HEATH.

BY GEORGE MEREDITH.

I chanced upon an eerie walk to see
A troop of children through an orchard gate;
The boughs hung low, nor grace was slight;
They had but to lift hands or wait
For fruits to lift to me; fruits were all thick sky.

They shouted, running on from tree to tree,
And played the game the wind plays, on and noted.
'Twas visible last-like glee
Unsmutted, such a fountain's sound
Of laughter sparkled, patterns, rush on me.

I could have watched them till the daylight fled,
Their pretty heroic mimicries such a light of day.
A small one tumbling sang, very head-
The red boy comfort her consolatory
Seized on a branch and thumped down apples red.

The tiny creature shedding through green grass,
And lavishing with her feet and voice among
Fresh apples, called a little lass.
Over as over breeze ripples hung;
Thus slight I saw, and passed as all can pass.

My footpath left the pleasant farms and lanes,
Soil overgave smoke, straight cocks across, say
To dismal
Where the blackberries of the swains,
As grim as earth I walked in her haunts
And hut-like coal-heaps, ruinous ruins.

Still in my view my boyish fancy stayed,
When, with a sound resembling thunder sunshed
Mine shafts, the doomed children's sport of dread,
Beneath, beside, but all unheard.
Their clamor, and take up the hooted squeaked.

Here, too, never mayest children quite to mean
A new young coming; nearby cranks, white
I said,
In many echoed toes they ran,
Like mice rushed on the heath.
Dispersed by loud repeats, cheeks, and drinking-cans.

Three girls, with sunbrown like a coal as sun
Tipped unbeseen by in water their letting slid
Deep in the rocks unsought.
Lean, sun-
A starving cur, mistook by the one best knee.

They raced; their hurliers yelled them on, and large
In vain to lift w, but now the new-sacked
Wood things, and for the hireling spoke
Of perverted, to pile thin a thief.
All robed in wool. Small forms grey-olive smoke.

Keen on the darkened air a rooster's gleam
The neighbouring crowing, all, or tribe that,
Too, on the dwelling-up on trees;
A dog upheld in cool I saw
And on the lane were with the living stream.

I turned and basked on heaven awhile, where now
The
The green-faced sunset, bounded with red bright,
Even as light after a sultry longer,
And seemed to me typical of the heart
Fair youth with sacrifice advance to-day
And after vows.

HER LAST CONFESSION.

BY G. P. LATHROP.

A mill without water, wind or steam to drive it—what a curious thing! Yet, there it stood, and had stood for many a year, and no one could tell the reason, though you could not tell to see that there must be some story belonging to the place.

Strangers coming to Nantucket sometimes asked about it, but as they could find out next to nothing, they soon ceased to trouble themselves with the question. The mill-pond had gotten very low, the water had all gone out with a rush, and the stream was scattered in new channels or was lost in the sandy soil.

The loss came upon old Humphrey Gurton, the miller, at a time when he could not afford to rebuild. He was then forty-five, and had always been a hard worker. People said that his loss made him crazy, for he refused to declare that he either could never have escaped if some one had not opened the waste-pipe in the dam; and he vowed vengeance against the person who had ruined him out of mere malice.

Finally the idea worked upon him so that he used to go about the streets with a pistol in his hand.

"Looking for my unknown enemy," he said.

The town-people were easy-going, and since Gurton had always been one of the kindest men alive, and never had an enemy in the place, they didn't dream of harm coming from his threats.

But one day, about four years after the accident, he met John Bartow, and in a sudden fury shot him dead.

The was the man that did it?" cried old Humphrey, with insane satisfaction. "Bartow is the enemy I have been looking for. I told you I would kill him when I found him, and now I've done it."

When this tragedy occurred, everybody saw that Gurton had become a maniac past cure, for Bartow was one of his best friends, and, in fact, Bartow's daughter Nelly, then 18, was engaged to marry old Humphrey's son Will, one of the finest fellows on the island.

The poor miller was carried away to the madhouse, to an asylum for the insane, and there he died.

A great change had come over Nelly since the miller's ruin. She was only a girl of 15 at the time; but she and Will Gurton had even then promised to marry each other when they should grow up.

The engagement was not broken, though Will came to her when he found his father was ruined, and told her that she would have to marry a poor man if she took him now.

"Still," he said, "I am only 18, and if you will be true to me when we are older, Nelly, I may get to be well off by the time we are married. Only I must go as a sailor, now, for father has no money for me, as he expected to have, I must trust to the sea, and work my own way up."

"Oh, Will," said the girl, weeping, "you know I shall love you always, and it doesn't make any difference about the mill. And I shall keep my promise, if you still want me. But I am not good enough. No, Will, I am not good enough."

At this the young fellow grew a little angry. "Never say that again, Nelly," he commanded her. "I don't know what you mean when you call yourself not good enough."

But they soon came to an understanding again, and Will kissed her, and Nelly tried to look bright once more, and the promise was renewed.

The two children had already confided this promise to their parents, and, though it was looked upon as premature, it had received their approval.

But the change in Nelly, of which I have spoken, was this, that, while before she had been one of the merriest, romping girls in the town, always full of fun and tricksiness, she now became very serious and almost melancholy.

"Why, dear me, Nelly," her father would often say to her, "what is my little girl thinking about? Has anyone done aught to hurt you?"

"No, father," Nelly would answer, very briefly. And then she would go away, as if to avoid being questioned.

When she grew older, Mr. Bartow thought perhaps she was grieving about Will, seeing how the childish attachment was ripening into womanly love.

"I know it is hard," he once said to her, "to think how different Will's lot would have been if he had had the mill; but don't fix your mind on that, my child. You have got a brave fellow, and he is sure to do well for you."

"But I never want him to go to sea, you know, father. And now it is coming like a fate. He's going away like all the other boys."

"Pshaw!" said Mr. Bartow, who had served many years on the whale-ships and rather despised land employments. "In my time the girls would not have a lover at all who had not toughened his hands on the ropes for one voyage, at least. Don't pout so, child."

Nelly agreed to try to be braver; but her pensiveness did not diminish, and her father began to suspect that there was some cause for it which she had not revealed.

And then came the terrible day when he was murdered by the poor, crazed miller.

After that, no one wasted any wonder over that melancholy expression which was gradually becoming indelible upon Nelly's face. Her father's death and her father had fallen a prey to disaster and died in madness, while her own father had been set down as the author of that very hand which should have welcomed her as a daughter. Were not these events enough to have wrought a revolution in her mind?

She was terribly overwhelmed when her father was brought home, after the shooting.

Those who saw her related that her grief was almost too awful even to speak of afterward. She seemed to consider herself the cause of the calamity.

"Oh, I wish I had never been born!" she cried. "But for me these griefs would never have come to us all. My poor, poor father! He does not know what made me sad, and I never told him; and I felt something dreadful coming, but how could I tell it was to be this?"

"Hush!" said one of her friends. "It is wrong to talk so. If you could make or prevent what Providence has appointed."

"But I can, dearest, I am doomed," moaned Nelly. "And all who come near me have been shaken."

They found old Nelly very gentle. She looked at Peggy a long while, then sighed and said:

"You are like me when I was young. But you will change, you will change. God grant you may not have such a lesson as I did."

"What was that?" asked Mrs. Winslow.

But Dame Gurton would say nothing more.

After that, though, she allowed Mrs. Winslow and Peggy to visit and befriend her.

It was only a few weeks later that old Nelly fell ill, and her case soon became so serious that it was plain she could not recover. When she was perfectly sure that she must die, she asked Mrs. Winslow, who was with her, to send for Peggy.

"I have something to tell you both," she said. "Dame Gurton is very near, and if the doctor comes, he must wait till I have done."

Then, after Peggy had come and taken her place beside the bed, the dying woman began.

"I am glad I am going to tell it," she said, "for my whole life has been shadowed by keeping it to myself. It would have been awful to die with that secret in my breast.

"Oh, you may say it was a little thing to feel so about; but that was what I said to myself all the time, and I was wrong: I only did it for fun, just for fun, as you put pepper in those flowers, Will Gurton to become man and wife. But the two young people in question decided otherwise. Their love was the one bright thing left to them in the midst of the gloom that was gathering over their lives, and they clung to it faithfully. So when Will came home and found Nelly left alone in the world, they were married at once.

They lived in the old mill by the grassy hollow, that now occupied the place of the pond. Around it some shabby poplars grew, from behind which the queer, antique house, standing at various angles, peered out in a dazed kind of a way, as if they had never got over the joke, or the surprise of having the little stretch of water suddenly vanish from before them.

Nelly, also, had never gotten over the shock of that event and all the changes which followed it. But she tried to be cheerful, for Will's sake, and he was proud of his wife. Yet Nelly's misfortunes were not over; for, on his second cruise, Will's ship was wrecked and he was lost with a number of the crew.

She never would marry again, and so she was left to live, without children, utterly alone in the old mill. She shunned all companionship, for she had a secret in her heart which was a very exacting companion and drove out everything else.

By-and-by, as she grew old, she was so peculiar that few persons attempted to leave anything to do with her.

She became very poor, but when charitable townspeople went and offered her help she repulsed them, saying, almost fiercely:

"What have I to do with you? You are not witches, and don't you know I am an old witch and have brought sorrow and suffering on all who have had to do with me? Leave me alone."

So the children got to be afraid of her. But, as is often the case, they tried to show that they weren't afraid, by making fun of her and teasing her. They would go to her house and knock on the windows and door, and hide when she came out, or else they would fasten the door on the outside, and throw things in at the open window, to plague her.

Peggy Winslow, who was a leader in these adventures, one day conceived the idea of placing some flowers, which she had filled with red pepper, on the top of the door, so that they would fall down on old Dame Gurton as Nelly was now called: when she came out, and half choke her with sneezing. Peggy chose flowers so that if Dame Gurton didn't feel the pepper at once, it would be most likely to take up the flowers and smell them.

The trick succeeded.

Poor old Nelly was brought to the door by a gentle tap which deceived her into thinking it was some one come with sewing for her to do. But when the flowers fell down, and she found no one at the threshold, she stooped and picked up the nosegay with a strange sensation of surprised happiness. She fancied some one had had a kind thought for her, and expressed it in this way.

But when she stooped with difficulty and picked up the flowers, she discovered the imposition too late. The pepper went into her nose and eyes and convulsed her.

What was worse than that was the bitter disappointment of finding what seemed such a pretty gift only a mischievous jest.

She rushed out into the old patch of shrubbery she called her garden, to find the offender. Peggy had hidden behind a bush, expecting the result with great enjoyment. But, when Dame Gurton appeared, she was overcome with fright.

The old woman was gasping for breath, her eyes were streaming; she shook her fist at Peggy, and the wildest sobs of mortification interrupted her outcries.

Peggy fled home as fast as she could go, feeling that she had been very wicked. She could hardly bear to face her mother. Yet how could her mother ever know what she had done?

This reflection, however, didn't console her; and, before she had said her prayers that night, she had confessed the whole story.

Mrs. Winslow took Peggy to the old mill the very next morning to tell Dame Gurton how sorry they both were that such a cruel and wanton thing should have been done.

They found old Nelly very gentle. She looked at Peggy a long while, then signed and said:

"You are like me when I was young. But you will change, you will change. God grant you may not have such a lesson as I did."

"What was that?" asked Mrs. Winslow.

But Dame Gurton would say nothing more.

After that, though, she allowed Mrs. Winslow and Peggy to visit and befriend her.

'Boys,' he said, 'can you see that sunset? It's the most beautiful thing I ever saw.' Then, seizing some paper from the proof-reader and leaning over the imposing stone, he wrote the famous paragraphic thing in the life-long subsequent of 'Sunset Cox.' The article was taken to the compositors and put in type piece-meal, and it appeared in that evening's number of the paper."

The Central Pacific Snow-Sheds.

On the topmost height of Red mountain a slight prominence that looks no larger than a bushel basket, can be seen, which is a telephone station established by the Central Pacific railroad company. This is a house occupied by two watchmen, who are on the lookout for fires in the snow-sheds, or can take in the whole line of snow-sheds with their natural sight and by aid of glasses. If they observe a fire in or near the sheds on any part of the line, they immediately notify the station at Cisco by their telephone line, and forthwith the information is sent by telegraph to the railroad station at Sacramento, and in a minute or two the order is sent up the line to Blue Canon and the Summit, where fire trains are instantly on duty, to proceed to the spot where the fire is prevailing. The train consists of a locomotive, with tank cars filled with water, which is thrown by hose with a steam force pump. When the fire trains are sent up they have the road, all other trains at the point of danger being stopped, the services of these fire trains are rarely needed upon the line, but they are so kept in action that they can generally subdue the fires before much damage is done. The system is as near perfection as can well be made, so that the destruction of the sheds is now nearly impossible.—Reno (Nev.) Gazette.

A Day of the Period.

A young Austin man recently married a rich widow, who died shortly after the ceremony and left a bereaved husband and a large amount of property. One day he was visiting at the house of a friend who had a family of little boys, and the widower began gazing them.

"Well, George, what are you going to do when you grow up?" he inquired.

"I guess I'll be a poet," answered the fellow.

"But what are you going to try and live on?"

"I'm going to be an artist."

"Artist, eh? And what do you think you will adopt as a profession, then?"

"Why, I says he's going to make a minister of me."

"That's good, very good. Now, Jake, let me hear what you intend to be?"

"I'm going in for money."

"Going in for money? Humph! Well, what is it?"

"I'm going to be a rich widower, I reckon.—Texas Siftings.

Whisky in a Tree-Top.

A witness in a "moonshine" case, tried in Louisville, Ky., told how the illicit trade is carried on down on the Cumberland river. "I wanted a few gallons, and went to Davis and asked him where I could get it." "Did Davis let you have it?" "He promised me he would." "Did Davis let you the whiskey?" The prosecuting attorney broke in: "Did he tell you you take it away from the still?" "No, indeed." "Well, how did you get it?" "I went away and rested about an hour and found a jug in a tree-top." "Who put it there?" "Why, Mr. Davis, of course." "Did you see him put it there?" "Don't know. All I know I got my liquor."

What Is Stupey

Is a name that is apt to cross one's lips when a hard-headed, stupid fellow comes before him. While no one need be a total stranger from the effects of stupidity, many do not realize how much they suffer from it. Stupidity is the absence of mental activity, and may be shown in the sluggish or dull manner as are to be found in the world. Stupey boys, rather than bright ones, are more frequently met with. Stupidity is often a hereditary disease, and when the system is debilitated by unhealthful influences, it appears in manifestations of the most unfavorable character. Stupidity is a disease not only mental, but physical, and is often the result of a disordered liver. Those who are afflicted with this disease should use Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which will be found a most powerful remedy in the destruction of stupidity, and in the restoration of the mental faculties to their normal condition. Stupidity is a disease which is frequently met with in the country, and it is to be regretted that its victims do not more frequently resort to the use of this medicine, which will be found to be a sovereign remedy for the disease

THE JOURNAL.

CHARLEVOIX, - MICHIGAN.

If your wife is cross at meal-time, take an observation of the wood pile. The woman who can go out in a storm of sleet and dig soggy wood out of the snow to cook her husband's dinner, and still wear a cheerful countenance and speak honeyed words, is more than human.

Philadelphia has night-schools for working women, in which the studies are divided as follows: Those which every woman needs for herself, such as reading, writing, and arithmetic—physiology and hygiene—sewing, and cutting and fitting; those which contribute to her enjoyment of her leisure, and such as contribute to her power of improving her home life—viz: cooking, reading alone, and singing. The teachers are volunteers.

Reports to the state board of health for the week ending October 27, 1883, indicate that dysentery, consumption, diarrhea, bronchitis, tonsilitis, influenza, and rheumatism decreased in area of prevalence. At the state capital, the prevailing winds, during the week ending Oct., 27, were northeast; and compared with the preceding week, the temperature was lower, the absolute humidity less, the day and the night ozone considerably less, and the relative humidity more. Including reports by regular observers and others, diphtheria was reported present during the week ending Oct. 27, and since, at 15 places.

Remember in all things that if you do not begin you will never come to an end. The first weed pulled up in the garden, the first seed in the ground, the first dollar put in the savings bank, and the first mile traveled on a journey are all important things; they make a beginning, and thereby a hope, a promise, a pledge, an assurance that you are in earnest in what you have undertaken. How many a poor, idle, hesitating outcast is now creeping and crawling on his way through the world who might have held up his head and prospered if, instead of putting off his resolution of industry and amendment, he had only made a beginning.

If a person swallow any poison whatever, or has fallen into convulsions from having over-loaded the stomach, an instantaneous remedy, more efficient and applicable in a larger number of cases than half a dozen we can now think of, is a heaping teaspoonful of common salt and no much ground mustard, stirred rapidly in a teacup of water, warm or cold, and swallowed instantly. It is scarcely down before it begins to come up bringing with it the remaining contents of the stomach; and lest there be any remnant of poison, however small, let the white of an egg, or a teacup of strong coffee, be swallowed as soon as the stomach is quiet. These very common articles nullify a larger number of virulent poisons than my medicines in the shops.

The American Public Health Association, an organization of leading sanitarians from all parts of the country, holds its eleventh annual session at Detroit, Michigan, commencing Tuesday, November 13, and ending Friday, November 16, 1883. This its first meeting in Michigan offers an unusually favorable opportunity for health officers and others in this state interested in public health to attend. Its meetings are open to the public. Local boards of health will no doubt be glad to avail themselves of this opportunity to have at least one member from each board present to gather what he can for the benefit of his locality. Reduced rates on railroads may be secured by applying to W. K. Muir, chairman of transportation committee for the association, Detroit, Michigan.

We are far too narrow in our conceptions of what justice means. It makes many claims upon us which no law can ever enforce and with which public sentiment can never meddle. It demands much more than the discharge of pecuniary obligations. It enters into every detail of life, and regulates our conduct in all the relations we bear to others. It pronounces upon our behavior to relatives and friends and the community in which we dwell. It enforces debts of gratitude, or affection, of thoughtful consideration, of kindness, of compassion, as well as those of shillings and pence. To call a man just who is not kind, or tender or pitiful, or loving is a misnomer. True justice implies the due exercise of all these sentiments in their proper season and the cheerful discharge of the conduct which they suggest.

Now is the dyspeptic's time to live well, says the Baltimore Sun. If a great sufferer, let him eat only fruit for breakfast, and peaches with their jackets on. The peach skin has some quality that is highly useful, in acrid dyspepsia especially. Watermelon and cantaloupe eaten with other things may disagree with the dyspeptic. Try eating them alone. Especially begin the meal with them. If you are very hungry, yet too weary to eat, nibble at a pair or peach and a pear. Fresh fruit has a tonic quality. The stomach will respond, and either you will find yourself refreshed without needing anything more, (most likely), or you can indulge in a hearty meal. We underrate the nutriment conveyed in fruit. A fatigued and irritated digestive tract will get more benefit from the slice of a melon or an unpared peach or pear than from a quantity, a "hearty meal," of heavy food that it cannot manage. This country is the paradise for all such sufferers. Nothing strikes a returning traveler from Europe more forcibly than the bounty of our September tables; the affluence of vegetables, the heaped variety of our fruits, the cheapness of both. It is not without reason that "hot corn" is a street cry in cities. Hot corn alone makes an excellent and light supper. It may quarrel with other food, but eaten by itself is light and easily assimilated. The tyrannical torment of a dyspeptic's day can be laid by the fruit diet. He can always swallow the skins, except of the grapes and melons.

Among the guests of a New York hotel was a maiden lady from the rural districts. The landlord noticed that about nine o'clock every night she would come down stairs, get a pitcher of icewater and return to her room. "One night," he said, "I made bold to speak to her, and asked her why she did not ring the bell for a bell-boy to bring the icewater to her. 'But there is no bell in my room.' 'No bell in your room, madam! Pray, let me show you,' and with that I took the pitcher of icewater in my hand and escorted her to her apartment. Then I pointed out to her the knob of the electric bell. She gazed at it with a sort of horror and then exclaimed: 'Dear me! Is that a bell? Why the hall boy told me that it was the fire-alarm signal, and that I must never touch it except in case of fire.' And that is how the landlord saved himself the trouble of going for icewater."

The number of type used in an ordinary country newspaper is about 600,000; that is, the actual number of bits of metal arranged for each newspaper in preparing the newspaper of that size for the press. We suppose few people think of the printing trade as one of the most exact and particular handicrafts; but it is. In making type, variations that might be allowed in the finest machinery, would render type useless. It is very rarely that type furnished by two separate foundries can be used together without a great deal of trouble, even though they should try to make it after the same standard. We read once in a while of a wonderful piece of machinery or mosaic work containing ten, twenty or 50,000 pieces, the maker of which has spent months or even years of labor in producing it; and the people go and see it as a curiosity. But the most elaborate and carefully fitted pieces of work of this kind ever made be cast compare for minuteness of detail and accuracy of fitting with that which the printer does every day. The man who does the first is looked upon as a marvel of skill, and if 100 of his pieces are put in wrong side up or turned around it is not noticed in the general effect; but if a printer, in fitting ten times as many pieces together in a day, puts one the wrong way, everybody sees it and is amazed at the "stupid carelessness of those printers." Gazette.

When a man chooses the profession of law he does not expect to be a statesman and a journalist also; he knows that if he would succeed he must devote himself to the one chosen calling. When a woman marries she ought to know that in order to fulfil lofty heights in wife and motherhood she must sacrifice lesser aims. She must be willing to lay aside the delightful occupations that made her girlhood pleasant; she must know that from the hour when the baby is laid in the cradle, dressed with loving forethought, to that darker hour when the mature man lies down in his last sleep, that she will give full meaning to the words "constant care," that her mind, once unfettered, will be at liberty no more, but is bound by ties stronger than life or death to those who have come to her from out the great unknown. Wait awhile, girls; think it all over before you promise to become wives to take these duties and burdens upon you. Sweet and satisfying as me the obligations of wife and mother, they are not to be taken lightly. A husband must not be looked upon as a sort of perpetual beau, and children as extremely uncertain and improbable adjuncts. Unless, like Wilhelm Meister, your apprenticeship ended, you reach out of yourself and ask for larger duties, for a wider field of labor, you had better stay at home with father and mother, dignifying the relation of daughter, filling the old established house with mild radiance which would seem but a dim light in a new one.

Young ladies should not forget that Goliath died from the effects of a bang on his forehead.

Now is the time your horses and cattle need attention. To prevent disease and tone up the system you will find Parmelee's Condition Powders unexcelled. Full pounds 25 cents. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co. 849

The moralist says: "Every man is occasionally what he ought to be perpetually." Then again some men are perpetually what they ought to be occasionally.

True modesty is beautiful, because it announces the supremacy of the idea of perfection in mind, and at the same time gives truth and sincerity the victory over force and vanity.

Do You Know?

That the Horse and Cattle Powders prepared by E. M. Parmelee are composed of the very best and purest materials, Licorice, Fenugreek, Blood Root, Elecampane, for Coughs, Colds, Epizootic, Distemper, &c., Sulphur, Mandrake, Gentian, Sulph. Magnesia for Impure Blood; besides many other ingredients especially adapted to the cure of Colic, Worms, Hoarse, and all diseases of Horses, Cattle, Hogs, Sheep and Poultry. Pay no other. Full pounds only 25 cents. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co.

A fear that present joys are "too good to last," and that a sadder day is coming, is hardly less common, and not a whit more excusable, than the thought that the former days were better that these.

Thoroughly Tried.

After many years of experience in my own family and upon my horses and cattle I am constrained to say that Parmelee's Universal Liniment is the most complete remedy for the cure of Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Lame Back, Sore Throat, &c., in the human family, and of Bone Spavin, Sweeny, Ringbone, Sparins, Bruises on Horses; Caked Bag, Sore Teats, &c., on Cattle, that I have ever known and take pleasure in recommending it to others. Large bottles 50 cts; common size 25 cents. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co.

If you want to succeed in this world you must make your own opportunities as you go on. The man who waits for some seventh wave to toss him on dry land will find that the seventh wave is a long time a coming. You can command no greater folly than to sit by the roadside until some one comes along and invites you to ride with him to wealth or influence.

Why Suffer?

with Dyspepsia when Parmelee's Dyspepsia, Diabetes, Kidney and Liver Cure will work wonders, relieving you at once. Do not wait till Dyspepsia has overcome and Diabetes has take it full possession of your body but remember that "an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure." This fine preparation will also tone up the kidneys and liver and cleanse the system of all impurities. Price $1.00 per bottle. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co.

A Baptist minister recently employed a country player to lead his choir. Sunday morning, prior to beginning the baptismal services, the minister told his man to play something appropriate. When the good man was leading a convert out into the water, the cornet rang out the old, familiar hymn, "Pull for the Shore," and the congregation, assented.

By Neglect

What is at first but a slight cold, becomes a cough, straining and exhausting the lungs till such an inflamed condition exists, that pulmonic remedies are not always able to stop the disease and the person goes into consumption from mere neglect. Do not be so foolish but use Hamilton's Candy Balsam, which removes the impure matter from the throat and lungs and exerts a healing influence on the diseased parts. Even these whose last moments of their former selves receive wonderful help by Croup and Whooping Cough It is invaluable. Price 25 and 50 cents. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co.

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.; HARBOR AND SUMMER RESORTS.

Charlevoix, the county seat of Charlevoix county, is a flourishing village of about 1,200 inhabitants is situated on the high bluffs overlooking Lake Michigan, between the outlet and Lake Michigan, and on both banks of Pine river, which forms the connecting link between Lake Michigan and the inland lakes, and is the key to the whole Pine lake region with nearly eighty miles of shore line. The citizens are justly proud of their town, and manifest a commendable spirit of enterprise and liberality. A writer, speaking from eight years acquaintance with the place, has said that the intellectual and moral standard of Charlevoix people is superior to any place of its size he has ever known. There are about ninety business firms here, representing nearly all branches. A few more, are lacking, which could be added, and probably will at no distant day. Some branches are represented by a single firm, and others would make closer competition, more activity, and better satisfaction. And this competition is sure to come as the village grows.

The channel between Lake Michigan and Round lake is 150 feet wide, and has a depth of 12½ feet its full length. This gives us a perfectly landlocked harbor, completely land-locked, safety during the severest storms. Between Round and Pine lakes the capacity of the channel is slightly less, but still sufficient for the uplake traffic.

The following industries are not represented here, and we would like to secure a part or all of them started:

A dairyman could find immediate sale for the milk of several cows, if delivered at the time regularly and promptly.

A cracker baker would get all the trade, for the best crackers we get here are stale when compared with fresh.

All kinds of headstones or any kind of marble cutting are obliged to send outside.

Among the industries requiring hardwood timber which we have in abundance, and the demand that might be successful here are the manufacture of chairs, agricultural implements, and farm wagons.

Handles of all kinds, and wooden bowls could be made here as cheaply as anywhere.

THE RESORTS.

Between Round lake and Pine lake and south of the main channel which connects them, is located the Charlevoix summer resort. The grounds of the resort comprise about 75 acres, and rise by three natural and well-defined terraces from Pine lake. The low lower terraces are sufficiently wide for carriage ride, with a broad walk in front, while the upper terrace stretches far away in a level platform, from which glimpses of Lake Michigan are obtained. More than half the tract is cleared land, other parts being thinly wooded, and the portion farthest from the water being covered with heavy timber, while in the rear of the whole the dense woods extend to some distance. A handsome hotel, the Belvidere house, has been erected on an eligible site, from which a charming view of the blue waters reaching far to the southeast is obtained. A number of beautiful cottages also stand upon terraces overlooking the lake. A music hall 30x60 feet and a bowling alley 30 feet long, have been built and numerous improvements made. The company owning this resort was organized on the 21st day of May, 1878, under the laws of Michigan.

Directly opposite the Charlevoix resort is the Chicago resort, founded by a number of wealthy Chicago gentlemen for a private summer retreat for their families and friends. An elegant club house, a large boat house and several fine cottages have already been erected and extensive improvements have been made. The club house, from its location, has the advantage of lake breezes from both waters of the winds which commonly prevail in this region more than the advantages of the finest landscape surroundings are those of any lake, one of the prettiest sheets in the world in this respect it could scarcely be excelled. Nature has provided every facility for recreation and amusement, including fine boating and fishing, and the guests of these resorts make the best of their delightful location.

PINE LAKE.

One of the loveliest of all the many beautiful lakes that adorn this fair northern land is Pine lake. It stretches east and south of Round lake. About five miles east it divides into two arms, the one bearing northeast, the distance of some 16 miles, finds the end of south arm flows the Jordan to Elmwood, Antrim county. Prof. Winchell gave the following graphic pen picture of Pine lake in the southern part: "Its tables, stretches the placid, smiling surface of the water, it's white and pebbly shore, and the presence of the hills in all its picturesque. The verdant ridges rise beside from the shining shore line, and the lake in their embraced embrace, while the hill-tops bubble up in rapid succession the retiring landscape, till hill, valley, green, purple and blue, dissolve together in the blended lines of the distant horizon."

AROUND THE COUNTY.

The surface of the county is undulating, and in some parts decidedly hilly, but well watered and is generally covered with heavy timber, which is of the finest quality. There is some available water power, especially on the Jordan and Boyne rivers. The latter has a fall nearly to a mile, and is capable with enlargement of 2,000 horse power. The soil is varied a nature as that of the entire county, clay, loam, limestone, sand, hard and cedar timber is found in great quantities throughout the county. The principal timber is white pine, oak, elm, hemlock, beech, maple and birch. The principal crops are wheat, corn, hay, clover, and root crops. The summer months of each furnish an excellent market for a great variety of vegetables. All fruits common to this latitude grow here in abundance, including grapes and peaches. The hardier varieties of apples are especially successful. The county is at the northern extreme of the celebrated Michigan fruit belt. The average crop per acre, although largely produced, generally pays for the cleaning and improvement lands in the market. The number of state acres, 1,995,840; number of state acres, 1,995,840; number of improved acres, 1,995,840; number of acres of agricultural lands, 1,995,840; and 42,985 acres of Grant Rapids and Indiana land, subject to entry at $1.25 per acre. Unimproved lands are held at from $2 to $10 per acre, while improved farms average from $10 to $40. In the interior and from $25 to $40 in Charlevoix. The timber business is a large and important industry in this county. Steam sawmills, lumber yards, and planing mills are numerous, employing a large number during the winter, and are shipped during the summer to Chicago, Milwaukee, and other lake ports. There are several mills in the county, and an iron furnace at Charlevoix.

Own Your Own Home.

Every man who has to live by his own exertions should be the master of a trade and the owner of his own home. We wish that we could make every young man in the land appreciate the importance of, early in life, after he has acquired a trade, setting to work to secure a modest and comfortable home for himself and little ones if he shall be thus blessed. Any wage worker of steady and industrious habits, in the possession of a trade and the owner of a little home to live in, has reached the highest point that leads to future competence. The greatest obstacle to the progress and prosperity of the one classes is the constant drain which the landlord makes upon his meager income. The man who makes two to $500 to $800 a year, has to pay more than one-fourth of his wages for rent, if he desires to have his family have a comfortable and respectable home. Even at these figures the houses that are usually for rent lack the modern conveniences, and are objectionable, both as to situation and sanitary arrangement. The demand for the cheap class of tenement houses is in most cities greater than the supply, and for that reason the first class in the rent of the mechanical secured comfort and independence, is to own his own house. He must pay out as much in rent every eight years, as will secure a good home, and such being the case, it is surprising that there is but little chance in life for the accumulation of money. The time to begin for any young man and his wife, is to practice the most rigid economy, until a home is assured. They must begin the task early in life, or never. If they defer it until they get older and have larger and more expensive families, the home will never be acquired. Once a saving working man has secured a home, he can save each year a sum equal to his rent at least, and this continued for a period of years, must bring a competence if a judicious use is made of the money. It may not be possible for all mechanics to obtain homes in their own, but many with a little effort and self-denial certainly can succeed.

An Unheeded Lesson.

The telegraph has been fairly burdened of late with the story of great crimes or great calamities caused by the irregular intimacies of the sexes. These all point in one direction. They cannot be entered into without serious risk to the life, reputation and happiness of those who indulge in them.

Carpenter, the rich man and nobody of the Illinois village of Lincoln, with whom he was found fatally to be pound of, is in danger of a rough and ghastly death at the hands of a mad, because of a low intrigue with the girl Zora Barnes, who had served in his family.

A. B. Johnson, a man whose family, reputation and inheritance were of the finest, whose means were ample, whose ability as a manager or politician was second only to Conkling's himself, whose domestic surroundings and social position should have made him a contented, a happy, a useful father and citizen, kills himself in a paltry and vulgar way, almost in the presence of his mistress, amidst the scenes and associations which stained and disgraced his life. What a source he was impelled to it by the murder of a nephew, who met death at the hands of an outraged husband, that had surprised him while indulging in the same wanton and wayward disregard of the immutable laws of social order which he made bold to set at nought.

In New Orleans the unbounded [illegible] woman have ended in his murdering her, because she failed to recognize the obligations that he attempted to impose upon her toward him, while casting them aside himself. In other words, while repudiating the marriage laws, he killed her because she would not be bound by the fidelity which only marriage recognizes. She dared to love another man, and he slew her as if she had been his unfaithful wife.

In Wisconsin the body of a boy 11 years old is found with the throat cut, floating in the river. His own father and his father's paramour have been arrested as guilty of the deed, which was done to silence him, when he discovered their illicit relations.

And so goes the story from year's end to year's end, and lustre and [illegible] roll, handing the same unprofitably unheeded lesson, uttering the [illegible] warning which is not taken. —Free Press.

Ben Butler Heard From.

The Pittsburgh Commercial-Gazette telegraphed to Gen. B. F. Butler for his views on the result in Massachusetts, and asking for his programme for the future. The following characteristic reply was received:

To the editors of the Pittsburg Commercial Gazette: Boston, Mass., Nov. 7—Your question is once more to the front. The people in Massachusetts. Last year I had one hundred and thirty four thousand votes. The largest vote ever polled was in the Garfield election of 1880. Garfield had one hundred and sixty five thousand. Hancock one hundred and twelve thousand, or a total of two hundred and seventy-seven thousand. This year the vote is three hundred and thirteen thousand, of which I have one hundred and fifty two thousand. This enormous increase has been caused by a free use of money, fraud and corruption by my opponents. More votes have been cast than there will be next presidential year. The eight or nine thousand plurality of my opponent was more than lost in the city of Boston. Massachusetts is therefore surely democratic, if I make another state canvass, with further gain. When a man has increased the democratic vote from 112,000 to 150,000 in three years, there is no need of answering to your question as to what my programme will be.

I am pleased with the result. I had rather have my vote than to be elected by 150,000. In that case it would then be said that Massachusetts is a republican state. She has a large reserve vote, which in a presidential election will come out. Now we have had them all out and measured them, and in the next presidential election with a judicious platform and popular nominations, at least, we should keep all republican men and money at home to take care of Butler instead of sending both into Ohio and Indiana to corrupt those states.

[Signed] BENJ. F. BUTLER.

Eugene Hale and Hannibal Hamlin, two of the largest owners in the new Shore Line railroad now being constructed in Maine, are illustrating their ideas on protection by importing several hundred Italian laborers to take the place of American laborers, in constructing the road. The imported workmen are from the slums and purlieus of Italy. It is said they eat snakes with as little compunction as Chinamen do rats. A tariff on immigration would drive our monopolists from the slave markets of the world, and such insurgences as the above would be unknown. The Supreme Judges interpret Congress into competition with slave labor. Our next session of congress will [illegible]

The General Result.

Democrats have good reason to be satisfied with the work they accomplished at the elections throughout the country Tuesday; and viewed in its bearing upon the presidential election there is everything to encourage the party and to strengthen the assurance that the country will next year have a democratic president.

In 1879, the year preceding the presidential battle of 1880, the democrats in New York lost their entire state ticket with the exception of one man. This year, notwithstanding disaffection in certain localities, the entire democratic state ticket is elected with one exception, a special effort being made against the defeated candidate on account of his supposed views on the temperance question.

In 1879 Pennsylvania gave the republican candidate for state treasurer nearly 70,000 majority over his competitor. This year the republican majority is barely one-third what it then was.

New Jersey went republican on the congressional vote in 1878, the election last preceding the presidential election. This year a democratic governor and legislature have been elected.

In Virginia the back bone of Mahonism has been broken, and that state will again take its place in the democratic line. Governor Butler has been defeated for governor in Massachusetts, but with the overwhelming majorities which that state formerly gave the republicans, and which for years it never failed to cast on a full vote, the only wonder is, considering the stupendous efforts made against General Butler, and the unprecedent edly heavy vote cast, not that he was beaten, but that he was beaten by such a small majority. The Butler vote has been nearly exceeded heretofore by any party in the state. Butler's failure to carry his own state will take him out of the range of possible presidential candidates.

In the other states which held elections the democrats hold their own in opposition with the anti monopolists they staggered the republicans in Nebraska and they cut down the majority in Minnesota.—Free Press.

Failure of the Postal Note.

Some time ago it was predicted that the postal note would prove a great nuisance. Already the mail has gone up from Washington that the p. n. must go. Here is the routine they must go through: After they have been paid they are made up into bundles and sent to the money order division There they have to be counted to see if the number corresponds with the statement which they accompany. Then they must be examined to see whether the amounts for which they were issued correspond with the statement. Then they go as vouchers to the sixth auditor, who stores them in great boxes for reference in the future if needed. To do all this work requires a special corps of clerks, but, as the clerks are not allowed it falls on the already overtaxed clerks in the division. The postal note certainly has not accomplished what was intended for it, and it is doubtful if it will become a permanent institution. The old fashioned currency was far better for the purpose.

THE JOURNAL

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

AMONG the reasons urged by a Peoria (Ill.) woman for a divorce are: Drunkenness, swearing, obscenity, arson, filthy habits, incompatibility, infidelity, brutality, laziness, bigamy and non-support. She married him to spite her father for boxing her ears.

SEVEN years ago Mr. Dalrymple went to Dakota a penniless man. Capitalists backed him with the funds necessary to start his big farm of 50,000 acres on the conditions that he was to pay them 7 per cent. on the investment and the cost of stocking the farm, after which he was to have a one-third interest. To-day Mr. Dalrymple has paid for his third interest in the three farms, and has an annual income from the same of more than $100,000.

A YOUNG Canadian girl, who had her picture taken by an Ottawa photographer, refused to receive and pay for it on the ground that it was not a correct likeness. The photographer, angered by her refusal, added a mustache and a cigar to the picture and placed it on exhibition in his window. The young lady thereupon entered an action for $1,000 damages, but the matter was compromised by the photographer paying her a smaller sum.

NOW THAT the channel tunnel project has been abandoned, at least temporarily, travelers mourn that there is no way of getting from England to France, save by almost certainly incurring the qualms of seasickness. The proposed plan of oiling the troubled waters is costly. Allowing a thousand gallons of oil per square mile, it is calculated that an oiled passage a mile broad would cost about $875,000 per annum. Neptune seems to be able to still demand his old-time casting up of accounts.

WICHITA (Kan.) Eagle: Mr. J. G. McCoy, of this city, exhibited at the fair last week a cent cut and made for Abraham Lincoln in 1860. It was during the campaign and McCoy's wedding had been fixed. He went to his tailor in a hurry for his wedding garments. McCoy being the same size of Lincoln and his counterpart in make-up, especially his shoulders, and the tailor having Lincoln's coat about finished and plenty of time to make another before it would be called for, let McCoy have the coat. He was married in it and now preserves it as an heirloom.

HANSAN is said to have accumulated a comfortable fortune by his cures. He lives well, but is no spendthrift, and never drinks a drop of alcohol. He works very hard. "I have traveled thirty miles to-day," he is quoted as saying, "and all with my own wind and muscle. I went about twenty of it in my boat, and the rest on my legs. Oh, no; that is not exceptional. I do as much as that every day, from early in the spring until late in the fall. You see my races are rather frequent, and it is necessary that I should keep myself constantly in perfect condition. I am, therefore, in training all the time. My diet is always as carefully regulated as though I was to pull a race next day."

VARIOUS methods of executing criminals have not only been practiced, but still others—an electric shock and chloroforming have been advocated. Some go even further and recommend that criminals be not executed at all. According to an Englishman the old-fashioned style of choking has superior merits. When a student he took a scarf, bound it about his throat and held it there drawn with its full force. At first his senses were very acute, but gradually sight and sound faded and a dreamy sensation, something like that produced by chloroform, set in, followed by a painless and complete oblivion. He was not conscious of choking or an effort at breathing. He liked the sensation so that he hung on to the scarf until his hands fell, the scarf was loosened and breath and circulation came back. He might, he supposes, under proper conditions, have died and known no more of the matter.

THE Rev Mr. Houghton, the New Haven clergyman, who, before large congregations in his church on Sunday evenings, tried and convicted Lewis of the murder of Rose Madder, is not content with the reputation thus acquired. He owns a fast horse. He is fond of fast horses. His parishioners remonstrated with him, but a few Sundays later he delivered a sermon on the propriety of a minister's owning a fast horse and quoted texts of scripture in support thereof. But he seems to have imagined that perhaps it would be more difficult to sustain horse-racing by Biblical authority, and, therefore, when he wanted to ascertain whether his horse was really faster than some others he nominally transferred the animal to a young dentist. The better to conceal the horse's identity he was entered at the Waterbury races under the name of Allen, his real name being Borax. This was discovered and a fine of $50 imposed for changing names. Soon after the horse was entered at New Haven under his old name of Borax, whereupon his ostensible owner was again fined $50 and not allowed to enter him until the Waterbury fine was paid besides. The Rev. Mr. Houghton stepped forward, paid over the $100, the horse trotted, beating all competitors, and winning $200.

THIS has been a year of surprises among horsemen, and the theories of breeders are just beginning to tell in the improvement of the speed of stock. That speed is no longer an accident is generally understood, and the records of the turf are making the fact clearer ever day. The breeders of cattle are now able, by the aid of science, to fatten stock so as to make it marketable, and can produce in a given animal the minimum of bone and the maximum of beef. A certain amount of pork can be produced from a certain amount of corn with as much accuracy as wheat can be converted into flour or wool into blankets, and the same mastery over animal life embraces the development of speed in horses. The record of the horse, Jay-Eye-See this season is but one more illustration of the success of science in this direction, and the only question now to be discussed is the degree of speed that may ultimately be reached. The horse Hindu Rose has beaten the fastest time ever made by a 3-year-old, and Bonita has beaten the hitherto unsurpassed record of Jay-Eye-See as a 4-year-old. There is scarcely a horse on the turf to-day but can surpass the speed of the fastest trotter of twenty years ago.

STATEMENTS are made showing a large decline in the value of railroad stocks. On an estimated capital of $905,909,000 the shrinkage is set down at $322,000,000, or more than one-third. "The heartiest losers," says the Chicago Herald, "are in the Vanderbilt lines and the Pacifics. The decline in the value of the capital stock in the Central Pacific is $22,500,000; in Lake Shore, now paralleled in part by the Nickel Plate, $23,250,000; Denver and Rio Grande, nearly $31,000,000; New York Central—a Vanderbilt road—nearly $37,000,000; Northern Pacific, common and preferred, almost $10,000,000 each; Oregon Transcontinental, closely allied with the Northern Pacific, $12,900,000; Union Pacific, $27,000,000; Wabash, common and preferred, $25,000,000." "It is worthy of record in this connection," says the Indianapolis Sentinel, "that there is nothing alarming in these reports. On the contrary, they indicate healthfulness, integrity—a return to honest dealings." It is said by the Herald that, "where the shrinkage in the value of railroad stocks has hit the hardest, it has damaged least for the owners of the great blocks have been boosted into their millions by wholesale watering of the stocks. The value thus made were fictitious. The shrinkage of the last three years, which has been enormous, has caught many a small-fry speculator and some honest investors; but the burden of the decline, it will be found, falls heaviest where it should fall." The shrinkage means that, under the influence of the hot breath of popular indignation, water is being evaporated from railroad investments and hard pan is being reached. If, as the Herald states, the sum of $322,000,000 of water has been reduced to vapor, the only ugly feature about the business is that the Vanderbilts and Goulds will still be able to make the people pay dividends on the vapor. The reduction, however, is in the line of retribution, and things are becoming healthy.

He that will not permit his wealth to do any good to others while he is living, prevents it from doing any good to himself when he is dead; and he an egotism that is suicidal and has a double edge, cuts himself off from the truest pleasure, and the brightest happiness hereafter.—Colton.

OUR YOUNG FOLKS.

A Nameless Hero.

This is the song of a nameless man;
Listen and tell till the deed is told
It was who ventured his life to save
Another's, but not for fame or gold.

Winter had been both hard and long;
Spring set in, and the brooklets ran,
Swamping the meadows and breaking the ice
Into mighty blocks. Then the floods began

Red and roaring, the racing stream
Bit the heaving bergs to the ice blocks' bore;
Screamed at length for a larger victim,
It roared and crushed with a sullen roar.

Crushed and shaken on the piers of stone,
They yielded at last to the fearful strain;
The center arch, with the keeper's house,
And helpless inmates alone remain.

Fiercer and fiercer roars the flood,
Whiter and wilder in the stormy sky,
The keeper springs to the rocking roof:
"Mercy! have mercy, great God on high!

"Help for my helpless wife and child!"
They heard him plead o'er the torrent's roar:
"Help, alas! there is none to bring;
No boat could live it it left the shore.

Whose steed comes galloping hot with haste,
And stops by the river raging wild?
Comes Alice, and dies could she help him
Who'll save the keeper with wife and child.

Ears, a thousand, the offer heard,
Hearts, a thousand, with grief are sore;
They look at the fee, the flood and the sky,
But never a boatman leaves the shore.

"Boatmen, then, are ye cowards all?
And must they perish within our sight?"
Then to himself, Lord Conor," they cried,
"Alice," said he, "for my strength is slight."

Out from the crowd a wagoner steps,
A load he hastened with the speed of thought.
"I will save but one with his mighty weight;
Then his arm is strong and he can row for naught.

Thrice he guides her with giant strength;
Thrice doth he brought her safe to shore;
Each load he takes is more and more,
When with awful crash the arch fell o'er.

Who was this valiant man of men?
A simple laborer brave and bold.
"Grand was the deed," I hear you say;
"And still he did it for goods and gold."

Listen, then. "Gallant the deed you've done,
And well," said the Count, "have you earned the prize."
Frankly and modestly answered then
The valiant man with the fearless eyes.

"My wife, Lord Count, is not for gold;
Your money all in the keeper gave;
Lost in the flood is his little all,
Yet he and his wife and child must live."

With a careless smile he turned and went,
His team with the bank and heedless eye.
We sing of his fame; but what was he more
Than known alone to the lord on high.

The Polly-Dancers.

When a wee bit of a child—almost a baby—I remember that one day my father called me to the low table, which was just about on a level with my eyes, and said:

"Look at the Polly-dancers."

He had brought the hickory pine-twig from the wood-pile, had cut off half a dozen brush-like little tufts, had trimmed their tips, and then, standing upon them gently, had set them dancing about the table as if they were alive. They floated this way and that, each taking its own direction; and when one moved too near the edge of the table, a light puff from his lips would send it back again. They seemed to me like tiny green-skirted sprites having a frolic together, and I wholly forgot my rag-babies and my tin-horse dolls in my rapture over the Polly-dancers.

Then I asked, "Where did the Polly-dancers come from?" and was answered "From the woods," a whole new, unexplored world rose before me. There was a dark-blue mountain against the sunset, across the river, and another heavier line of purple-green in the south. Some of the trees which I had heard called "the woods." The name had been full of mystery to me, for from that moment it stood for a wonderland—the home of the Polly-dancers! How I longed for the time when I should be old enough to go to the woods! And when next summer day, a year or two after, my brother asked and gained leave to take me with him a-berrying, was not I a happy girl?

The walk was through a long street, past a great many houses, over the second open, unclouded road. But at last we were there. When the cool, lofty greenness closed in us, and fresh earthy smells came up from the moss and ferns beneath our feet, I seemed to know it was just like I had been there before. There were really "the woods" of my dreams!

My brother soared me on a great rock covered with lichens, and told me not to move from the spot until he came for me. Then he went out of sight with his basket, whistling. I felt like crying for loneliness when I saw him disappear, but the stillness around me inspired a feeling of awe that made me afraid to utter a sound. And presently I began to feel at home in the wonderful place. There were soft whisperings all about me, that seemed like kind voices of unseen friendly people, rustlings as of gossamer garments.

Nothing would have tempted me from my perch, for I had read of elves and gnomes and fairies, and I firmly believed in them. They were hidden in the woods; and, though I would gladly have stepped inside a fairy-ring, I felt sure, I would wait for weeks and do some so without first feeling my hand first in my brother's, else I was sure I would never see home again. But he did not believe in fairies, and I soon forgot that I did as I listened to the song of the Polly-dancers.

For there were thousands and tens of thousands of them up in those great trees, dancing with their feet out to the sky, and making music all together, low, sweet and solemn! I have never forgotten how it sounded to me that first time I heard it. It seemed to tell me that the world was a larger and lovelier place than I had dreamed, and that it would always have awaiting me something grander than I could guess. Of course, I had no words for my feelings then; I did not even know that I was having "feelings" at all. A child never does. I told long afterward. But the feelings come back, and we remember the moments when we began to be acquainted with the world and with ourselves.

My brother and I walked home, two merry, tired, matter-of-fact children. He had left me only a half hour or so alone; and he did not confide to me until we were almost home that his basket, which seemed brimful of huckleberries, was really crammed with fresh leaves, and that there was only a thin layer of berries on the top. I remember thinking what a remarkable boy he was to have conceived such a clever artifice. But he had not liked either to take me into the bushes or to leave me long alone; and he did not wish to appear unsuccessful in his search for berries, if he should chance to pass other boys. He little dreamed how much more than berries I had found in the woods that day.—Lucy Larcom, in St. Nicholas.

Feather Pictures.

The Aztecs, the people who ruled Mexico 400 years ago, were very clever. They could copy any object in nature that they saw around them. Frogs, birds, leaves, ducks, lizards, serpents, foxes, wolves and dogs—all these they made images in gold, silver, clay, and stone. Many of these they adored as gods. But most of them they used as ornaments. The Spaniards, who took their country from them in 1521, wondered at their skill. They said that no silversmith in Spain could make such fine work. But what they most admired, and what they had never seen before, was the feather work. Even the old soldiers, who had passed all their lives in war, were struck with its beauty.

When the Aztecs were conquered, nearly all their beautiful arts were lost. They soon forgot how to cut precious stones, and how to mold silver and gold, for they were made slaves of, and had to labor in the fields. The art of making objects in feathers is about the only one they have kept and passed down to the present time from father to son. Even this they are very careful not to show to strangers. They work in secret, and carefully guard it from sight.

When in Mexico I tried hard to find out how they made the lovely birds on cards, which they offered for sale on the streets. A friend took me to the house of one of these Indians. It was a little hovel, where he sat on the mud floor and toiled. But when he heard me coming he put away all his work, and would not let us see it. He was an Indian, with brown skin and black, straight hair. He wore ragged clothes, and had an old blanket to keep him warm at night. Poor as he was, no money would tempt him to show the secrets of the art he learned from his father, which had been kept in the family for hundreds of years.

I was still so perplexed to produce a perfect picture. First, the Indian traces on the card the outline of the bulk of the bird. This is just enough for the feathers to stick to. Then he begins at the lower part and places them on, one at a time, one row lapping over the other, as a slater lays slates. He works very slowly and patiently. Perhaps this is the secret of his perfect work, and the reason that no other people are able to equal him. The result is, a bird, that looks as though it might sing or fly. The eyes are made with small glass beads, and the bill and feet are painted so nicely that they appear to be the real thing. Then he paints a twig or branch for it to rest on, or makes one from a feather, and his work is done.

The finest pictures are made from the bright feathers of the hummingbird. These are found only on the wings of the bright little birds, and it takes several birds to yield feathers enough for one picture. When in the sunlight, they look like rich velvet, like bright gems. They glean like rubies and emeralds, and seem like live birds perched in the sunlight of their native tropics. As works of art, these feather pictures are admirable. As the last remains of a great people, they take us back to the storied past.—Our Little ones.

The Beautiful Island of Ischia.

There is hardly a more lovely spot to be found in the Mediterranean than Ischia. Perhaps the most beautiful view of all that is to be had of it, is that which is to be seen from the deck of a steamer as tourists at Naples are commonly taken. It meets the eye on the first break to the long line of the sunny Italian coast, and its little hamlets, embedded in the valleys which descend from the chief mountain of the island, give a sense of human life to the picture. Ischia is, in fact, a busy and prosperous island. The greater part of what the soil produces is reserved for export in small parcels of home consumption, and an active trade is carried on between the island and the principal towns of the Bay of Naples. Its vine produces and the other needs. Agricultural products of every sort is shipped from Ischia to Naples, and the wines of the island are among the best that are to be found in that city. When the vine failed in Capri, those in Ischia still held out, and for years, while all the wine sold as red or white Capri was, in fact, manufactured on the mainland, the real Capri wine made in Ischia wine was always procurable in Naples. Almost everything flourishes on the island. The soil is deeper than that of the neighboring island of Capri, and the products much more varied. As in Capri the pure blood of the inhabitants shows itself in a strikingly-handsome type of male and female beauty, and the contrast between the population of the two islands and that of the mainland is one which cannot escape notice. It is a contrast, too, which displays itself as much in their more dignified bearing as in their more outward appearance.—London Review.

Quarrying Marble in Vermont.

The more important marble quarries and works are situated north and west of Rutland itself, at Center Rutland, West Rutland, Sutherland Falls, and lesser points in the vicinity. The Vermont Marble company is, it is domiciled at all three of these places. It has finishing works at Center Rutland, quarries at West Rutland, both quarries and mills at Sutherland Falls. At the first-named place marble is excavated, but there the splendid water-power, which naturally is not neglected, and here can be observe every stage in the process, except the quarrying itself. The block is brought to the mills in unsightly, is sawed, turned, chiselled, polished, mounted, and emerges as tombs, capitals, cornices, columns, mantel-pieces, and table-tops. Much of this work, especially the hand-work, is, of course, be studied in every place where people die and have monuments, by the local stone-cutter over the graves, but the heavier product, labor is best to be seen at the quarries themselves.

The marble is delivered at the mills in elongated cubes—parallelopipeds, we suppose Euclid would say—from fifteen feet long and three or four feet square, and placed on the floor for sawing. An expert will tell you, as to the manner of reduction, by the thickness and number of the saws according to the quality, the shape and size of the block, or the special needs of the orders to be filled. In appearance a "gang," as a set of saws is called, resembles the old-fashioned upright saw-mill, except that the real frame contains not one but many saws, arranged at different intervals corresponding to the desired thickness of the cuts, one process, therefore, divides an entire block into slabs. The saw has, it should be added, no teeth. The cutting is the joint effect of the hard edge of the steel blade and the wet sand which is fed into the cut, and thus produces an incisive force. The ordinary progress is about two and a half inches an hour, and the saws work night and day. The polished pieces is done on a reciprocating disk somewhat like a lathe, and the marble is thrown upon this, and held by fixed wooden strips like the jaws of a vise, the motion of the disk, which is supplied with sand and water, furnishes the attrition. It takes two or three hours to polish a surface of ten inches square, and a day or two more to finish the edges. The men began throwing pieces crockery, and in this manner overturned and extinguished the lights, after which, between the fury of the fighters and the panic of the people, the building was speedily in a perfect uproar. No less than ten persons, including the pastor of the church, received severe injuries, the originators of the disturbance luckily carrying away the heroes' share of the wounds.

HAIRPINS hairpins is the newest display of the boys in Pittsburgh. The Commercial Gazette says: "Last winter it got to be quite the thing for a boy to coax his young lady friends to give him hairpins, but now the craze is to get them without the girl's knowing it. Then you can pick up one that you are about. If you can steal a pin out of her hair, that's the way to do it. If you can pick up one that has fallen from her head, that's a dead sure. Some fellows have followed her for squares, just because a hairpin looked as though it meant to drop out. What do they intend to do with them? Put them into an album. They are scrap books, and push the pins through like needles. Then the girl's name, style of beauty, and estimated grave written below."

THE development of railway mileage and earnings is well indicated in a table prepared by an Eastern financial journal, the Stockholder. We reproduce it:

Year.	Miles of road operated.	GROSS EARNINGS. Amount.	Per mile.	Per head of population.
1860	30,626	$ 24,856,214	$ 812	$ 1.24
1865	34,958	130,000,000	3,716	4.08
1870	52,914	349,572,288	6,608	10.14
1875	70,741	483,000,538	6,825	12.23
1880	93,058	760,276,137	7,558	18.83
1882	105,708	838,560,826	7,930	18.80

This shows the increased use which is being made of railways. The average man who in 1851 had a business or pleasure warranting the contribution of $1.64 to railway transportation found himself in 1882 with interests so augmented in value that he had to use railways to the worth of $18.80; this, too, with rates per ton per mile very much lower.

ALLEGOAT, the Chicago cattle dealer, thinks that there is pleuro-pneumonia among cattle in the United States. He says: "They have been looking up native cattle in yards or fields formerly occupied by tick-covered Texas steers. When the Texas cattle are shipped to the East many of them are covered with little nests of 'ticks,' or bugs, and these insects fall off to the ground and crawl over the grass. If the herds are changed, as they usually are, it often happens that the native cattle get into the Texas pastures. The native cattle eat the grass covered with these poisonous green ticks, and in a short time show symptoms of what is termed pleuro-pneumonia. But it is not pleuro-pneumonia. It is easily cured. Give a steer a lot of green corn, and see how quickly this dreadful thing they talk about will disappear."

THE "oil spout" in the Gulf of Mexico, about which there has been so much talk of late as a place that is marvelled while all about is storm, is, Lieut. Stanum, of the revenue cutter Andrew Johnson, says, about ten miles south of the Sabine pass, and extends about two miles along the shore and seaward three-quarters of a mile. It is not noticeable in calm weather, but in a gale it takes a reddish hue, and is thick and muddy. The Lieutenant has pushed a pole thirty feet in length down into the soft stratum. The sand is soupy, and thus remarkable cleaning qualities. If there is oil, the Lieutenant says, it comes from the bottom, as none of the mud of the Sabine river has any of the properties of that from the "oil spot."

THE carriages of the first of the Russian trains which will enable them to travel on various gauges. From Paris to the Russian frontier the same gauge is used, but there it changes, and at the frontier stations, Eydt Kuhnen and Wirballen, the wheels will have to be readjusted. Travelers will thus be able to go the whole distance without the inconvenience of having to change carriages. The speed of the trains will be one not hitherto attempted on the Continent. It is to be 90 kilometers or 56 miles without stoppage an hour. It is announced that the trains are on "the American pattern," including kitchen, dining-saloon, reading and drawing-rooms, and all the other comfortable arrangements essential to modern traveling.

A NORTH CAROLINA negro knocked an elephant out in two rounds the other day. The Charlotte Observer thus describes the match: Reed, who is a tall, muscular colored man, had been giving the elephant a few apples, handing it all except one, which he put in his pocket. While his attention was turned the elephant reached out his trunk and getting hold of Rufus' pocket, tried to pull the apple out, tearing the vest nearly off before the wearer's attention was turned to the elephant's prank. Seizing the elephant's trunk "smost," Reed called it, he tried to wrench the vest and the apple away from it, but the elephant drew its trunk from Reed's hand and swinging it around gave Reed a terrible blow on the side of the head. Reed drew back and felled the elephant to the ground with a blow from his fist delivered over the trunk. The elephant keeper then attacked Reed, and Reed knocked him down. In the meantime the elephant had regained its legs and gave Reed another blow on the side. Reed was now thoroughly exasperated, and actually knocked the elephant over on its back, and then left the tent.

THE United States Senate, as at present constituted, is, in a number of respects, a peculiar body. In no particular is it so strongly marked as for its thriftiness. Not only for its thriftiness, but for the singular manner in which each individual side shall be two and one-half inches wide; cover it smoothly with the satin for the outside and the silk for the lining; as nothing will be used on the edges, they should be joined so neatly that no stitches can be seen. Care should be taken that the exact middle of the cover and linings is at the fold of the bristol-board, then fold over each side of the satin and silk extending beyond the stiffening to within a half inch of the center, this forms the places in which the cards are slipped. When the edges are neatly fastened press the case together and place for awhile under a weight, so that it will be pressed flat and smooth; then on one side of the cover paint in a diagonal position a dandelion with its leaves, and on the other, some forget-me-nots.

Plain white cards, with or without bevel edges, look well having the name in plain script, are always in good taste. The engraved copper-plate used for printing these can be obtained for $1.50, including fifty printed cards, and from this plate as many more as you may desire can be printed for 50 cents a packet.

Wicker work-baskets are prettily trimmed by weaving in the openings inch-wide satin ribbon of a cardinal color. A row of this should be threaded around the bent-over rim by putting the end of the ribbon through one opening, over one, and pull it through the third to the under side again, spreading out the ribbon on the upper side the full width in the center; weave the ribbon in this way all around the edge, and join the ends on top with a little bow. On the opposite side of the basket fasten a little square cushion, for pins and loose needles, with a piece of ribbon placed diagonally around it, and tied in a bow to the basket edge. Unless the bottom of the basket is very firm and close, fit a past-board exactly to it, and cover neatly with sicsia of the same shade as the ribbon used. Inexpensive little baskets for holding thimble, thread and scissors can be made very ornamental in this way.—Ladies' Floral Cabinet.

Charming Girl Students.

Prof. F. L. Ritter's genial face shone with a ruddy after-dinner glow. It is his task to guide the hands and voices of the deer Vassar girls in music. His eyes sparkled through a pair of Brazilian pebbles as the reporter approached.

"How are all the girls, Professor?"

"Oh, indeed, I can't say; they will not arrive till the latter part of the month." These words were spoken with a German accent just noticeable enough to be charming. At the same time he assumed a more dignified air.

"Which class, last year, took the prize for the best piece?"

"I don't think there are instructed in baking," said the Doctor, earnestly, "but they may take turns waiting at the table and—hesitatingly, "I believe they make up their own rooms."

"Do they make good wives?"

"Ah, my dear sir, I know not, but I suppose they do," and Professor seemed disposed to change the subject.

"Do you never meet these girls in after life when they are making shirts or sewing spun metal?"

"Our girls are very studious, sir; they have much spirit; they have to work, and those who bag are not thought well of."

"But don't they get lonesome without the boys?"

"Entertainments are given on occasions during the year at which invited guests appear," said the perspiring Professor in a cold tone. "Our girls are very intellectual."

"Would any of them marry a poor man?"

"Most of our students are young women who wish to prepare themselves to earn a maintenance. I see no reason why they should not marry a man of meager income."

"Are they prettier than the majority of the girls you meet?"

"Now, you who live in New York and see so many ladies would be able to judge," sighed the Professor. "Yes," he continued, "as a class, they will take a high rank for persevering hardwork and cheerfulness. They first come some seem surprised that they cannot do as they please. At the end of three months they settle down and do splendid work."

Now, carefully, would they make as good housewives as the German girls do?

There was an evident mental struggle before the answer came.

"Why not? It is my belief that education enables a woman to do anything better; she can see quicker how and when to do anything. Housekeeping should be easy to pick up, and I believe they will do it better than many."

"Do you think they could give the soup a more eclectic flavor."

"They should do everything well."

"They have society-lines—more or less in the nature of orders?"

"Yes."

"Then they wouldn't object to their husbands attending lodge?"

"They debate with much keenness and vigor of thought, I have heard," said the Professor, evasively.

"What are some of the topics of disputation?"

"The Aims of Man,' 'Is Chocolate injurious to Digestion?' and kindred questions in mental science are among those I recollect."

At this point Prof. Ritter mopped his brow and bowed, with evident sense of relief, as the reporter departed.—New York Journal.

The Cheerful Pretzel.

Pretzels are made of the best yeast dough, such as is used in bread. The dough is rolled into a wide, plastic expanse, a piece is cut off and rolled into a long cylinder about the diameter of a bologna sausage. Then the strips are cut into sections about three inches long, tapering off at each end. Seizing each end of this section of dough with the thumb and forefingers the pretzel baker crosses his hands, presses the ends of the section into the middle of the mass, and lo! the pretzel is shaped. Then it, with a dozen or more of its fellows, is dropped into a kettle of boiling lye, from which they are fished in less than half a minute. That half-minute, however, suffices to give them that brown cast of countenance and crisp texture which makes them so agreeable, while just enough of the lye clings to them to improve their flavor.

Pretzels are said to be aids to digestion, the lye that remains on them stimulating the gastric juices. As soon as the pretzel is taken from the lye it is sprinkled with salt and baked rapidly in a very hot oven. The steam pretzel differs from the regulation German cracknel for the word pretzel means cracknel, in that it is made of cracker dough, and, after being boiled in lye, baked and placed in a bag, is dried by steam. The soft pretzel is not a drug in the commodity. Indeed it becomes inedible after two or three days, while the hard steam pretzel is as imperishable as hard tack, and is a delicacy even at the mature age of six months.—Cleveland Press.

THE statistical bulletin of the German empire reports that the number of persons who cultivate the tobacco plant in Germany was 275,240, and that the area under cultivation was about 55,000 acres, showing a decrease of 20,000 planters and 13,000 acres on the year 1881.

"Is it a sure preventive, truly?"

"It is, ma'am. It is indorsed by the Royal Medical society of London as the best preventive ever known."

"Well, I'll take a bottle. How much is it?"

"Only 70 cents, ma'am. But you should take two cents for your husband, you know, as he should have a bottle with him while at his business in order to be prepared in case of an attack."

Mrs. Smasher.

At the same moment a lady entered the room who bore one of the most noted family names in the country, and most familiar in fashionable annals, a family which delights to trace its lineage to a royal source. This proud dame had married her daughter as if by mutation to a descendant lord of hereditary acres. It was a familiar fact of the society in which she was a conspicuous figure, and it was impossible not to ask: "Can there be anything more coarsely vulgar than to sell a daughter for money and a title to a man for whom she does not care and whom she begins to crest the social standard by expelling the vulgar offender?"

Belinda was still silent, and the brilliant rooms began to fill and murmur with a gay company. Among them came the loud and dilatory Mrs. Smasher, to whose unparalleled fetes even Belinda would be almost willing to respond in earth. Mrs. Smasher means to be renowned or regal; the Smasher mind is imperfectly educated; the Smasher manners are those of the soul-dress which who are not due suddenly retinued.

"It is my conceivable vulgarity greater than Mrs. Smasher's?" thought Belinda, and soul we continue these exercises by expelling also this essentially vulgar person?"

Belinda was still silent. She has retained silent even to this day.—The Easy Chair," in Harper's Magazine.

Pretty Tables.

Very pretty little pocket cases for holding calling cards can be made from bits of satin and silk, and are far more dainty to use than the heavy ones of leather with their gold or silver mountings.

The silk and satin may be chosen from as delicate colors as may be fancied, but those we shall describe was made of black satin, lined with a pale shade of blue silk. The materials required for its construction were a piece of light-quality bristol-board, four and one-quarter inches long by five inches wide, a strip of satin four and one-half inches long by ten wide, and silk the same size as the satin. Fold the piece of bristol-board exactly in the middle, so that each side shall be two and one-half inches wide; cover it smoothly with the satin for the outside and the silk for the lining; as nothing will be used on the edges, they should be joined so neatly that no stitches can be seen. Care should be taken that the exact middle of the cover and linings is at the fold of the bristol-board, then fold over each side of the satin and silk extending beyond the stiffening to within a half inch of the center, this forms the places in which the cards are slipped. To-morrow will be your wedding-day. The feast is prepared, the guests bidden, and all things made ready.

In the pocket of your vest is the tiny box containing the golden talisman which is to change all your future life.

How your heart beats with glad, tumultuous throbbing at thought of the shining circlet resting just above it, and how absurdly happy you have felt ever since the wonderful thing has been in your possession.

The clerk in the jeweler's store saw through the elaborate mysteriousness of your air, and was too well deceived by the careless tone in which you asked for plain gold rings. "Wedding rings, sir?" he questioned, with a sympathetic smile, as he handed you the box. Then with what interest he watched you lift the glittering band on your smallest finger, giving advice as to weight, size and style with kind friendliness.

And on the street, after your purchase was made, what delicious thrills kept tingling through your veins, and what a warm sunshiny feeling there was about your heart.

In the exuberance of your joy you could have embraced the whole world, and three times you went out of your way to help tired, fractious children over the crowded crossings. In the street car you surrendered your seat to the stout woman with the big basket basket, with an obedience you thought, and stood on the platform with the driver contentedly for fifteen long blocks. Paul Canine, a prominent lumberman and old resident of Manistee, committed suicide at his home last Friday morning by shooting himself through the heart. There is no known reason for the act,

The discovery was recently made of a portion of stone wall laid in mortar in the woods about three miles northwest of St. Ignace. It is supposed that this is the remains of a jesuit chapel, as it very nearly corresponds with the location of such a building as indicated on a map made by Father Marquette over 200 years ago.

During the fall cleaning, so dear to the good housewifes heart, you doubtless run across some garments left from last winter which are too good to be thrown away and not quite good enough to wear. Do not cut them up into carpet rags but give them to some needy person and in Keeping the winter's chill away do a nobler work.

A republican paper claims that the only object which prohibitionists have in view is to cut the throat of the republican party. There must be some mistake about this. The throat of the republican party is already cut, and the party is about ready to give up the ghost. The dastardly deed was done by the party itself. It is as clear a case of suicide as was ever recorded, and to attempt to charge it over to the prohibitionist is the quintessence of cowardice.

A peculiar clock, which marks the hours from one to twenty-four, has recently been completed by a Wilmington, Del., manufacturer. The new time piece is one of the kind soon to be adopted by several of the railroads. The most conspicuous innovations are in the marking upon the dial and in the movements of the wheels which run the hands. The minute hand instead of making twelve revolutions to every revolution of the hour hand, as in the ordinary clock, makes twenty-four revolutions while the hour hand passes around once. The figures upon the dial are marked in Arabic, in stead of Roman numerals. They are from one to twenty-four inclusive, the spaces between the figures thus being only half as great as those on the dial of an ordinary twelve-hour clock. The minute hand therefore marks the half minute as well as the minute. The railroads proposing to adopt the new system as a standard will prepare new time tables, upon which the distinction between time marked p. m. and those marked p. m., which is often overlooked by careless travelers, will no longer appear. This system does away with the a. m. and p. m. business. It begins the day from midnight, and continues for twenty four hours, the twelfth hour being noon and the twenty-fourth hour midnight. The minutes between the close of the day, the twenty fourth hour, and one hour after midnight will be expressed as so many minutes after midnight. Then four minutes after 12 o'clock, midnight, current time, will be shown as 00, indicating that the day is four minutes old; and so continues until sixty minutes are reached, when the hour is 1:00. From that point it will be shown as now, 1:01, 1:02, and so on, until it is 2:00. The same rule governs through the entire twenty-four hours, all numbers below 12:00 indicate a. m. and all above 12:00 p. m.

The Longest Bridge.

China possesses the longest bridge in the world. It is at Langang, over an arm of the China sea, and is five miles long, seventy feet high, with a roadway seventy feet wide, and has 300 arches. The parapet is a balustrade, and each of the pillars, which are seventy-five feet apart, supports a pedestal on which is placed a lion twenty-one feet long, made of one piece of marble. The highest bridge in the world is said to be the railway viaduct at Garabit, in France, now being erected over a river in the department of Cantal. The bridge has a total length of about 1,800 feet, and near the middle of the great center arch, which is one of the noteworthy features of the structure, the height from the bed of the river to the rail is 413 feet. The viaduct was commenced in 1881, and is to be completed next year.

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.; HARBOR AND SUMMER RESORTS.

Charlevoix, the county seat of Charlevoix county, is a flourishing village of about 1,800 inhabitants is situated on the high bluffs overlooking Lake Michigan, between Round lake and Lake Michigan, and on both banks of Pine river, which forms the connecting link between Lake Michigan and the inland lakes, and is the key to the whole Pine lake region with nearly eighty miles of shore line. The citizens are justly proud of their town, and manifest a commendable spirit of enterprise and liberality. A writer, speaking from eight years acquaintance with the place, has said that the intellectual and moral standard of Charlevoix people is superior to any place of its size he has ever known. There are about ninety business firms here, representing nearly all branches. A few lines are yet lacking, which could be added, and probably will at no distant day. Some branches are represented by a single firm, and others would make closer competition, more activity, and better satisfaction. And this competition is sure to come as the village grows.

The channel between Lake Michigan and Round lake is 150 feet wide, and has a depth of 19 feet its full length. This gives us a perfectly land-locked harbor where vessels may ride in safety during the severest storms. Between Round and Pine lakes the capacity of the channel is slightly less, but still sufficient for the up-lake traffic.

The following industries are not represented here, and we should like to see a part or all of them started:

A dairyman could find immediate sale for the milk of several cows, if delivered at the door regularly and promptly.

A cracker baker would get all the trade, for the best crackers we get here are stale when consigned with trash.

All in want of tombstones or any kind of marble cutting are obliged to send out side.

Among the industries requiring hardwood timber outside our lines in abundance near at hand that might be successful here are the near absence of chairs, agricultural implements, and farm wagons.

Handles of all kinds, and wooden bowls could be made here as economically as anywhere.

THE RESORTS.

Between Round lake and Pine lake and south of the main channel which connects them, is located the Charlevoix summer resort. The grounds of the resort comprise about 75 acres, and rise by three natural and well-defined terraces from Pine lake. The two lower terraces are sufficiently wide for cottage lots, with a broad walk in front, while the upper terrace stretches far away in a level plateau, from which glimpses of Lake Michigan are obtained. More than half the resort is shaded with native forest, is finely wooded, and the portion farthest from the water being covered with heavy timber, while in the rear of the whole the dense woods extend to some distance. A handsome hotel, the Belvidere house, has been erected on an eligible site, from which a charming view of the blue waters reaching far to the southeast is obtained. A number of beautiful cottages also stand upon terraces overlooking the lake. A music hall 50x70 feet and a bowling alley 80 feet long, have been built and numerous improvements made. The company owning this resort was organized on the 21st day of May, 1878, under the laws of Michigan.

Directly opposit the Charlevoix resort is the Chicago resort, founded by a stock company of wealthy Chicago gentlemen for a private summer retreat for their families and their friends. An elegant club house, a large boat house, and several fine cottages have already been built, and extensive improvements have been begun.

As a resort Charlevoix has the superb advantage of lake breezes from both ways and with the winds which commonly prevail in a Michigan summer has the advantage of them all. Its landscape surroundings are those of an inland lake, one of the prettiest sheets in the west, and in this respect it could scarcely be improved. Nature has provided every facility for healthful recreation and amusement, including unexcelled boating and fishing, and the managers of the resorts make the most of their delightful location.

PINE LAKE.

One of the loveliest of all the many beautiful lakes that adorn this fair northern country is Pine lake. It stretches east and south some 20 miles. About five miles east it divides into two arms; extending as its name implies, south to the distance of some 16 miles. Into the finger end of north arm flows the Jordan river, the famous trout stream. Prof. Winchell years ago gave the following graphic pen picture of Pine lake: "Due away in the southeast, for fifteen miles, stretches the placid, smiling surface of the water, its white and pebbly shore chasing the contour of the hills in all its meandering sinuosities. The verdant ridges rise on every side from the shining silver line, and hold the lake in their enchanted embrace, while rounded hill-tops bubble up in rapid succession across the retiring landscape, till hill, vale, and sky, green, purple and blue, dissolve together in the blended lines of the distant horizon."

ABOUT THE COUNTY.

The surface of the county is every where rolling, and in some parts undulating hilly. It is well watered and is generally covered with innumerable spring brooks of the coldest water. There is some available water power, particularly on the Jordan and Boyne rivers. The soil varies from a light sandy to a heavy clay, filled with calcareous matter. The subsoil is of as varied a nature as that of the surface. Sugar maple, elm, beech, basswood, ash, hemlock, and cedar timber is found in great quantities throughout the county. The principal crops are winter wheat, oats, corn, rye, flower, potatoes, and root crops. The summer resort at Charlevoix furnish an excellent market for all sorts of garden vegetables. All fruits do well, excepting grapes and peaches. The hardier kinds of apples are especially successful. Charlevoix county is at the northern extremity of the celebrated Michigan fruit belt. The seed of flowering shrubs $20 per acre, although the wood produced, generally pays for the clearing. There are government lands in the market. There were 33 pieces of state swamp, 1,305 acres of primary school, 3,525 acres of agricultural college, and 42,295 acres of Grand Rapids and Indiana railroad land, subject to entry July 1, 1882. Unimproved lands are held at from $7 to $10 per acre, while improved farms average from $15 to $30, in the interior and from $25 to $50 near Charlevoix. The lumber business is an important enterprise in this county. Wood, ties, fence-posts, hemlock bark, and logs are cut during the winter, and are shipped during the summer to Chicago, Milwaukee, Racine, and other lake ports. There are several saw-mills in the county, and an iron furnace at Boyne.

W. F. Lanes has gone to Elsie.

Special meetings this week at the M. E. church.

A severe wind and snow storm set in on Sunday.

Amos Fox and family returned home yesterday.

Dr. G. W. Crouter is expected home on Friday.

H. Lee Ibbings has gone to Albion for a short vacation.

Will See is out again, recovering from his recent illness.

One of our exchanges crows over new subscribers in one week.

The new furnace warms the M. E. church in a very satisfactory manner.

Miss Lizzie Wyman, of Boyne City, is organist, is at home for a few weeks.

Stockman & Ibbings have some very fine hanging lamps on exhibition.

The first sleigh and bells Tuesday morning, from the livery of J. Milo Eaton.

L. D. Bartholomew has a fine lot of deer antlers on exhibition at his warehouse.

The cross-walk near the JOURNAL office has been repaired since our last issue.

Miss Florence Cole returned home from Cross Village last Thursday afternoon.

H. B. Chapman, of Bay Springs, has spent considerable time in Charlevoix this week.

The weekly Detroit Free Press and the JOURNAL one year for $2.00, cash in advance now.

Nichols & Morgan, of Boyne, are furnishing the Charlevoix Mfg. Co. with 50,000 brick.

C. W. Littlefield and Wm. Chaney, of Boyne, have moved their families to Washington Territory.

Miss Josie Stauffer began teaching the winter term of school at Carpenter, Emmet Co., on the 5th.

The last number of the Traverse City Eagle was a double number, well filled with advertisements.

Presiding Elder Stinchcomb, of this district, will conduct the services at the M. E. church Sunday evening.

Congregational services will be held at the school house hereafter until the new church is completed.

A. E. Martin, late of Charlotte, has entered into partnership with Norton & Keat, attorneys at law at Boyne.

Old residents say the blizzard of Sunday and Monday was the severest they had ever known in this region.

Wm. Ingalls, Jerry Mobis and Peter Goon of Banks, are all building houses which they expect to occupy before winter sets in.

The Charlevoix JOURNAL presents its readers with exceedingly correct views of the town and summer resorts.—Kalamazoo Telegraph.

Mr. Lauch has received a large addional lot of vines from the east, in good condition, for his cranberry marsh, and the weather permits these will all be set this fall. If not, they will be covered with water and planted in the spring, at which time the tract planted will be enlarged to ten acres.—C. T. Herald.

There is a move being made to organize a circuit of the M. E. church, to include four, and possibly five, appointments, with headquarters in Charlevoix.

D. C. Nettleton has a novel arrangement for shaping iron raves for lumber sleighs, by which three men can do the work of several times as many at the forge.

At the morning services of the M. E. church next Sunday, the pastor will discuss "the resurrection of the body." In the evening there will be preaching by the presiding elder, followed by the sacrament.

C. F. Sizer, contractor for building the Chapman hotel at Bay Springs, and a plasterer named Slater, fell from the fourth story to the basement last Friday, and were severely injured. The wonder is that they were not both instantly killed.

It is said that a citizen of Banks township, well up in official honors, sets an example to the growing generation hardly to be commended. On a recent Sunday he was seen digging potatoes, and at another time (on Sunday) lead a game of base ball.

Last week we mentioned a certain class of new goods just received by one of our business firms, and up to Monday noon they say more than a dozen persons mentioned having seen the notice, and wanted to see the goods. Advertising for yourself; Does advertising pay?

A late number of the Charlevoix JOURNAL contains a bird's eye view of that place, showing the harbor, summer resorts, lakes and surroundings. The view is a wood engraving and is the creditable work of an amateur artist of our former townsman, F. S. Blanchard.—Albion Republican.

One of the chimneys in the Lewis block burned out during the storm Sunday evening, and for a few minutes there were prospects of a right lively moving out of the occupants of the block, and others in range, but fortunately the fire was confined to the chimney and no damage resulted.

The Grand Traverse Herald gives the following as the mail time card of the Elk Rapids and Charlevoix route. Leaving Elk Rapids Monday, Wednesdays, and Fridays, at 1:30 p. m., and arrive in Charlevoix the next day by 11:30 a. m. Leaves Charlevoix Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays, at 1:30 p. m. and arrive in Elk Rapids the next day by 11 a. m.

Mr. C. F. Gates, of Chicago, one of our popular summer residents, has a deep interest in the welfare of the Congregational society of Charlevoix, and gave $82 worth of paints and oils, and through his influence among friends, the amount was raised to over $112. This is a most generous gift, and is to be appreciated by the society. May they live long and prosper.

Last Thursday evening a number of the friends of Hon. and Mrs. C. F. Van Anden gathered at their new residence on Clinton street, and proceeded to make themselves merry, the occasion being the 52d birthday of Mr. Van Anden. A number of presents were made. An excellent oyster supper and other refreshments were provided by the ladies, which added much to the pleasures of the occasion. The party remained until a late hour, and all expressed themselves well pleased with their visit.

Mr. Stauffer has decided to put a saw mill and handle factory on his farm eight miles southwest of town. He is situated right in a section of country heavily timbered with a fine class of timber, peculiarly adapted to this kind of business, and only three miles from Horton's Bay, on Pine lake, which affords good shipping facilities for manufactures. He would like a partner in the business with a small capital. Such a man would find in its advantages to address him at Carpenter, Emmet Co., Mich. Mr. Stauffer has the owner of an extensive amount of excellent timber on his own land.—Petoskey Democrat.

We recommend to the ladies of the churches here, the getting up of cheap suppers of specials in some convenient place near the business part of the village. The Central M. E. church in Lansing is located near the center of business, and is provided with a basement for prayer meetings, socials, etc. As often as once in two weeks a committee is appointed from the ladies of the society to solicit provisions, and prepare and wait on tables. An alphabetical list of names being prepared, the appointment of the committee is simply to designate a number, beginning with A, the number depending somewhat on their ability to provide, and this committee settle among themselves what shall be provided. They serve cold meats, baked beans, biscuit and butter, coffee, cheese, pickles, and all kinds of cake. This supper is given for ten cents, and is ready from 5:30 to 9:00 o'clock; being convenient to business, it is patronized by business men, clerks, mechanics and their families, and in fact by people generally, who want a good supper quick and cheap. These socials are known as "ten cent teas," and have become very popular, the receipts frequently being from twenty to thirty dollars. After supper, they take the evening for pleasure, and never fail to have a good time. The provisions are substantial but comparatively inexpensive, and being contributed by the ladies, leaves nearly all the gross receipts as a profit for the society. Hot coffee and baked beans make a supper to be relished by a working man at any time, and most any of them can afford ten cents, especially when it goes to the church.

Miscellaneous Marine News.

Lake Michigan is having a high old time these days.

One of our fishermen lost over $200 worth of nets during the late storm.

The steam barge Geo. L. Colwell arrived Sunday with a new mill for the Pine Lake Lumber Co.

The loss to the fishermen in nets, line, etc., cannot be estimated until the weather becomes settled.

The new revetment on the south side of the channel was considerably injured by the storm this week.

Wrecking tug Leviathan returned to Cheboygan from the scene of disaster to the schooner Ketchum, and reports that she is a total loss. Her outfit was saved.

The tug S. S. Cox, of Milwaukee, equipped with steam pump etc., stopped here last Thursday night, on her way to the assistance of the schooner Louis K. Clark, on the beach near Cross Village.

The propeller John Otis brought in from Manitowoc, Wis., on her last trip, 80 tons baled hay, 10 tons bran, 600 barrels flour, and one and one-half tons of butter for the Pine Lake Iron Co.'s supply horse.

The Goodrich Transportation steamer Menominee, which has been making tri-weekly trips between Chicago and Grand Haven, made her last trip for this season last Friday. She will go into winter quarters at Manitowoc, Wis.

The schooner Rudiesl, which sprung a leak outside and ran to the Manitous, arrived in Chicago in tow of the tug Williams, of Manistee. Her outfit and deckload the cargo is lost are intact, but she is leaking at the rate of ten inches an hour. She will go into dry dock.

The revenue cutter Andy Johnson is under orders to go to Mackinac to meet the new government steamer recently built at Buffalo and intended for Mobile. The Commander is using her convoy for the new steamer to Mackinac and the Johnson will accompany her to Chicago. She goes down the Mississippi.

The schooner Rush Bay left Charlevoix for Sheboygan, Wis., last Thursday. On her return she was caught by the gale on Sunday near the Manitous, where she took shelter for the night. Monday afternoon she came through, reaching our harbor in the evening. Considering all the circumstances it was a quick trip.

Many vessels and steamers are laying up. The season has been a bad one throughout and few vessels have made any money, still the number of new boats projected to be built this winter is as large as ever. They will be of the very largest size and of the latest design, and will be able to make money on rates that will starve small boats out. Ex.

The tug S. S. Cox, of Milwaukee, which went on Friday to the relief of the schooner Louis K. Clark, on the beach near Cross Village, had released her, and started away but was obliged to let go again, and went to Cheboygan for shelter. The schooner drifted ashore, and three men, including the engineer of the steam pump, were drowned.

A Milwaukee dispatch says the schooner Ashtabula, from Chicago for Escanaba, foundered three miles off North point, Sunday afternoon about 3 o'clock. The crew took to the yawl, and were picked up by the tug Starke Brothers, which was on her way to the schooner at the time she went down. The Ashtabula had on board 450 tons coke of salt, and two tons of box stuff.

Last Sunday afternoon the large three-mast schooner Elizabeth Dones, bound from Chicago to Buffalo with a cargo of 40,000 bushels of corn, ran on the reef off Racine. A heavy southwest gale prevailed at the time, and the vessel had lost her forward canvas. Both the cargo and the vessel are insured. She is out about three feet. Some of the cargo wet. The crew are all safe.

The new dock at Petoskey, as well as what was left of the old one, and the one at Bay View, were carried away Sunday night. The shore is lined for several miles around the bay with floating debris of all kinds, including house-hold goods and merchandise from the warehouse on the new dock. The loss to the village is about $10,000, while the loss to H. O. Rose on the old dock and the Bay View society can hardly be estimated.

Perhaps one of the saddest occurrences in this region was the drowning of seven men at Petoskey Sunday, the following particulars of which we gleen from the Grand Rapids Democrat of Tuesday: About 3:30 p. m. Mr. O. M. Climo, superintendent of the state fish hatcheries, with Mr. C. H. Brownell, assistant, and George W. Armstrong, foreman of the Petoskey hatchery, left Harbor Springs in a Mackinaw sail boat to return to Petoskey. The boat was manned by Moses Detwiler, former fish inspector in Canada, his two sons, Charles and George, and a nephew, George Detwiler, making seven persons in the boat. They were urged not to attempt the trip, as a terrible gale was blowing at the time from the northwest. When about one mile north of the new dock the boat was seen to capsize, precipitating the whole party into the water. The alarm was at once given and a volunteer crew of five went out in the yacht Coral to attempt a rescue, consisting of J. W. Cook, J. J. Atkins, Chester Carpenter, C. P. Hensley, and John C. Shirk. When about two miles out they passed the hat with two men clinging to it, but before the boat could be put about they lost sight of it and could not find it again and succeeded in saving themselves by almost superhuman exertions. The boat which the unfortunate men attempted to cross in, came ashore near Bay View, but no trace has yet been found of the bodies of the drowned, although the shore has been patrolled constantly up to the present time (10 p. m.), and the probabilities are that none of them can be recovered at present, as a heavy sea is running which makes an undercurrent from the shore.

South Arm.

Splendid autumn weather with occasional rain-storms.

No more will Joseph carry the mail: it is now on the Wing.

Will Freeman came near getting drowned last Sunday while cruising on the Intermediate, but was rescued by Mr. H. B. Hipp.

Mr. McArthur visited friends in Jordan township last week.

A deer was shot in Feb. by Charles Spidle, weighing 246 pounds.

H. L. Page, of East Jordan, took a trip through the country last Sunday.

We are laboring under the impression that the report concerning buildings erected in East Jordan and South Arm are slightly(?) exaggerated or else building costs more there than at other places, which ought not to be the case.

CHRONICLES, CHAPTER I.

It came to pass in the province of Echo, in the days of Chester the King, in the third year of his reign, and in the tenth month of the year, that as the tenth month of the year, that is the tenth month in the district, did lay upon his bed and sleep, that he did dream a dream; and this is the dream that he dreamed. That James had been the mayor of the district had in casting in his account at the council held in the ninth month had not gone astray that he had given securities to the District for $80 more than he ought. As Duncan awakened at the cock-crowing, behold he was robbed and he said unto himself: What meaneth this dream? and behold is the interpretation there of? I will arise and ask James. And straight way he arose and when James heard the dream, he said, "It is even so for the dream is true and the interpretation is even according unto the dream." Therefore it came to pass that they called the other chief man of the district, whose name is George, and held a council, and agreed that it should be according unto the dream, but behold other men agree not thereto. But for the end of the matter will it not be found in the book of chronicles, chapter 2. F. A. S.

Chandler.

Mr. Benj. Burgess is visiting his parents in Shiawassee county and his nephew is doing his chores during his absence.

Mr. Samuel Hughes, who has been doctoring for a cancer, is not expected to live. The cancer is making rapid progress into his vital parts.

There are about forty hunters and trappers camping near C. A. Bisses, in Chandler, and no doubt venison will take a tumble down in price.

Mr. Henry Crunch is at present sawing wood for Bucher & Co., in this town.

The young people of Chandler, had quite a lively time at the house of Elisha Gallop, last Friday night, in the shape of a dance and supper. Joe Hartley was present also. Music was furnished by Upson and Pardee.

Mr. Bob Bucher is seriously contemplating moving to Petoskey very soon. SCRATCH AWL.

Hayes.

Winter has arrived.

Thanksgiving soon.

Everybody busy as bees.

It is a hard matter to find the bottom of the roads now a days.

Mr. Louis Brown, who has been in the south part of the state, the past few months, is visiting friends in Hayes.

What some of our farmers are bound to have good roads was indicated by the way they turned out to the "bee," near Mr. Murrys, one day last week. Owing to the severe storm last Sunday, the people could not attend services at Fair Grove Sunday evening.

We do not profess to be a perfect master of orthography, but when some of the important officers spell Hayes, "Haze," we feel that we have a straw left to us. ZEAL.

We stood for a little together,
The water kissing our feet;
Around us glowed glad bright weather;
The morning and you were sweet.

I thought, as you stood there dreaming,
I was you that lighted the day;
And the water, gleaming and steaming
And hurrying over away.

Vexed with brief flight to lighter,
As past you I fled to the sea,
Seemed to linger a little—and after
I think it agreed with me.

Flighted with the wind and glowing,
Silent you stood awhile,
Hair in the sunlight blowing,
Smiling a dreamy smile.

The water sang, "Love is a treasure,"
"A treasure," my soul replied;
"And the pain of it, and the pleasure,
Sweeter than all besides."

And I saw the wavelets glitter,
And but to kiss your feet;
And I, a wind song, "Life may be bitter,
Her loving can make it sweet."

And laughed and hid and wound you,
Served, finding you fair;
And, the merry sun kissed and crowned you
Up on the morning throne.

Ere rushing fair seemed to love you,
Seemed jocund at your to-do to fall;
And the lark, singing high above you,
Sang you were the fairest of all.

And scarcely a word was spoken,
But a gentle understanding spoke;
Till the dreamy spell was broken
And we sadly and sundered and woke.

And so in the glorious weather,
In the morning blithe and gay,
Happy in being together,
Happily wandered away.

A NIGHT'S BATTLE.

BY LILY M. CURRY.

Without, the wind, sighing softly, lingered in the iron lattice and at intervals brushed the windows with a faint spray of rain. Within, the shadows deepened—deepened from the corners, gradually closing up over all the central barriers of the room and shielding the woman who had thrown herself despairingly across the bed.

She lay very quietly in the darkness; but it was the quiet of bodily exhaustion. She could still think, and her thoughts were a passionate multitude.

A month before, she had believed herself reconciled—aye, even content to walk the weary treadmill of linked days and hope no more. She had ceased to care if she grew roundshouldered as other girls, and pale and pinched from the routine of the dusky factory-cellar, from which she could only see the sweet sunlight creeping into the street along the foremen's stocks, and creeping out again upon the gray buildings opposite, where the afternoon shadow rose like a strong antidote. She had even striven to go cheerfully to her work morning after morning and to put into it all the little heart was left her out of all the tragic past. She had learned to measure off the hours by certain infallible sounds of the city; at half-past 9, the bell ringing for the opening of the warehouses; at 11, the same bell for the closing; at 12, the mess-chests, shouting the noon edition (at 1 she had a half-hour's meantime; at 2, again the warehouse bell; at 5, the early evening paper now the seaside shadow crept toward the third-story windows; at 6, a later edition; and at 7 came the end of the long day, when the whirr of machinery was done and the "hands" in the shipping-room had their dirty jargon and departed, when she, too, tired-eyed and with aching chest, might creep along to her lonesome fourth-story lodgings.

What a starved, stunted existence had been hers since she had come to the city! With what keen anguish she remembered the sweetness of the old, silluent days, past forever! For, standing up to battle with the world, she bore, besides, the awful, burdening recollection of a parent's disgrace. Death had come upon her swiftly, crushingly, that terrible night when her father had cut the knot of his dilemma—insolvency and betrayed public trusts—with a single pistol-shot and so escaped. She had loved him too well to reproach him, dead, for deserting her—for not having prepared her, at least, to work. But all else being gone, she, too, had fled from the old town and flung herself into the whirl of the city. God only knew how hard it had been, and she so weak, so inexperienced! Had she been but lifted, as men fit their sons—but not daughters, alas!—with a profession, or even a trade! This had been her only lament in darkest hours.

Nevertheless, she had found work at last; hard, inexorable, poorly recompensed. For every evening that a single dollar wherewith to purchase food and shelter, clothing and cleanliness, peace and virtue, and the thousand trifles of life. Those who paid it, thought it an excellent price.

And all the shilling summer she had toiled on, silently, uncomplainingly, only at last to lose even this foothold, without wage or warning, at an employer's caprice.

That was a fortnight since—and ever since she had been hunting other employment. Tonight she was penniless and in debt for rent.

She wondered what would happen now. Was it beggary or starvation? The river, or—a charitable institution? Of the two, she chose the river.

When the shadows had conquered, some one struck a match in the long, outer passage, and the hall gas-light shone through the transom. Still she lay silent and listened to the beating of a lamp—patient and persisting—in another apartment of the great building. The sounds paved upon her in fretful continuity. And she was so tired, so hopeless, that she rose but slowly when some one came knocking. She rose but slowly and lit the gas; she smoothed her hair wearily, and stood a second in thought. In the flash of unsteady light, her figure was pitifully fragile; her beauty—for beauty was not wholly wrecked—strange, awsome, with olive-pallor, lustreless-spotted and sharp-lined profile.

She opened the door, at length, and so stood face to face with a man whose bearing and attire bespoke prosperity. Less surprised than annoyed, apparently, she gave him scant welcome.

"Natalie?" he cried, reproachfully, and, entering, seemed disposed to remain.

She hesitated a moment, then closed the door.

"Well," he began, scanning the room with evident comprehension, "How do you get along?"

"Very well," she answered, unwillingly.

"I'm afraid you're not glad to see me," he said, after a moment, as if chagrined.

She was silent.

He drew his chair to her side and spoke appealingly:

"Natalie, why do you hate me so?"

She answered sadly, with drooping head: "It is out of my power to hate, or like—forever."

"Forever!"

She lifted her face with a look of wonder and misgivings; and presently she questioned, as earnestly as had he himself:

"Why do you follow me about, Harvey Drew? It cannot be for old friendships sake, for you were not friend then, but enemy."

"Enemy" is a strong word. I was sore because you preferred Hunt Pierce—that was all. A thousand pities it was that he must be lost at sea just at the heir of your trouble—"

Her solemn eyes rebuked him ere her passion-tremulous words:

"Spare the dead, at least!"

He waved back his chair impatiently. "You were engaged to him, then?"

"Yes," promptly.

"Not married, though?"

"Married!"

"Oh, you might pardon the question. Remember I left the town before the trouble came. I am glad you were not married."

"Why?" she asked, unblushingly.

He smiled in a quiet way, and said nothing.

She bowed in a quick way, and said nothing.

Perhaps he divined as much.

"You are going to send me away?" he asked, smiling faintly.

She grasped the nearest excuse.

"I have not yet been to my supper."

"Come right along with me."

She wondered if he would force her to absolute rudeness.

"Why," he burst out, sharply, "what is the matter?

You won't even be friendly. Don't you suppose I know what a struggle you are having, and all about your financial state? You are too proud altogether, and I—I want to help you."

He lowered his voice, and made a step forward as if to embrace her.

She recoiled, trembling with rage.

"If you have come to insult me, there is the door. You may go. Do not make me hate you!"

Her scornful eyes blazed upon him until his face flushed. He took a step as if to leave, and an oath escaped him. Then he turned, laughing lightly.

"I like your spirit. You are worth winning, Natalie, and—you have misjudged me. I meant no harm, believe me."

She answered with dry incredulity, "Don't do it again."

He waited for remark, and went on: "I am going now, but listen first to what I have to say. I always loved you—you know it, too. I've thought a great deal about marrying you—especially of late, because I knew what hard times you were having, and how pleasant I could make life for you."

She averted her face lest he note the scorn, the repugnance, she could not conceal, as his voice sank into an easy confidence.

How absurd it all seemed! Was he joking? She could not determine. In any event, it was the sheerest mockery; even though he really cared for her, she could neither respect nor esteem, much less love him.

And what if Hunt could know? She shuddered.

"Please, please let it go!" she implored at length. "This is only the wildest fancy. I—I will not doubt your words. But it is absurd. Perhaps you are pitying me. Be certain, I can always sustain myself. I will be your friend, if you like. That should be sufficient, I think," concluding uneasily.

"But, you see, it is not. Ah, Natalie!" with a touch of tenderness, "if you knew how much I cared for you! But—well talk of it to-morrow. I see you want me to go. Good-night, dear." He turned abruptly and swung himself out of the door.

"Good-night," she said, after him, in bewildered tone, and paced the room slowly, trying to reason sense out of his actions.

It was grotesque, horrible, this memory of his. She wondered if he were truly sane! She fell into hysterical laughter. To marry him—despising him as she did! The wildness of hysteria passed away and left her sobbing quietly at her own desolation. That it should have come to pass that she must give a second thought to this man's words. Oh, it was terrible! And now her faced burned with a fever, and her brain was crowded with an uproar of sounds, above which din the banjo was distinct, fretting over one trilling, four-bar strain of a negro song.

Occasionally a sharp thought would pierce the maze—the thought of possibility—the query of whether there could be more torture than she now endured, even if she were to take him at his word. Surely, she could not be worse driven than she was. And if she had yet her by persistent following, he might as well "pay the piper." And she laughed again hysterically. The banjo-player was still beating his instrument in a no reckless way, but the notes were on.

She wished she could find a good side of the matter. It would be a relief to discover some virtue in him. She knew that he was a clever business man and always prosperous. Still, she despised him.

Good heavens! Why keep on going over and over it? Why could she not dismiss it—and him, since he could never be aught to her? What was it she reiterated hearing about a girl marrying a man to get rid of him?

As the hours wore on, the house grew still, the gas-jet and the wind shook the high window sharply. It was growing colder without.

Something she walked to and fro, sometimes she fell despairingly on the bed; always her face burned and her hands were icy and powerless.

She heard a clock strike twelve.

Perhaps he would not return; perhaps he had done this to revenge himself—to rouse her hopes, knowing her distress, and disappoint them.

She felt the need of composing herself to rest, since on the morrow she must search anew.

The rest was due; cold weather coming on. Work must be found.

Merciful heaven! what longings, what anxiety!

Sleep? She dozed a little, despite the gnawing pain. Perhaps this was hunger; she had not eaten since morning. Then she slept heartache.

The clock struck again over the silence—twice.

Why, then, did she still live? Why had she not died that night, when the pistol-shot seemed to pierce her own brain as it pierced her father's? Why had she not died when the news had come of her lover's fate? Lost at sea! Ah, heaven! Since she had once loved and would never love again, it mattered little what happened. Even she might marry this man—if he came again, and were so madly riding would possibly be kind. No; she would struggle no longer; she felt herself grown wonderfully faint. And the worst would be only death; the worst, also the best.

Aye, but if he took her he knew what he was taking. A soulless, worn-out creature, who endured him.

And yet, thousands of women had done infinitely worse.

She was speaking aloud, moaning as if in pain. By-and-by her moans subsided to long-drawn sighs, as though over some dark load she had come to, would say to him," she sighed, if he came again on the morrow, "that if—if he cared so much, he might—take her."

And now she sat upright with blurred vision and dull murmurs in her ears. Was he no longer supreme? No further uncertainty. Only a stupid weariness of mind.

The clock had struck four long since. The blue darkness was resolving into gray at the high window, for dawn approached.

The room seemed stifling. She pushed up the bench, and, as she raised the sash and looked out over the neighboring roof, panting for the freshness of the new day.

Yonder, from behind the great lake, should rise ere long the morning. Already a pale green flickered from thread to shield, and gradually grew golden, glorious, as the slow sun's splendor touched the sky line, and thrilled the dumb heavens to waking rapture.

So kneeling, and gazing, she hardly knew when one of the air pierced her chest like steel; she only saw the glory of liquid gold bridging the great waters—saw, or hoped she saw—and slowly out of those shining precincts she began to seemed to see advance his image—at himself, her lover—glorified, with outstretched, compassionate hands.

She gave a low, moaning cry as if in agony: "See! Ah see! I have been true! I have been true!" Then a mist veiled her heavily; vaguely she knew herself falling.

The room was bright with another soul-mocking morrow when she opened her eyes and found herself lying bruised and cramped where she had fallen from the high sill. It was a great effort to arise. Her limbs were full of pain, sharp-bearing pain. How long before she could straighten herself sufficient to reach up and extinguish the still-burning gas.

Yet there was an inward strength and a strange peace of soul.

When some one knocked she quietly unbolted the door; nor did she start or tremble to find it was Drew, calling early and looking surprised at her haggardness.

"Are you ill?" he asked.

"No; I am—quite well,—and strong."

"Well, I only dropped in on my way to business—and to tell you—to ask you if I should come tonight. Some how I felt as if you treated what I said as a joke. But I was not joking."

She looked at him very calmly.

"I thought it over last night," she said, presently. "I did not think you were joking."

"Well?"

"Well—I do not love you; I cannot sell myself—let it go—and—I thank you."

He was dazed at last; he stared; then flushed angrily.

"You may be sorry, Miss Grey," he said. "Good morning."

She flung herself upon her knees as he turned away, and gave a wild, sobbing cry:

"Thank God! Thank God for temptation—and for the strength to resist—and to suffer!"

Was it the end? Whose brisk step rang in the bare hall? Who threw the door wider and, as he heard her sobs, gave passionate utterance to a long-stored greeting?

"Natalie, my darling!"

She turned as if the dead had called her, turned with sullen face.

"Hunt! Oh, God! You are not dead!"

"Not dead, oh, my loved one!" and his arms received her; and she was safe.—Chicago Ledger.

The Bicycle.

The bicycle has ceased to be merely a costly plaything. It has become one of the great practical conveniences of life, a cheap substitute for a horse in rain, or in part. So it is found to be in Great Britain, where the machines in use are estimated at scores of thousands.

In emergencies it can outstrip the horse, carrying its rider and necessary luggage from fifty to seventy miles a day with but little fatigue to the former, and of course none to itself. Every step on the wheel carries the person two and a half times as far as in walking. Moreover, the legs do not have to bear the weight of the body, and hence their strength is reserved for their proper work.

Says a writer in the British Medical Journal, "On a level the muscular exertion is almost nothing; on a decline it is obviously nothing; hence it is that the inclined part of the road for real work. And here, again, if the hill is steep, muscular power is saved, in that it is varied by a dismount and a pleasant walk to the top."

The number who now use the machine in the United States and Canada exceeds 12,000. Many tourists substitute it for the steamer, and become thereby better acquainted with the country and its people.

A writer in the New York Medical Journal advises its use for various purposes—the exercise being varied, well distributed and taken in the open air and sunshine. It strengthens the heart, broadens the chest, and develops the muscles of the back, loins and legs. It may be prescribed for many to whom horseback riding would be unsuitable. Further, no sport can be more antagonistic to the vice of drunkenness. To learn to ride one requires a steady head.

An objection has been raised to the bicycle that the "jolting" shakes the body, when driving it at full speed, compresses the lungs. This position can be avoided, or made only accidental. Air is the life of the body, and this bicycling gives them.—Youths' Companion.

Rapidity of Thought.

Some recent investigations relating to the speed of thought are thus summed up in the American Journal of Arts and Sciences: "Sensations are transmitted to the brain at a rapidity of about 91 feet per second, or at one-fifth the rate of sound; and this is nearly the same in all individuals. The time required for the nerve-centers to transmit its orders to the nerves which preside over voluntary action; but this amount is not the same in all individuals, and in the same individual at different times, according to the disposition or condition at the time, and is largely regular the concentration of attention. The time required to transmit an order to the muscles by the motor nerves is much the same as that required by the nerves of sensation to pass a sensation; moreover, it passes only one-fourth to two-tenths of a second. Consequently, when we speak of an active, ardent mind, or one that is slow, cold or pathetic, it is not a mere figure of rhetoric, but an absolute and certain fact that such a distinction, with varying gradations, really exists.

BELGIUM is the only country in Europe which, like the United States of America, is free from all censorship. A clause in the Belgium constitution of 1830 declares not only that the "censorship is abolished, but that it can never be re-established." Books and plays which could not pass the censorship in France may be brought out in Belgium; and a comedy by M. Dekar now about to be produced in Brussels, had been condemned and rejected by the theatrical censorship of Paris.

THE Spanish have a proverb: "A man who stumbles twice on the same stone is a fool." There may be a thing very profound in that, but it fail to see it. We can't see why good stone, that will outlast a dog's lifetimes, isn't just as good for a man to do all his stumbling over, as a promiscuous collection of miscellaneous stones, so widely scattered that a car agent couldn't keep track of them. The Spaniards are a wobbling people, but you can't expect much of a people who spell "B" with a "J."

THE KING OF THE COWBOYS.

Bad Man from the Far, Far West in the Bowery.

"I'm a bad man," he said, as he leaned up against the bar of the "Home Tired Men" on the Bowery, and gave the thin barkeeper a look that made him squirm. "Yes, I'm a bad man," continued, as the boys came crowding up. "I'm from the West, the extreme West, where blood, hot blood, is spilled daily by men like me. Say, you," he said, catching the eye of a man with a large red pimple on his nose, "did you ever hear of Big-Headed Jack?"

The tall man answered that he had heard of Red-Headed Mike, but the pimple on his nose turned a ghastly pale, and he fell shaking into a chair as the Bad Man drew a revolver and barked that this was no time for re-called men.

"Perhaps some gentleman here has heard of Big-Headed Jack," he said, as glanced around at the boys, but a dead silence prevailing, he continued, "Well, Jack was a tough man, a game to Rattlesnake Bend to take town. He took the largest portion anything he came across me. I shot seven holes in him. I've got a wagon-load of bijun scalps I 'raised' myself had, but I'm nothing unless ex-cited. Three lives, till 'em up for the ers.' At this evidence of a link to a human humanity the boys rallied around him.

"Treat me something powerful, boss, nothing that will make no feel as though the wind was blowing right off my prairies on me once again. Ah, I'm a reckless dare-devil. Give me nothing powerful to soothe me."

I suppose you have seen a good deal blood shed in your time, sir," said a man in the rear.

My life has been but turmoil and rapine. Devastation and horror have been in their midst. Men in the West, the farthest West, call me the King of the Cowboys."

A shudder ran through the crowd. The tall man with a red pimple on his nose disappeared through a side door.

"And red," said the Bad Man, musingly. "I was once a quiet, law-abiding citizen, knowing nothing of crime."

Say, dad," said a large-headed boy standing by himself through the door far enough to reveal a mouth extended ear to ear in a general smile, "Ma won't know anything for a cent if you don't come and carry them down right off. You'd better stay that pistol and come nightly quick. It's vanpy."

The King of the Cowboys looked mild with a sickly smile. A very slight gleamed in the eyes of the barkeeper. The Bad Man got through the door first, and the thin keeper came back looking morose and unsocial, and, taking a piece of ink, added to the sign over the bar of credit given here," the said wood alley, after which a look of interest appeared in the passersby of the ple, and the thin barkeeper was left his elbows on the bar, lonesomely gazing at his hair.—New York Journal.

Nutritiveness of Rice.

The increase in the consumption of has lately attracted the attention of medical men of science in Germany, and many other investigations, according to the Lancet, an authority has been made by Prof. Voit to discover the relative nutritive quality of which various forms of nourishment may be digested and made into the system. He has drawn the following table of the percentages which remain in the body, and of which leaves it:

	Remains in body.	Leaves body undigested.
Beef	97.6	2.4
Peas	96.1	3.9
Eggs	94.7	5.3
Beans	94.6	5.6
Milk	94.5	5.5
Wheat	90.7	9.3
Potatoes	90.5	9.5
Bread	88.5	11.5

Judging by these results, the Bremer Heidelatt remarks, meat and rice are the smallest amount of residuum, and also the smallest excessive exercise in the digestive organs, and, in fact, the minimum quantity of all to the human frame. Dr. Konig, of Munster, considers that the fact of insects of population living on easily-secured fat, and in similar the information derived upon Prof. Voit remarks, when consumed in excessive ly make the blood watery and the muscles weak. Apart from digest, dealt with in the table by Prof. Voit, the question of nutritive value of rice and has been investigated by Dr. who is of the opinion that, quantities of both articles are the former possesses four the value of the latter in really rice properties.

It also remarked that the introduction of rice as a substitute for is facilitated by the fact that no alteration takes place in its quality the case with the potato, which is to be materially influenced by effects of unfavorable weather.

Man Losing His Teeth.

The saddest fields of the future is the field-dream of the speculator, Simeon Ridea, P. E. S., has lately that the average tooth of the European shows under the sharpe a distinct deterioration of from and loss of substance in the with the tooth of the Esquiman, Red Indian, and the Asiantee, as with those found in the ancient of England. And not only is quality degenerating, but there is a tendency likewise toward diminution of quality. The cranium develops at the expense of the face and jaws, and as the space required for the teeth diminishes, their number likewise decreases. While the lower vertebrates have four grinders on each side in each jaw, the highest have three, while in man their number is reduced to two. Nor is it expected that the diminution will stop here if the average size of the human skull goes on increasing as it is now doing. Fortunately, the question does not press.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Canadian Bazar.

Mr. John Osborne, Musical Bazar, Toronto, Canada, writes that his wife was cured of rheumatism by the great pain-banisher, St. Jacobs Oil; that he has found it an invaluable remedy for many ailments.

Brilliant Financial Stroke.

A gentleman riding along the road near Del Valle saw a shiftless looking fellow seated on the top rail of a fence whittling, and he said to him:

"See here, my friend, you ought to be ashamed of yourself sitting there on the fence whittling."

"I made $5 here yesterday, and I reckon that pays."

"Made $5 whittling on a fence. I would like to know how you did it."

"Why, you see, Cuc, if I hadn't been here I'd have gone to Austin and got drunk. Then they would have fined me $5, so I consider that I am just that much ahead, don't you see?"

"Yes, yes, you are right," said the man; "you keep right on at that rate and you will be a day Gould before you know it."—Texas Siftings.

A Little Pain at First.

Years of torture afterward. Such is the wretched experience of too many rheumatic sufferers. Slight twinges in the bones or muscles, attributed possibly to a cold, usually decide themselves by their increasing intensity, as evidences of the grim-bone malady. But why give it headway. Why not eradicate it at the start with the best, the fastest West, call me the King of the Cowboys."

Judging by these results, the Bremer Heidelatt remarks, meat and rice are the smallest amount of residuum, and also the smallest excessive exercise in the digestive organs, and, in fact, the minimum quantity of all to the human frame. Dr. Konig, of Munster, considers that the fact of insects of population living on easily-secured fat, and in similar the information derived upon Prof. Voit remarks, when consumed in excessive ly make the blood watery and the muscles weak. Apart from digest, dealt with in the table by Prof. Voit, the question of nutritive value of rice and has been investigated by Dr. who is of the opinion that, quantities of both articles are the former possesses four the value of the latter in really rice properties.

It also remarked that the introduction of rice as a substitute for is facilitated by the fact that no alteration takes place in its quality the case with the potato, which is to be materially influenced by effects of unfavorable weather.

LABOR A BURDEN.

For a number of years my wife has been a severe sufferer at times with indigestion and kidney and liver troubles. She had such severe pains in the back that she at times became very much discouraged. Nothing she took seemed to do her any good, relief. She had used several medicines, but only received temporary relief from any of them until she commenced using Hunt's Remedy, which was recommended to her by druggist Smith, of Auburn, saying that it had been used for a good many years with great success for the cured kidney, liver and bladder troubles. She commenced using it, and found by the use of only one bottle she had been relieved of the pains in her back had regained her appetite, and could rest well and attend to her household duties, and we can truly say that Hunt's Remedy is a most wonderful medicine, and cheerfully recommend it to the public.

HIGHER EDUCATION.

A Couple of Brooklyn Girls Try to Get Chosts.

[From the Brooklyn Eagle.]

"My dear girl," said one girl to a lady friend, "I want you to go with me to-night and hear Prof. Stone lecture."

"Who is he? and what will he lecture about?"

"Oh, he's lovely, a Boston man, and is going to lecture on the 'Higher Education of Women.' Message will be very instructive, and you says its only for a lot of old stuffers, and when I and ma talk like that I know its something worth hearing."

"Is it about it awful? Will he be long?"

"Oh, my, no; its about Columbia College, and ma says—"

"How nice," interrupted the other. "Wonder if he'll single out class Cousin Ned's a Columbia boy, and on vacation he came here Hang it Didyou ever hear this:

"I wish I were a lily-maiden,
I would not be a rose,
Or a tulip on the border
Where everybody goes."

"It's too cute for anything; and then there was one beginning—"

"No, no, dear," said the fat Brooklyn young lady; "its about starting young ladies into this college. Ma says—"

"Why, goodness me, Minnie, Cousin Ned told me all about the entrements, and how they chased and ran all this at the college, and the Stone pretends that no woman has ever been admitted."

"But, Nellie dear, he means that admitting of women into the college students."

"Oh, that! well, then, my dear, I've got married, and don't want ever to hear of books again. It makes my head ache more than exam. exam., or any day's work does. Did I ever tell you our baby? It has two whole coral crowns and a—"

"Ma says that we were an old fool, and only be higher education in women gain sir ough to force it on you."

"What yokes?" queried Nellie, imagining.

"Oh! I don't know; they are always having it out over some question or ma says I am. But I'm going to be home just in time to—"

"Well, you must tell me all about it, as I'm always talking and pa can hold his own, so I get the benefit on all their conversations. I get all the religious and higher education from ma, and politics and dynamite talk from pa."

"But you need to be always talking about art and culture and tone; now—"

"Oh, that's old. Ma says that was first a passing fancy, but this higher education is the thing now. Will you go to-night?"

"Would love to, but am going to the opera with Cousin Ned. Goodby, dear; tell you ma I'm coming to see her soon," and the young ladies separated, each impressed with the idea that she had spent a very profitable half hour.

Trouble Among the "Nashville Students."

Harry B. Thatcher is manipulator of "colored vocalists," and his present venture is termed the "Original Nashville Students." Among the artists whom he employs are Walter S. Tipton and Nellie S. Tipton, two vocalists of the deepest dye. These lyric artists are employed at the munificent salary of $20 a week each, and are expected to grind out the most soul-stirring, ear-subduing southern plantation songs upon a ditt which that amount of pone will buy. This was good enough for them when they left the cotton fields of their humble youth, but when they had entered some of the swell hotels of Illinois and Indiana they began to see starvation staring them in the face. They demanded a raise, but Manager Thatcher wouldn't "see them" and merely mentioned the fact that he held their contract to sing for him at so much per week and dime. Then they were mad. They said the "old skin" could "take down on the box path." So they refused to sing or to appear on the stage, and Thatcher was granted a temporary injunction restraining them from singing with any other company.—Chicago Herald.

Fun With Bees.

Swarming season approached and Mr. Roberts made ready for his apiarian harvest by preparing guns and conveniently placing tin pans, bells, horseshoes and other instruments of music likely to compose and charm a swarm of bees on taking French leave. The hands of bees were some four or twelve feet from the ground, and the object was to land them safely within the bee gum. A serious difficulty beset Mr. Roberts, to wit, how to bring the gun in proximity with the bees and retain it there. Yesterday he got forth a sage in the person of "Blind Phil," a colored man on the place, who is nearly or quite blind. "Here, Phil, come here," said Mr. Roberts. "I want you to hold this bee gum for me and I will load the bees, some I shall fire around a tree in the grove, and the rest I will fire in the air, and you are to have nothing to do but hold the gum and keep it steady." "Yes, sah," said Phil, and so matters were arranged. The bees were plentiful about, and soon settled on the tree. Mr. Roberts fired, and Phil, grasping the gum, held it steady. Mr. Roberts fired again, and Phil's countenance began to shine and Phil's gum commenced moving, but Mr. Roberts was equal to the occasion and fired again and again, and Phil's gum moved more rapidly. Mr. Roberts fired again and Phil's gum moved more rapidly still, and Phil's countenance shone with ineffable joy, and

MRS. HECDER, who was drowned at Erie, was the fifth member of the family to perish that way. They believed they were doomed by a curse uttered by an ancestor in Bavaria.

WHILE a young couple were being married in St. Louis the other day, the church-bell tolled, and a coffin and mourners came up the aisle as they walked down. Outside, in place of their carriage, was the hearse. So, altogether, they had a somber time of it.

A MORMON settlement in Idaho is five miles long, extending from Clifton to Oxford. It is called Stringtown, and the homesteads are so taken up that the residences of the homesteaders are within 300 feet of each other, and the farms are mere strips of land from 250 to 300 feet in width. The land was taken up in this manner to give every settler frontage on the public road.

STANLEY, the explorer, introduces all the travelers he meets with in the wilds of Africa to the natives as his sons, in order that they may proceed with safety. Recently an explorer came along with a colored servant, and Stanley was asked how he came to have two sons of different color. "Oh, that is the son of my old wife, not the new one," he replied, as he pointed to the negro.

THE sense of convicted murderers in California cannot be hanged until the Supreme court has decided a legal point in the new constitution. They were convicted on "information and belief," instead of on indictments presented by the Grand Jury. The lawyers who drafted the new constitution held that this was in conflict with the Federal constitution, and the United States Circuit court, to which a case was appealed, took this ground.

STAUGHTER BASSETT, of Lexington, Ky., paid $5 for the front doorsill of the old court-house of that place when the building was torn down. It is of stone, and is prized by Bassett because Henry Clay and Aaron Burr stood upon it when the latter asked Clay to defend him, and he pledged his honor that he was innocent of an attempt at a Western conspiracy. Receiving the pledge, Clay appeared in Burr's defense, but afterward declined to speak to him when he found out that Burr had lied.

MR TALMAGE is quite right. He says of the Mormon business: "James Buchanan's administration adjourned it to Abraham Lincoln. Lincoln's administration adjourned it to Andrew Johnson, Johnson adjourned it to Gen. Grant, Gen. Grant to Rutherford B. Hayes, Hayes to Garfield, and Gen. Garfield adjourned it to President Arthur. President Arthur, no doubt, would like to adjourn it to himself or another term, and then hand it as a vexatious legacy to his successor."

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS, who is well-known in Socorro county, New Mexico, has sold a third interest in his lake find for $18,000. While prospecting he found his haversack on fire, his prospectors' ghost having foensed the sun's rays upon it. As the haversack contained six pounds of powder, he dropped it and got out of the way. It fell into a crevice, and a large mass of rock was blown up. Adams turned mournfully to gather up what might be left of his effects, and found a vein of silver that the explosion had exposed to view.

ONE of the newest things under the sun is the "Correspondence University." The Secretary of this novelty is Prof. E. A. Watt, of Cornell University. It is an association of eminent instructors in various institutions of this country and Great Britain, whose object will be to give instruction in all subjects which can be taught by correspondence, not taking the place at all of existing educational institutions, but supplementing them with instruction for persons who from any cause whatever are unable to attend high-schools of learning. The nearest approach to a precedent for such a system is at the Chautauqua plan of Dr. Vincent.

tons, from which he deduced the opinion that the adults of this mysterious race were from six to eight feet in height, and well built in proportion. Among the Doctor's collection was an inferior maxillary bone containing a full set of teeth in a perfect state of preservation. The teeth differed somewhat from those of the Anglo-Saxon race, in that the molar or jaw teeth were bicuspid. The skulls, however, had none of the animal cast in any particular, being round and massive, denoting great brain power.

MONEY was urgently needed by a church at Blandford, Mass., and a committee, with the pastor at his head, devised a novel scheme. A challenge was sent to a number of young men at Westfield to come out and hunt squirrels all day, and at night eat a supper in the church, the party which had killed the least game to pay $1 each for all the meals served. To the surprise of the church members who had joined in the hunt, the marksmen from Westfield beat them; but the Springfield Republican is authority for the charge that when it came to a count, a number of squirrels that had been shot several days before were fraudulently introduced, so that the church came out financially victors.

THE number of wealthy members of Congress increases. Col. Lyman, of Massachusetts, is one of the new members who will entertain elaborately next winter. He inherited great wealth. Washburn, of Minnesota, has rented Don Cameron's house, and will give lavish receptions. Of the new Senators nearly all are rich. Bowen, of Colorado, is a mining lord. Sabin, of Minnesota, went from Connecticut twenty years ago, and is now very rich. Dolph, of Oregon, is a thrifty corporation attorney. Colquitt is one of the best-to-do men in Georgia, and Gibson, of Louisiana, inherited wealth. There are not many poor men left in the Senate. Count out Blair, Frye, Kenna of Florida, and Riddleberger, and the rest are accounted rich.

ACCORDING to the Washington critic who watched the two brothers at a restaurant, Senator Sherman breaks his bread into small bits and nibbles at the potato. The General takes a half roll in his hand, dashes an ounce of butter over it, and quarters it with his mouth; he halves a potato in its jacket, and, with one movement, adds butter, pepper and salt. In talking the General gangs his voice to the interest in his subject, and can be heard across the room. The Senator is cautious, and looks up adroitly beneath his eyebrow. The Senator eats like a bashful man. The General stabs his meat with his fork as if to say, "You're my meat, and I'll eat you alive." If annoyed, he buckets grits out in a deep bass voice. The Senator only smiles. His smiles are hearty, though, and he enjoys that which amuses him.

THE vitality of the German Emperor, says a London journal, is a source of unceasing astonishment and admiration. He is now well on his way to 87 — 13 years older than his great ancestor, "Old Fritz," when that mercurial's tough constitution broke down under the weight of years and the cares of Government—and his life has been one of the most wearing activity. Yet he was on horseback Saturday, despite the weather, for three hours, and was today he was busy all day in discharging various formal functions of royalty. In favor of this marvelous and sustained vigor it needs the Emperor's own words in his touching address to the Fourth army corps to remind the world how close he necessarily is to the end of his extraordinary career. "It was a joy and honor to me," he says, "to see the army corps once more. Probably it is the last time. At my age one makes no plans." Yet the event which the Emperor looks so steadfastly in the face will make the greatest changes, perhaps in the foreign and certainly in the domestic relations of his empire. By no career of our time has the innocuse in the personal element in politics been more clearly illustrated.

THE greatest beautifier of a woman is notoriety. The eloped, the abducted, the victim and the victimized of the fair sex all continue to be "remarkably handsome" or "extremely beautiful." It is seldom that one is marked down so: I was "uncommonly pretty."—Boston Herald.

MEN of noble birth are noted to be cavians toward new men that rise; for the distance is altered and it is like a deceit of the eye, that when others come on they think themselves go back a lace. - Bacon.

GOSSIP FOR THE LADIES.

An Idle Idyl.

Just then upon a golden flower
A butterfly alighted,
And waved its wings about as though
Everything delighted.
And so it should have been. The day
Was very warm and sunny,
And all the insects whirred and whizzed,
They found such lots of honey.
She style caught it in her hand,
And while it gently nodding
He humbly approached and gave
Her an esthetic scolding.
"How can you so? Pie! let it go,
The gem of flying things is,
A lesson hearing everywhere
Of beauty on its wingletes."
"Oh, certainly, I'll set it free,
I'll will give you I assure
To see it fly," she said, and soon
All flew the airy treasure.

"I doubt how anther grows the grass,"
He murmured. "Soon the reaper
Will come," when on his ear there fell
A many-legged creeper.
Upon his feet he quickly sprang,
And to the ground he dashed it.
"A horrid enter plier I do,"
He should'ring cried and mashed it.
"Ah me! ah woe! How could you so?"
She sighed. "The wretched insect!
It was of some bright butterfly
A daughteries or sonlet."

Ideal Marriage.

The best and purest girl, she who holds the highest ideal, cannot be sure of realizing true marriage unless she has been trained in the sacred laws of her being, and unless she knows to a certainty the character of the man who offers her his love.

Ideal marriage is not one-sided. The man must be striving toward perfection as well as the woman, and of this she must be certain before she takes the marriage vow.

As the first important factor is the possession of high ideals, the second is the possession of knowledge—knowledge of the laws of life, of what married life is in all its phases, of its possibilities, its dangers, and its sorrows, as well as of its joys.

How few men understand women! How few women understand men! And yet no man or woman ought to marry without each first knowing the whole life of the other.—Harriet K. Shattuck.

Mrs. Carlyle.

Mrs. Carlyle failed to reach happiness because she had ambition without genius, and intellect without a career, and has to be content with a subordinate part in life. She ought to have considered that her existence was really of no importance to the universe; but her husband's works had power to send the world on its path of progress with mighty tangential force, and to drive a current of new life into the heart of the century. He was necessary to humanity; but she was only necessary to smooth the path his soul traveled. She had the duty to obey the beautiful instinct of a loving wife, and in this she ought to have found happiness; but she only thought of the small annoyances that lay in her own pathway, pronounced herself "miserable"—though holding the proud position of wife to the greatest man of his century! Yet she loved him as well as her nature would permit; but egotism can never love wisely nor see the glory through the mist. All the trials that made her "miserable" resulted more from faults in her own disposition than from her husband's temper. Had she married the village schoolmaster, she might have been happier. A keen, clever, domineering Scotch woman, with her sharp tongue and her broad Scotch accent, would have ruled the parish admirably. Thus she missed her right destiny; but Carlyle raised her to eminence as his wife, gave her station and dignity in the great capital of the world; and in return she darkened his fame, gave his name to the scoffers, and chilled the enthusiastic heart that would have raised memorials to his honor.—Lady Wilde, in London Queen.

The Shocking Card of a Summer Captive.

Her aristocratic manner and rich, elaborate toilet seemed somewhat out of place in the plebeian surroundings of the Fifth avenue stage, New York. Drawing her skirts about her she retired as far as possible into a corner seat and gazed persistently out of the window. On the opposite side sat a neatly attired young man with carefully waxed mustache, gloved hands and an air generally suggestive of the clergy. He glanced at the fair vision in the corner from time to time in a reproachful manner. She looked imploringly at him from beneath her lashes, and finally deciding that he rightfully belonged to the army of spasmodic negatives that had laid their hearts at her feet, she concluded to end his misery by recognizing him.

"You are very kind to remember me," he said.

"Oh, no," she replied, with an air of polite reserve, as she tried to place him. "I recall perfectly the pleasant occasion on which we met."

A few commonplaces followed and, emboldened at his success, the gentleman gravely as he drew forth a pink-tinted card:

"I hope you will permit me to call upon you again. I shall be happy to serve you."

She glanced at the card, a wave of color swept over her face and drawing down her veil she jerked the strap, and bounced out of the stage with the precipitancy of a battled base ball. The address upon the card was: "H. Billinger, chiropodist. Corns and bunions extracted without pain or loss of blood."—New York World.

Light Abroad.

The girl who at 18 can walk five miles, or ride ten on horseback, or row a boat, or eat something more than a scrap of toast for her breakfast, is not very likely to be a neuralgic invalid at 30 nor a chronic sceold at 45. Equally the woman who recognizes her own individuality makes its strength and its beauty in every way a blessing and a boon to her home and her husband, her children and her country. There are those of the gentler sex who do not know what they really do wish for, who cry aloud in glittering generalities and deplore the degeneracy o. the masculine portion of humanity, condemning men in adjectives which make them burn with shame for the women who say them as well as for themselves, against whom the cries are sounded. Now, if maternal love is what all the world believes it is, if it has heights yet untained, depths yet unfathomed, and tenderness which may work new miracles in the physical and spiritual life of men, if these things be true, and they are true, there is a new light ahead to shine on that very misty question of woman's place and woman's work. Poets always say beautiful things about woman; the most prosaic of men get enthusiastic in preparing the toast to her honor which always follows a festal dinner. A woman likes the praise of men, but she need never fear ceasing to receive it. If she elevates herself spiritually, and therefore physically—physically, and therefore spiritually—she will only raise their admiration and admiration nearer the plane that means health and happiness to both.—Interocean.

Athletic Girls.

The bloom of health is on the cheek of the really up-to-up fashionable girl of the metropolis, writes Clara Belle from New York. The profession is that it was put there by rugged physical training during the summer outing that she has played lawn tennis, pedestrianized and gymnasticated so much that the ruddy hue is truly indicative of rich, rushing blood. As a matter of fact, they have been painted on with a brush. I am told that the sale of rouge has suddenly increased, and that pearl powder is correspondingly a drug in the market. It is not more than a year ago—nay, not so much—since gluttinous was considered desirable. Even plump and very earthly creatures whitened their cheeks and shaded with black under their eyes, in order to give exceeding pallor, Camille. Now their model is the rosette milkmaid. No longer is it desirable to be strong. Adipose tissue is despised and muscle is excelled.

"Feel that," said a friend whom I met in a parlor after her season out of doors.

She put my hand on her arm, and way between the elbow and the shoulder. She had a splendid muscle. And as ever under a single thickness of lace, and the roundness was charming.

"Grip hard," she commanded.

I clasped the arm with both hands. Then she shut her fist and drew it back to her own pate. I was certain that my hands rose such a bunch of muscles as I had never felt before, except when in the days of my youth I danced the waltz. This girl had been rowing daily all summer. The palms of her hands were callously, and she has to wear gloves a whole size bigger than she used to, but she is elated all the same. She doesn't lift so much as a cup of tea without proceeding to bring that into muscle; and I actually saw her writing a letter and making the biceps show through the tight sleeve of her dress at every stroke of the pen.

"And look at this," she said, as we were together in the boudoir. What size proudly called my attention to was the fact that, in walking across the room, the action of the muscles in her calves was visible on the surface of her stockings!

"What a pity you're not going to dance in the ballet, instead of in the ball-room," I remarked.

"You are only envious," was her retort.

"Not a bit of it," I replied; "I haven't any desire to be an athlete. Besides, you are not the lady to keep your muscle through the winter."

"Won't I, Clara Belle?" and she led me into an adjoining closet. "There's what will do it, my beery."

Perhaps some of my readers wish to cultivate their muscle, and so I will tell you how to do it. Dumb-bells are recommended. You can also eat fix it yourself. The requirements are two pulleys, two eight-pound window weights, a strong cord and a strip of plank with two holes in it. The cord must run through the holes in the plank and suspend the weights. The exercise is obtained by pulling at the ends of the cord. You are to assume all sorts of positions, so as to bring the whole muscular system into play. There isn't a great amount of fun in it. Indeed, I should say that pulling a washboard would be a delightful diversion compared to it, but fashion makes slaves of us, and sometimes we prefer exercising ourselves from dumb-bells to a rowing-machine—is the thing now for my lady's chamber.

Won't He Laugh.

A little grandson of Mrs. Andrews was attempting to build a three-legged stool, when he looked up to her and said:

"Grandma, dogs God see every-fing?"

"Yes, my son," she replied, "God is everywhere and sees every act of our lives."

"Well, by jingo," said the boy, "won't he laugh when he sees this stool."—Cecil Prescott's Weekly.

Gossip for the Ladies.

Mrs. Hecder, who was drowned at Erie, was the fifth member of the family to perish that way. They believed they were doomed by a curse uttered by an ancestor in Bavaria.

While a young couple were being married in St. Louis the other day, the church-bell tolled, and a coffin and mourners came up the aisle as they walked down. Outside, in place of their carriage, was the hearse. So, altogether, they had a somber time of it.

A Mormon settlement in Idaho is five miles long, extending from Clifton to Oxford. It is called Stringtown, and the homesteads are so taken up that the residences of the homesteaders are within 300 feet of each other, and the farms are mere strips of land from 250 to 300 feet in width. The land was taken up in this manner to give every settler frontage on the public road.

Stanley, the explorer, introduces all the travelers he meets with in the wilds of Africa to the natives as his sons, in order that they may proceed with safety. Recently an explorer came along with a colored servant, and Stanley was asked how he came to have two sons of different color. "Oh, that is the son of my old wife, not the new one," he replied, as he pointed to the negro.

The sense of convicted murderers in California cannot be hanged until the Supreme court has decided a legal point in the new constitution. They were convicted on "information and belief," instead of on indictments presented by the Grand Jury. The lawyers who drafted the new constitution held that this was in conflict with the Federal constitution, and the United States Circuit court, to which a case was appealed, took this ground.

Slaughter Bassett, of Lexington, Ky., paid $5 for the front doorsill of the old court-house of that place when the building was torn down. It is of stone, and is prized by Bassett because Henry Clay and Aaron Burr stood upon it when the latter asked Clay to defend him, and he pledged his honor that he was innocent of an attempt at a Western conspiracy. Receiving the pledge, Clay appeared in Burr's defense, but afterward declined to speak to him when he found out that Burr had lied.

Mr Talmage is quite right. He says of the Mormon business: "James Buchanan's administration adjourned it to Abraham Lincoln. Lincoln's administration adjourned it to Andrew Johnson, Johnson adjourned it to Gen. Grant, Gen. Grant to Rutherford B. Hayes, Hayes to Garfield, and Gen. Garfield adjourned it to President Arthur. President Arthur, no doubt, would like to adjourn it to himself or another term, and then hand it as a vexatious legacy to his successor."

John Quincy Adams, who is well-known in Socorro county, New Mexico, has sold a third interest in his lake find for $18,000. While prospecting he found his haversack on fire, his prospectors' ghost having foensed the sun's rays upon it. As the haversack contained six pounds of powder, he dropped it and got out of the way. It fell into a crevice, and a large mass of rock was blown up. Adams turned mournfully to gather up what might be left of his effects, and found a vein of silver that the explosion had exposed to view.

One of the newest things under the sun is the "Correspondence University." The Secretary of this novelty is Prof. E. A. Watt, of Cornell University. It is an association of eminent instructors in various institutions of this country and Great Britain, whose object will be to give instruction in all subjects which can be taught by correspondence, not taking the place at all of existing educational institutions, but supplementing them with instruction for persons who from any cause whatever are unable to attend high-schools of learning. The nearest approach to a precedent for such a system is at the Chautauqua plan of Dr. Vincent.

tons, from which he deduced the opinion that the adults of this mysterious race were from six to eight feet in height, and well built in proportion. Among the Doctor's collection was an inferior maxillary bone containing a full set of teeth in a perfect state of preservation. The teeth differed somewhat from those of the Anglo-Saxon race, in that the molar or jaw teeth were bicuspid. The skulls, however, had none of the animal cast in any particular, being round and massive, denoting great brain power.

Money was urgently needed by a church at Blandford, Mass., and a committee, with the pastor at his head, devised a novel scheme. A challenge was sent to a number of young men at Westfield to come out and hunt squirrels all day, and at night eat a supper in the church, the party which had killed the least game to pay $1 each for all the meals served. To the surprise of the church members who had joined in the hunt, the marksmen from Westfield beat them; but the Springfield Republican is authority for the charge that when it came to a count, a number of squirrels that had been shot several days before were fraudulently introduced, so that the church came out financially victors.

The number of wealthy members of Congress increases. Col. Lyman, of Massachusetts, is one of the new members who will entertain elaborately next winter. He inherited great wealth. Washburn, of Minnesota, has rented Don Cameron's house, and will give lavish receptions. Of the new Senators nearly all are rich. Bowen, of Colorado, is a mining lord. Sabin, of Minnesota, went from Connecticut twenty years ago, and is now very rich. Dolph, of Oregon, is a thrifty corporation attorney. Colquitt is one of the best-to-do men in Georgia, and Gibson, of Louisiana, inherited wealth. There are not many poor men left in the Senate. Count out Blair, Frye, Kenna of Florida, and Riddleberger, and the rest are accounted rich.

According to the Washington critic who watched the two brothers at a restaurant, Senator Sherman breaks his bread into small bits and nibbles at the potato. The General takes a half roll in his hand, dashes an ounce of butter over it, and quarters it with his mouth; he halves a potato in its jacket, and, with one movement, adds butter, pepper and salt. In talking the General gangs his voice to the interest in his subject, and can be heard across the room. The Senator is cautious, and looks up adroitly beneath his eyebrow. The Senator eats like a bashful man. The General stabs his meat with his fork as if to say, "You're my meat, and I'll eat you alive." If annoyed, he buckets grits out in a deep bass voice. The Senator only smiles. His smiles are hearty, though, and he enjoys that which amuses him.

The vitality of the German Emperor, says a London journal, is a source of unceasing astonishment and admiration. He is now well on his way to 87 — 13 years older than his great ancestor, "Old Fritz," when that mercurial's tough constitution broke down under the weight of years and the cares of Government—and his life has been one of the most wearing activity. Yet he was on horseback Saturday, despite the weather, for three hours, and was today he was busy all day in discharging various formal functions of royalty. In favor of this marvelous and sustained vigor it needs the Emperor's own words in his touching address to the Fourth army corps to remind the world how close he necessarily is to the end of his extraordinary career. "It was a joy and honor to me," he says, "to see the army corps once more. Probably it is the last time. At my age one makes no plans." Yet the event which the Emperor looks so steadfastly in the face will make the greatest changes, perhaps in the foreign and certainly in the domestic relations of his empire. By no career of our time has the innocuse in the personal element in politics been more clearly illustrated.

The greatest beautifier of a woman is notoriety. The eloped, the abducted, the victim and the victimized of the fair sex all continue to be "remarkably handsome" or "extremely beautiful." It is seldom that one is marked down so: I was "uncommonly pretty."—Boston Herald.

I could not be alone, and, as I feel more at home when I am before the public, I thought it would be better for me to appear in public again. Some people think it is strange that I appear again, and especially upon the stage, but they do not understand how it is with one who has been before the public as long as I have. To remain at home after such an active life, and especially without the General, was too much for me."

...The Chicago Daily News says: Just why the author of the story called the "Bread-Winners" should want to maintain his incognito is not plain, but this is a fancy which quite often takes possession of story-writers. In this case, however, the effort at secrecy is very ineffective, it being at once clear that John Hay is the author as if his name were attached to every chapter. Mr. Hay was the private secretary of President Lincoln, and gained a certain insight into social life which is of service to him in this novel. Later he married the daughter of a great iron manufacturer in Cleveland, and through this connection has become very familiar with the details of the iron trade and the lives of iron-workers, which lie uses to marked advantage in his story. Always more or less interested in politics and drawn in the company of public men, hope and there, his pictures of the local politician are strong, if exaggerated, and he makes this knowledge count with the rest.

...New York Herald: The great tidal-wave caused by the Java earthquake was propagated to the Pacific coast of South America. At Talcahuano, Chili, the ocean rose, Aug. 28, two hours after high-water mark, and the day after earthquakes were felt in San Salvador, Colorado and Ecuador. Alarming detonations about the same time were heard in all the towns of the Bogota plateau, while at Manaiti, Ecuador, troops were turned out to meet the supposed enemy. This record will enable seismologists to ascertain the extent of the disturbance caused by the Java earthquake. Almost simultaneously with the Andean earth...quake and the Chilian tidal-wave the ocean rose on the California coast, as will be seen by Pout Davidson, Aug. 29, in the West Indies an extraordinary tide rose in the harbor of St. Thomas, at 7:30 p. m., Aug. 27. As the tides at St. Thomas seldom go above twelve inches, and that of Aug. 27 rose three and one-half feet, and was followed on the 30th by a heavy earthquake shock, there can be but little doubt that this disturbance was the result of the terrible commotion in the Sunda straits. If to the same agency be attributed the destructive tidal-wave which visited our Atlantic coast, Aug. 28 and 29, it would seem that the agitation extended to all the oceanic area around the globe, forty degrees on either side of the equator.

What Anne Adopted.

"Mother, can't we adopt a baby?"

Mrs. Walters looked up in astonishment at the question. Little five-year-old Anne stood by her, her blue eyes dancing, her brown hair blown about her rosy cheeks by the wind.

As there was no small boy in frocks, nearly two years younger than Anne, and a pair of 6 months twins in the cradle, the question did seem needless.

"Adopt a baby! Why, my dear, people only do that when God has not given them one," said her mother. "I could not possibly take care of another baby."

"But I could, mamma. I'd just do everything. Mary Bowers's mother has adopted one, and Mary says it is the cunningest little thing."

"But we don't need it, for we have more than other people—two dear little babies," said her mother, kindly, seeing how much in earnest she was.

"Well, I know that, but can't we adopt something?" asked the child, anxiously.

"Oh, yes; find some poor little motherless kitten—a yellow one would be best, 'cause yellow kittens are mostly all drowned." This was Bob's advice. Bob was 9 years old, and a great tease.

"Don't want that. I can get heaps of cats without adopting them," said the child.

"Well, a hen or a goose hen; go to being something of a goose yourself, you will know what to do with it."

"But I want something that thinks," said Anne, after a moment's thought.

"That's not a thinking thing the Lowells have got," said Bob, proud in the midst of his knowledge. "It looks like a roll of cotton wool dressed up and laid in a crib."

"But it isn't, it can just scream," said Anne, earnestly.

"Then I'll buy you a dear little pig, that can squeal beautifully," said Bob.

"Take him stop, mamma," cried Anne, her eyes full of tears. "He's teasing me, and I do want to adopt something."

"Adopt me," said Bob. "I'd make you a nice big son."

"I don't want you, I've got you already," said Annie.

"Why, my dear, whom could you adopt?" asked her mother, kindly. "You already have a father, a mother, sisters and brothers, uncles and aunts——"

"Oh, I know now!" cried Anne. "We haven't my grandmother: Why can't we adopt one of them?"

"Well, you might, if we could find a stray old lady wandering about and looking for some one to adopt her," said her mother, laughing, while Bob fairly danced with fun at the idea.

"It's not such a bad thought," said Anne's mother, when she had got over laughing. "Perhaps Aunt Betsy will consent to be adopted for a few months.

"Splendid!" ejaculated Anne. "Can't we go for her right away? It will be so nice to have a grandmother in the house."

"So it will, and perhaps papa will drive over to Lexington to-morrow and see what she thinks about it," her mother replied.

Aunt Betsy was the children's greatuncle, and as Annie expressed it, plenty old enough to be a grandmother. She lived with a stepdaughter, and her son had borrowed what little money she had, on interest.

The son's wife was not an agreeable woman, and considered her mother-in-law a great burden. There was one other young people called wild and a "good-for-naught," a wanderer in California.

Anne's mother knew that her dear old aunt was unhappy, and had long been thinking of asking her to the house for a visit.

Annie's idea of adopting a grandmother gave rise to other thoughts, and her mother resolved to offer the old lady a home. No objection was made to the plan; her son made his mind easy about the money he owed, by paying the interest, and troubling it need be no further.

It was indeed delightful to feel that she had a home where everybody was kind and attentive, a pleasant room with her books, her knitting-work, her stocking-basket close to her hand, while flowers and vines and pictures made the walls beautiful. And then to feel that she was the adopted grandmother of a fine, lovable, laughing little child.

Everybody but Anne called her Aunt Betsy; to Anne alone she was "grandmamma," and the old lady enjoyed the distinction.

Anne took her under her own special protection—she gathered flowers for her, threaded her needle, took her hand as they went to church, and sat close by her in the pew, taking pains to let everybody know that she was her adopted grandmother, feeling rather exultant over the fact that she herself had provided this luxury for the family.

Aunt Betsy reaped her fondness with interest. She dressed dolls, and cut whole, though rather hideous, families out of paper. She had bright little stockings and mittens, and kept a store of sugar-plums, to which Anne had free access.

Her grandaughter's little rocking-chair sat on the other side of the fire place, so close was the companionship that Bob called them "our grandmothers."

It was not long before the sun, who had borrowed her money, failed. But Anne, to whom the loss seemed over soons, declared that she would make haste and grow up, so that she might keep school and take care of grandma.

But long before she was old enough to take such a burden upon herself, her father died, and there was some feat that the adopted grandmother would soon be homeless.

But God had seen the good deed done, and it happened that Aunt Betsy in this trial time, was enabled to be the good genius of the stricken family.

Every few years the poor wanderer away in California, who was sometimes rich and sometimes poor, would wake up to a sense of his neglected duty, and send his mother considerable sums of money.

These she had been enabled to save, and on the day after the funeral astonished the grief-stricken widow by pouring her hoard into her lap, amounting to more than $500.

"You have been kind to me in my sore heartiness," she said, her sweet old face as radiant as that of an angel, "now it pleases the Heavenly Father that I can help you in your trouble." But this was not all.

One day, when the money was nearly gone, another letter came, stating that Aunt Betsy's son had put something of value in claim, and that as soon as he got rich enough he was coming home to take care of her and of the little girl who had adopted her.

Annie laughed over the letter. "He thinks me a little girl," she said, "and I am almost 15; I guess he won't want to adopt me when he sees me."

"I don't know about that," said Aunt Betsy, with a smile and a cunning little nod toward Annie's mother.

Annie looked puzzled, but she could not think about such things, and so she went on with her play, amounting to more than $500.

CHARLEVOIX, MICHIGAN.

Ben. Butler was defeated in Massachusetts, but he has a mighty following in that state, and will have in the nation if he allows himself to become a third party candidate for the presidency next year, as seems probable from his recent utterances. The Chicago Herald says that in a recent interview, "in response to an inquiry if he should retire from politics; he is reported to have said: 'No, sir; so long as there are labor interests to be conserved and anti-monopoly principles to be maintained, I shall continue the contest on those issues.' Some time ago Butler remarked on the possibility of a third party and a third candidate next year. This would look as if he has an idea that the new party is forming and looking to him as its Moses. Ben may be heard from next summer as a disturbing factor," and may be the means of giving a republican victory next fall.

There is at least one republican official in Michigan who deserves a monument for honesty and justice. John D. Shull, of Lansing, was elected alderman of the second ward of that city, and after serving some time a change in business affairs made it necessary for him to resign, and a special election was held to fill vacancy. At the close of the last quarter an order was drawn on the treasury in his favor for something over $30 for salary. Mr. Shull returned it to the council requesting that it be used toward defraying the expenses of the election, and stating also that his resignation had not only caused the extra expense to the city, but that he had not been a regular attendant at the meetings of the council for that quarter, and had not therefore fairly earned the salary. Such action is not common among public officials,—most of them would put it down in their pockets, and wish the sum was larger.

Butler did not "get there," but his performance in Massachusetts, take it all in all, was a more creditable piece of political work than any done by the democrats elsewhere. He has nothing to blame himself for in the way of blundering, which is the case with the democratic managers in other states which balloted on Tuesday. He made the best campaign in the country, got to the polls more of his available votes, and kept the party solider and more enthusiastic than any one of the blundering managers of democracy elsewhere. He is perfectly justified in saying, as he does in a dispatch to the Pittsburg Gazette, "When a man has increased the democratic vote from 112,000 to 152,000 in three years, is there any need for an answer to your question what my program will be." He would rather have his big vote of 152,000 than to be elected by a vote of 131,000 as he was last year. There was no reserve in the battle of Tuesday. All the forces on both sides were in the field, and, as Butler says, he has had all the enemy out "and measured them." They outnumber him only a little over six per cent. If he can gain 5,000 of them in the coming year he can carry the state next November. He will not be very likely to do that, but, if he makes as vigorous a campaign in 1884 as in 1883, he will give the republicans of Massachusetts all they can possibly do at home to defeat him. They cannot afford to make a single mistake. He will not be a candidate for president, but he will run for governor again next year, and still continue to be a thorn in the side of Beacon Hill, and a night mare to George Frisbie Hoar.—Evening News.

Bogolo's Passon.

The Detroit Post and Tribune, the Lowell Journal and other republican papers have lately been making a great racket over passes alleged to have been issued to Governor Begole on account of his office. The Detroit Evening Journal of Thursday prints the following interview with the governor on the subject:

The Journal reporter asked the governor if he had read the article published by the Post and Tribune of Sunday last, which charged him with riding on free passes.

"Yes, I have looked it over!"

"Does it do you justice?"

"Hardly, but I don't care to say much about it, except that I have never ridden a single mile on a pass when on official business."

"You see I am largely interested in the lumber business, and we do some $30,000 worth of shipping a year over the F. & P. M. R. R. There is no particular agreement to do so, but the company gives me, as they do other large shippers, a book of passes—the "little red book" spoken of—and it is this matter my letters printed in the Post and Tribune refer to.

"I suppose I do nearly 30,000 miles of travel in a year in connection with my business, and when I am doing such traveling I use those 'red book' passes. I think I have less than 100 miles of my last book left now. I have never talked with but one railroad man in regard to passes, and that was Dr. Potter of Saginaw, to whom my letters were addressed. As a general thing I don't care to take much notice of partisan attacks, but since so much has been said about the matter, I have determined to make a clear statement of the whole thing. I spoke to Mr. Stephenson about it before I left home, and it is already partly prepared. Until that is published I dont care to say anything about the matter further than that I have never traveled a mile on a railroad pass when on official business as governor."

Crop Report.

The Michigan crop report for November, published by the secretary of state, includes returns from six hundred and five townships, three hundred and sixty-four of which are in the southern four tiers of counties. In these counties the wheat crop for 1883 weighs ninety-four per cent of full weight, or somewhat less that 56¾ pounds per measured bushel. The acreage seeded to wheat this fall if 91 per cent of the acreage seeded in 1882, and compared with the vitality and growth of average years, the condition is 88 per cent.

Compared with 1882 there is a decrease of 34 per cent in the area of clover seed harvested, and 38 per cent in yield per acre.

The potato crop is less than four-fifths as large as in 1882.

The condition of cattle and sheep is slightly below the condition one year ago.

Owing to the dry weather at seed-time, wheat was generally sown late, and the top is small and the ground only partially covered, although the plant seems healthy. Wheat is going into winter in poor condition.

At the time reports were made only a small portion of clover seed was hulled.

Wheat reported marketed by farmers at two hundred and fifty-seven elevators and mills during the year is 1,289,763 bushels. The total number of bushels reported marketed in August, September and October is 3,810,570.

Charming Hospitality of the Dutch Boers.

When a traveler arrives at a habitation, he alights from his horse, enters the house, shakes hands with all the men, kisses the women and sits down without further ceremony. When the table is spread, he takes his place among the family without waiting for an invitation: this is never given, on the supposition that a traveler, in a country so thinly inhabited, must always have an appetite for something. Accordingly, "What will you make use of?" is generally the first question. If there be a bed in the house, it is given to a stranger. If none, which is frequently the case among the grazers of Graaf Reynet, he must take his chance for a form, or bench, or a heap of sheep-skins, among the rest of the family. In the morning, after a solid breakfast, he takes his sopie, or glass of brandy, orders his horse, or Hottentot, to saddle the horses, again shakes hands with the men and kisses the women, wishes them health, and they wish him a good journey. In this manner a traveler might pass through the whole country.

By Numbers.

The contractors on one of the railroads down East, finding it impossible to keep track of the Italian laborers by their unpronounceable names, fell upon the plan of numbering them. The number of each is painted in plain figures on the seat of his pantaloons. Before beginning work in the morning, at noon and again at night the men are formed in line, and the foreman passes in the rear of them and takes down each number, in order to ascertain who is present, as well as who is absent. The plan is beneficial in two ways—the men are easily recognized, and they are also kept from sitting down too much for fear of rubbing out the figures.

A Famous Dueling Ground.

The Weehawken ground is hard to identify now; a monument put there a few months after Hamilton's fall caused so many other duels by the spirit of competition it inspired in boys and fools that the Jersey people broke it down in 1820, though the slab upon it, which in about three feet by two and a half, remains in possession of a neighboring family. Oliver H. Perry fought a duel on or about the same spot with Marine Capt. Heath in 1818. Decatur was Perry's second; the following year he fell on the dueling ground of Bladensburg. Perry threw away his fire. Alexander Hamilton's son fell on this spot two years before his father, in a duel where he was, if possible, more the aggressor than his father; young Hamilton and Gen. Hamilton were shot in nearly the same position of the body, on the side just above the hip. Aaron Burr had fought on the same ground, four years before he killed Hamilton, with the latter's brother-in-law, John B. Church, for slandering him; Church's bullet went through Burr's coat. De Witt Clinton fought John Swartwout on or about the same dueling ground the year before Hamilton was killed, and shot Swartwout, who was Burr's strongest henchman, twice in the leg, and even then Swartwout wanted another shot, and Clinton had literally to leave the field without completing the satisfaction demanded. The Swartwouts were frequently at Weehawken as principals or duelists. Isaac Gouverneur was killed in 1815 by the Hamilton monument. In 1816 a grocer and a British officer fought a duel there in sight of a perfect circus of boats on the river and spectators on the rocks, and the grocer was shot dead; the grocer's brother, a few years afterward, killed the Captain's brother. An editor named Graham was killed on the same spot in 1827 on account of a dispute at the card table. Several other persons were fatally or dangerously wounded at Weehawken.—New York Tribune.

Children's Compositions.

The latest revelations of infant genius brought forth in the composition class are found in the small boy's description of African descent, who, on being required to write a slate "pencil-talk" on "Winter Sports," brought forth: "I love see the Sports walkin' down Baltimore street every pleasant day in winter." A young candidate for Congress, of the surname of Pace, down in Virginia, tried his hand at the subject given to the higher class—"Enterprise," and read aloud the following: "Enterprise is a good thing. Columbus enterprised America. If Columbus hadn't done it we should be nowhere for nobody knew anything about America but the Indians, and they wouldn't tell."—Crete (Neb.) Literary Notes.
